Bankruptcy possible

Area apartments may be sold as condominiums

By SHEILA LOVELY

Apartments housing a total of more than 2,000 residents in Amherst, many UMass students, may become condominiums later this year because the real estate firm which owns them has filed a bankruptcy claim.

The affected apartments are the 1,200 unit Brittany Manor Apartments in South Amherst, and the 600-unit Mt. Sugarloaf Apartments in North Amherst.

Both are managed by Hancock Mgmt,. Corp., of Longwood Towers, Chapel St., Brookline. But the actual real estate is owned by one of three firms which have been selling "limited partnerships" statewide to over 7,000 shareholders.

The three firms are Colonial Realty, Tri-Colonial Realty and New Colonial Realty Investments. It was not immediately know which firm actually owns the land and buildings in Amherst, although the three are all under two principal owners, Robert Waldman and David Dick.

The complex reorganization has no effect on complex tenants, at least for the moment according to UMass Legal Services Office atty. Bill Dorsch.

The federal court ruling by Judge W. Arthur Garrity Sept. 30 ordered the 6,000 tenants at properties in Connecticut and Massachusetts to continue payments in full to Hancock Mgmt.

Dorsch said tenants should mail checks "which they have a receipt" of to Hancock in Brookline. "They should pay the full amount unless they have some rent witholding problem -- then they should see us," Dorsch said.

The student attorney said November rent payments will be determined by a subsequent court ruling, but most likely they will have to be made to one of three court-appointed receivers.

Student tenants would be fourth on the list of creditors to receive payment if the restructuring includes a bankrupt claim, according to Jim Starr, a paralegal assistant in the Legal Services Office.

Starr said attorneys and bankruptcy administrators, the state and banks and contractors are legally entitled to reclaim a percentage of their investment should the three real estate firms fold up.

About fifteen Brittany Manor tenants have complained to the LSO that their security deposits have been withheld by Hancock

Calling for students to "organize" and "fight for the rights of all people," socialist advocate, Angela Davis addressed a crowd of 1500 people who jammed into a heated Student Union Ballroom last night.

Sponsored by The Distinguished Visitors Program and the New American movement, Ms. Davis' speech entitled "What Is Socialism", marked the beginning of a three day symposium on "Socialism in America".

"Sometimes you can talk so much, you forget that there is a reality out there....then words like socialism, capitalism and Democracy don't mean a damn thing!" Ms. Davis told the audience.

"You must dedicate yourselves to opposing oppression of all people." Davis continued to relate how the socialist "struggle" was the only "real hope" to alleviate such oppression.

"The history of this country has been used by the working class; not only to facilitate exploitation; racism is built into the capitalist system," she said.

"We need a real movement. A movement where white people must understand that they must stand with and behind Black workers. Beating racism is a precondition for socialism in this country."

Angela Davis, who used to be a member of the Philosophy Department at UCLA, gave an energetic "lecture" of the merits of socialism versus the destructive "monopolistic capitalism", of the "ruling class families like the Rockefellers and DuPonts".

"Socialism is related organically with the government and the people who make its history." Davis went on to tell the audience that if the United States was a socialist country it would nationalize big companies like General Motors, and that ony Socialism could save this country from the devisivness, waste, and inflation that capitalism has brought to this country.

"Socialism is not just a set of theories that were developed by Marx and Lenin, socialism is something that is very real, very concrete. Socialism is free education, it is not having to pay $4,000 a year just because you want to learn. Socialism is not having to worry about how I'M going to pay the doctor, before you go to the hospital. Socialism is free child care. Not only universal child care, but free child care, because under socialism the society itself feels responsible for the development of human beings there, and the care of children there. It is societies, it is all of our responsibility to see that our children are able to grow up in a clean and healthy environment. That's what socialism is all about. Socialism is no unemployment! You talk about the inflationary spiral here in this country. There's not only inflation here, but there's inflation in West Germany, Italy, France, and in Switzerland," she said.

Davis, who has travelled extensively throughout the world and visited many of the socialist nations continued to express the merits of such nations, particularly the Soviet Union and Cuba.

"In Cuba they have these mansions where the rich used to live. After the revolution when the

Angela Davis: An educational exchange

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Angela Davis's exchange of historical and current events pertaining to social change and global revolution was an educational reiteration of oppressed people's existing conditions. She reviewed popular ideologies and offered solutions that can be utilized by organized groups in terms of fertilizing the growth of a progressive, political world consciousness.

Ms. Davis said the purpose of her visit was to convince sisters and brothers to get involved in the struggle. She placed emphasis on the role of student bodies as agents of social changes, urging that students endorse and maintain the tradition of struggle.

"Students," she said, "aren't struggling the way that they should be. They have to keep the fires of struggle burning. Their duty is to interpret the struggle, to break down the psychological terminology of the 'system', in order to organize with the masses.

Profile

On the question of racism, Ms. Davis said, "white workers must align themselves with black workers to create a movement for socialism." "It is possible," she said, "to eliminate many forms of racism but whites have to become aware of how they themselves are affected by racism." She stressed the necessity of a third political party stemming from the masses, affiliated with radical parties and not monopoly inclined.

In reply to a question on the national decline of Black Studies, as a result of a lack of student input, and the attitudes of the "petty Bourgeoise" intellectuals who do not teach courses relevant to a global struggle, Ms. Davis said, "it is the duty of the students to demand of the Black professors that they offer courses which answer to their needs," she emphasized that it is indeed true that there is a national decline of Black Studies.

Late admissions cause delay in aid for third world students

By LUIS MEDINA
Staff Reporter

Some students in the Bicultural Collegiate Program did not fill out their financial aid papers until yesterday due to their late admissions, according to Domingo de Jesus of the Financial Aid Office (FAO).

In a meeting in the Campus Center, de Jesus explained in Spanish to a group of thirty students how their forms should be filled out.

Eighteen other students, who had been accepted by the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS), had their financial papers ready before they were accepted to the program, de Jesus said. He explained that they had done so with the aid of Carl Brown, also of FAO.

The financial aid forms were legalized by Jerry Scanlon, a public notary from FAO. He said the office employs three public notaries for such purposes and that there are forty others on campus to aid students free of charge.

Scanlon said that the students had received letters sometime in the school year, describing the extent of their aid. He said the aid came as scholarships, grants, work-study, educational loans, and combinations of the four.

Freshmen, Scanlon explained, receive more aid than upperclassmen, because it is felt that they need more time to study.

According to de Jesus, all of the applications for financial aid are sent to Berkeley, California, where they are computerized and recommendations are sent back.

Benjamin Rodriguez, director of the Bicultural Collegiate Program, said that he is trying to get the students in the program familiar with different aspects of the academic situation, such as financial aid, curriculum, community involvement, and so forth.

Marching band

Spirit behind football

By CATHERINE KOZELL
Staff Reporter

What would a football game be like without a band? A day without sunshine? Nancy Ottman, a drill instructor for the UMass band commented "No spirit, there wouldn't be any crowd enthusiasm"

The 180 members put in 53 hours of rehearsal prior to last week's Dartmouth game.

"We're awfully proud of their commitment to what they're doing ... in an internally commited way, that is." said Dr. John Jenkins, director of bands for the University.

Thirty-five of those rehearsal hours were spent exclusively at a camp developing student leadership, training Freshman (of which there are 93 this year), and preparing for games. This took place before classes began in September.

Now, they spend an average of one and 15 minutes a day practicing. "As the season goes along, the group gains ability and learns rapidly." Jenkins said Wednesday.

"We're really proud of the leadership and spirit of the band ... even more than that." said Jenkins, who is aided by Joseph Duchi, assistant director of bands.

For Saturday's game, a "50's and 60's skit" somewhat similar to the one at the Dartmouth game will be used, Jenkins said. Featured will be: an Elvis Presley medley, a rock medley, and "Chantilly Lace". Also, by "internal" request, an added attraction will be the "Boogie - Woogie Bugler Boy".

Speaking of last weeks game, Jenkins said "I was pleased to see the team applauding at the half-time show. It seems there is mutual respect developing between the team and the band."

On game days, the staff has an average 14 hour day. They have to be up by 5 a.m. to be at the school by 6 a.m.

According to Jenkins, next week there is an extra special skit planned. It will feature the "world's largest stereophonic German Band". The effect will be that of a "high speaker" and a '"low speaker" at either end of the field, the "speakers" being composed of groups of high and low-toned instruments.

Collins and Atkins debate at Pierpont

By FRAN BROCK
Staff Reporter

Democratic State Representative James Collins of Amherst and Republican candidate, William Atkins also of Amherst held their first open debate last night before some 30 students in Pierpont House.

"I'm a liberal-conservative," said Atkins, and spoke in favor of new ideas and new methods but he added that ideas must be looked at with caution.

Collins said "Government can be efficient and progressive" and government can be honest. He wants to continue working on tax reform bills and other such activities so Massachusetts "can have a government to be proud of, a government that is the best in the nation."

On most issues the candidates agreed. Both favored Chapter 766, an equal education opportunity proposal which was passed but not yet in effect.

Atkins said that Amherst has already implemented the bill and although it cost the tax payers money, he said "the best industry we've got is education."

Collins said he supported the bill and felt it would be fully funded "if for no other reason than it was highly controversial issue and Speaker Barkley's name was on it."

Atkins said he was frustrated with the way the State was handling property tax issues. He felt he could not only represent the students, but the farmers "who don't have much representation in Boston now."

Collins said he favored a graduated progressive income tax reform bill. He would like to see the 25 taxes in efect re-vamped so as to be based on "ability to pay" and then he wanted the property tax frozen so it would not be used for other budgets.

Both candidates agreed that other methods of energy should be investigated before committing State money to nuclear power plants.

Technical assistant Larry Holmes consults with patrolman John Schmitter in the new communications room in Dickinson Hall.

Holmes stimulates renovations in UMass public safety dept.

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

Since their move in January to Dickinson Hall, the Department of Public Safety has undergone numerous renovations. Larry Holmes, technical assistant and patrolman for the department, has been responsible for many of them.

Holmes, who has been with the force for five years, said, "I feel there are easier ways to do things and these ways should be utilized."

Holmes spent this past summer learning computer programming at the Graduate Research Center on campus.

Among the improvements Holmes is responsible for is the remolding of the new communications room. "The main function of this room is to combine all the equipment in one area", Holmes said.

The room contains a Status Board, designed by Holmes, which shows the location, by a series of different colored lights, of all the UMass patrol units.

"Before this board was installed, it was impossible to locate all our units simultaneously," he said.

The communications room also contains a computer terminal that connects to the Whitmore computer. "This enables us to get accurate and quick information on any student at the University," said Holmes. The room also contained a nation-wide teletype machine. Eventually, the room will be enclosed with sound proofing.

In addition to the Status Board, Holmes is responsible for compiling a desk reference manual, containing maps of areas of the campus, telephone numbers, and various other information.

Holmes also designed a wall size map of the campus and surrounding areas, (ie off-campus apartment complexes). The map is number and color schemed for quick and accurate location.

"It used to be impossible to explain to an officer the location of an apartment. This becomes really serious when time is an important factor," Holmes said.

Other print-outs compiled by Holmes contain car information of registered and unregistered vehicles on campus, and records of students dating back two years prior to the current freshman class. A special booklet identifying bicycles on campus, in six different categories, makes it easier to locate a stolen bike.

Another service provided by Holmes and his associates, is the surveying of buildings on campus for security renovations. Holmes cited the Infirmary as an example.

"We check out the building and suggests more locks or bolts on the doors. It's not much money. I think more buildings should take advantage of it," he said.

In his office, Holmes also has a poster, designed by himself, relating what happens when someone gets a parking ticket.

"I was beginning to feel like a tape recording every time someone asked me what happens when you get a ticket. Now they can just look at the chart," Holmes said.

Holmes, along with others in the department, has also been promoting a crime prevention program. There are signs posted in the dorms and offices on campus, stressing the idea to "lock up when you leave".

Fritsch cites language lab overcrowding

By SHEILA LOVELY
Staff Reporter

"I feel frustrated, and my feelings are shared by every staff member of the Language Lab. It is an awkward feeling to see eight, 12, or 15 students standing there and you can't help them." said Hans J. Fritsch, director of the language laboratories. The overcrowded situation is faced by approximately 1,000 UMass students who utilize the Language Labs. There are only 20 listening booths in each of 3 Language Labs in Bartlett.

According to Fritsch, the overcrowdedness has resulted in lines of students waiting outside of Language Lab C in Bartlett Hall since the beginning of the semester.

The concept of Open Library Usage (OLU) has augumented greatly in the past two years, hence increasing student usage of the labs. OLU, an alternative to the more rigid timetable of the scheduled labs, allows a student to use the lab at any time he wishes during the hours the Language Labs are in operation, Fritsch said.

Due to a lack of funds in the Language Laboratories Division, the 40 booths in Labs A and B cannot be converted into OLU booths. However, six are being transformed which will bring the total number of OLU booths in Bartlett Hall to 26.

In addition to this, evening hours at the lab are being held. to help alleviate the problems of overcrowding. The hours are from 7 to 10 p.m. Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights.

Ped Xing law to be strictly enforcedhere

"Ped Xing" -- a sign becoming more familiar in the Amherst area -- is a reminder that cars must stop when a pedestrian is in a crosswalk.

Chapter 89 Section 11 of the Massachusetts law states, "It is a violation if an operational or motor vehicle does not stop while a pedestrian is in a crosswalk."

At UMass, University police are under orders by Capt. Robert G. Joyce to "strictly enforce the law." The result of being stopped for the violation is court action, he says.

"Selective enforcement will occur on different areas of the campus as a method of preventing future violations."

While encouraging drivers to slow down as they approach crosswalks, Capt. Joyce urges pedestrians to cross only at walks. Bus drivers have been asked to make only authorized stops.

Pointing to two areas of major concern as No. Pleasant St. and Massachusetts Ave., Joyce encourages students to use the Southwest tunnel to by-pass traffic.

"If a driver hits a pedestrian at a crosswalk, he would be arrested for operating to endanger and failure to stop for pedestrians. The penalty is the loss of license for a year."

Five college bus schedules available at campus center

By HUGH OWN
Staff Reporter

Revised Five College bus schedules have been printed and are available at the Campus Center information booth, Bob Soule, Transportation chairperson, said Wednesday.

The Five College Student Coordinating Board met in Rooms 805-9 in the Campus Center.

Brenda Goodman, vice-chairperson of the five college board, told the board she hoped to implement the Residential Exchange program by the spring semester of 1975.

Most of the changes in the bus schedule affect Smith College, according to Soule. These changes were made, he said, to provide more frequent bus service between the five colleges.

Although overcrowding still exists on some buses, Soule said "There will be no doubling of buses because there is no money to do it."

Revised bus schedules are posted at the Campus Center and Southwest bulletin boards.

The Residential Exchange program between the five colleges allows students to pay tuition and officially be enrolled at one college while living and taking courses at another in the five college area.

"I don't know what kind of course requirements there will be, or if there will be bed space for participating students," said Goodman, who is in charge of the Residential Exchange program. "But as far as I know it is still going for the second semester." A random survey taken among students of the Five Colleges reveals that most students are in favor of the program. This survey, utilizing questionaires made up by the five college board, will be used to compile information needed for the presentation of the exchange program to the Deans of Students of the Five Colleges.

Academic Committee chairperson Ellie Skeele said the Five College course catologues have been changed so that students will have greater flexibility in selecting Five College courses.

The new catologues will list the courses from the Five Colleges under individual department headings, along with a description of the course.

"This way," Skeele said, "students can decide which course will best satisfy their particular needs."

Moore named unindicted co-conspirator

Nixon files motion to quash trial subpoenas

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former President Richard M. Nixon formally asked yesterday to be excused from testifying in the Watergate cover-up trial, presumably because of his phlebitis attack.

Meanwhile, a source said another of his former aides, Richard A. Moore, had been named an unindicted co-conspirator because of new evidence in the White House tapes.

Former Assistant Attorney General Herbert J. Miller Jr., Nixon's lawyer, filed sealed motions to squash both prosecution and defense subpoenas for Nixon's testimony, presumably for reasons of health.

The motions were delivered to the closely guarded chambers where Judge John J. Sirica was interviewing prospective jurors for the trial of five former Nixon aides.

Sirica announced minutes later that the documents "will be filed under seal until the court has had an opportunity to review them thoroughly," and also announced that the process of questioning jurors in closed court would be speeded up.

Nixon has been hospitalized for more than a week with phlebitis, a vein inflamation, which has caused potentially dangerous blood clots in the former President's right lung and left leg.

His doctor, Dr. John Lungren of Long Beach, has said he will be discharged from the hospital later this week but would be unable to travel for at least one month and possibly as long as three months.

After spending most of the morning talking to only two potential jurors, Sirica decided to interview the veniremen 12 at a time instead of individually. Sor far yesterday, Sirica excused three prospective jurors, two for cause and one for health reasons.

Moore, 60, a benign and fatherly-looking figure who testified haltingly during the 1973 Senate Watergate hearings last summer, was Nixon's special counsel. But he had stayed on at the White House until his resignation Wednesday.

Italian Premier resigns post, but Leone asks him to remain

ROME (UPI) — Premier Mariano Rumor yesterday handed in his resignation to President Giovanni Leone, but Leone asked him to continue in office to help the country get itself out of its current economic and political difficulties.

Rumor went directly to Leone after a 10-minute cabinet meeting at which he and his seven month old Christian Democrat-Socialist coalition decided to resign. A communique issued after the cabinet meeting said Premier Mariano Rumor "felt it necessary to hand in the resignation of the cabinet to President Giovanni Leone and the Council of Ministers agreed."

Earlier yesterday the Socialist party told Rumor the fall of the government was "inevitable" because of economic and unemployment troubles.

A statement issued after Rumor's meeting with Leone said the premier "handed his resignation and the resignations of his fellow cabinet ministers to President Leone. The President reserved his decision and implored Rumor to remain in office with his colleagues to clear up current affairs."

Leone said he would start consulations Monday on what course to take.

It was the second time in four months that Rumor submitted his resignation and Leone urged him to remain.

"In view of the situation, in our opinion a government crisis is inevitable," Socialist party secretary Francesco De Martino told newsmen after a one-hour meeting with Rumor before he resigned.

De Martino said chances of forming a new government would depend on the Christian Democrats' response to his demands for expanded credit to put the economy back on its feet and continue unemployment.

A number of Christian Democrats favor tight credit, a virtual wage freeze and other austerity measures as a way out of Italy's troubles.

Dominican guerrillas drop ransom demand

SANTO DOMINGO, (UPI) — Guerrilla leader Radhames Mendez Vargas, shouting from a window "it's time to end this business," yesterday dropped his demand for a $1 million ransom for seven hostages and offered to trim the list of political prisoners he wanted exchanged.

"As revolutionaries we respect the human being, and there is no threat at present against the physical integrity of the hostages," he said.

The ransom concessions were the first ones by the pro-Castro Jan. 12 National Liberation Movement since it occupied the consulate last Friday and asked for release of three-dozen political prisoners and $1 million.

The group set four different deadlines for executing the hostages — including American diplomat Barbara Hutchison — at two-hour intervals but let each pass.

The government maintained silence on the concessions.

President Joaquin Balaguer has offered the guerrillas, believed to number only six, nothing more than safe conducts for leaving Santo Domingo in return for releasing the captives unharmed.

Among the hostages are Miss Hutchison, U.S. embassy public affairs officer; Venezuelan consul Jesus Gregorio and vice consul Waldemar Alvarado; Spanish priest Santiago Fuentes, and three Dominican employes of the consulate.

Nixon leaves hospital today

LONG BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — Former President Nixon will be released from Long Beach Memorial Hospital today barring any last minute complications, ending an 11-day confinement for treatment of a painful phlebitis condition.

In a medical bulletin Thursday, Dr. John Lungren was still not able to pinpoint the cause of Nixon's blood clot, but already has ruled out cancer.

Comparable to 1970 Peruvian quake

Violent earthquake rocks central Peru

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A violent earthquake struck central Peru yesterday causing extensive damage to many buildings including three famous centuries-old churches.

Three persons were reported killed and 38 injured in the city of Canete 120 miles from Lima, but there was no immediate official casualty toll.

In Lima, the cupola of La Merced Church cracked and shifted from its base on the roof; the main altar of San Agustin Church, said to be one of the finest in the city, tumbled; and the walls were damaged at the Prado Church. Each church is more than 300 years old.

Many Peruvians fled their homes in panic, and streets were flooded from broken water and sewer mains or littered with cracked glass and masonry.

The quake began at 9:21 a.m. — 10:21 a.m. EDT — and lasted almost two minutes. A string of aftershocks followed, the strongest a sharp, brief quake almost an hour later.

The main quake was felt in cities 120 miles around Lima, but Canete seemed to have borne the brunt of it.

Radio Cruz del Sur, broadcasting from a province near Lima, said almost half the houses in Canete were unsafe because of cracked walls and water seepage. Canete has a population of about 5,000.

Motorists panicked and fled the downtown Lima area. Several cars collided, but first reports indicated none of the crashes was serious.

The U.S. Geological Survey in Washington said the quake hit 7.7 on the Richter Scale. The most devasting quake ever recorded in South America hit Peru in 1970 and killed an estimated 20,000 persons. Another 50,000 persons were listed as missing. That quake measured 7.8 on the Richter Scale.

Japanese hold whale memorial service

TOKYO (AP) - To a dirge of bamboo flutes and gongs a Japanese fishing company held a memorial service yesterday for the 1,861 whales it caught during the 1973-74 Antarctic whaling season.

A short, elderly priest in split-toed white slippers and gold silken vestments prayed for the repose of the whales' souls.

The killing of whales is a subject of international controversy. Japan and the Soviet Union, the two remaining large-scale whaling nations, have been accused by conservationists of bringing the world's biggest mammal to the brink of extinction.

The 320 invited guests for yesterday's ceremony at Zojoji temple stood facing a statue of Buddha, bowed solemnly, dropped a pinch of incense into a smoldering wick and clasped their hands in prayer.

Later Kota Hoketsu, the president of Kyokuyo Co., Japan's second largest whaling firm and sponsor of the "hojoe" or memorial service, freed dozens of pigeons in symbolic release of the souls of the whales and other sea life caught by the company.

Hoketsu, a former diplomat, said this is the 17th such service held by the company since 1957. In this way, he said, he and his employes express respect for the whales they catch and market. He called whaling "a necessary evil" to insure an important source of food for the protein-poor Japanese people.

Japan and the Soviet Union are responsible for 85 per cent of the world whale catch each year. But Japan has been considered the major target by conservationists because it leads the opposition to an American-propsed 10-year ban on whaling.

Turkey aid restored

WASHINGTON (UPI) - A House-Senate conference committee yesterday removed a ban on U.S. military aid to Turkey from legislation President Ford has threatened to veto.

The cnferees approved, 6 to 1, a compromise "continuing resolution" which contained milder language acceptable to Ford. It would allow arms aid to Turkey if the President reported to Congress that the Turks were making "good faith" efforts to settle the dispute with Greece over Cyprus.

Oil slick seeped up

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (UPI) - A spokesman said the U.S. Coast Guard is satisfied a 20-mile long oil slick that appeared on beaches near here Wednesday was from a natural seepage.

The oil nodules, pea-sized balls of crude oil, first showed up along a 12-mile stretch of Santa Barbara and Ventura County beaches Wednesday night.

The spokesman said oil companies with offshore drilling platforms in the Santa Barbara channel had been asked to check their rigs for seepage just to be sure.

Airlines may merge

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) - Trans World Airlines revealed yesterday it has started talks with Pan American Airways concerning a possible merger.

In a letter circulated in the airline's internal publication, Trans World Board Chairman Charles Tillinghast said the federal government's refusal to grant immediate subsidies for the airlines' international operations prompted the merger talks.

rich fled, these mansions were converted into dormitories for students, hospitals, and day care centers", Davis said with emphasis. "The CIA invaded Cuba, and the people of Cuba defeated them."

Supplementing her presentation on socialism, Davis took time to outline the main opponents to "socialist progress."

Families like the Rockefeller's are responsible for more misery and death than anyone else in history, and they don't even have to wash the blood off their fingers."

Commenting on the extensive wealth of the entire Rockefeller family, Davis went on to say, "That is why we need socialism. Because no one family should be allowed to capitalize on so much wealth."

There's something wrong with this country, and I think that what we have to do is to see socialism in the context of providing an alternative to the problems that are faced by the masses of the people in this country today. Just last week in Los Angeles, 420,000 gallons of milk was dumped down the sewer. There are hearings that are going on right now in California around that. But then if you go into the Black community in Los Angeles, or you go into East Los Angeles into the Chicano community, you will see children, you will see babies that do not have enough milk, who do not have enough food, yet the dairy industry dumps four hundred and twenty thousand gallons of milk down the drain, because they want to hike the prices of milk up. That could not happen in Cuba, because that could not happen with socialism.

What some felt would be a short presentation with a question and answer period turned out to be a long if informal speech. While the auditorium was hot and crowded, most of the people who came stayed to the end. In addition hundreds more were crowded in various rooms and lounges in the Student Union, listening over the radio because they could not get into the CC.

Angela: A review of ideologies

The questions from the audience made evident the immediate need to educate and to understand world politics.

It was both disappointing and surprising that students did not fully utilize this opportunity by asking questions relevant to Ms. Davis' ideologies in terms of her communist affiliation and its effect on her functional ability, given that the communist party in the United States is the most backward communist party in the world, having failed to organize the black masses.

It is indeed regrettable that some students misconstrued Ms. Davis's appearance as that of a celebrity instead of the true revolutionary that she is.

Two apartment complexes may become condominiums

Mgmt. Starr said the amounts involved are $210 to $215 per tenant.

He said that if bankruptcy of the firm resulted from the present reorganization, student tenants might receive one to five cents in return for each dollar of security deposit lost. The LSO office.

According to Starr, tenants whose security deposit became due them before Sept. 23 they will be paid by the present corporation and hence receive less than if their deposit repayment was due after Sept. 23 when payment will be made by any new corporation formed.

The three firms notified their 7,000 "limited partners" -- essentially stockholders -- by letter Sept. 9 that they intended to "restructure" and establish condominiums rather than apartments at the locations, according to Leon J. Bastien, an investigator for the securities division of the Massachusetts Secretary of State's office.

"They thought that was the way to go based on the current economic situation in the country," Bastien said by phone yesterday. He also said the securities division is conducting a routine investigation of the three real estate firms and Hancock Mgmt.

But he refused to say if the investigation had turned up any mismanagement. He would not say when it would be completed beyond "not in the next two days."

Condominiums are apartments which have been purchased by the resident.

A condominium differs from an apartment in the way it is financed. An apartment is maintained and building costs paid by the landlord - in this case Hancock Mgmt.

A condominium is essentially similar to a house. Tenants actually "buy" an apartment, arrange a mortgage with a bank or purchasing it outright.

The advantage to Hancock would be that it would no longer have to maintain large loans from banks at high interest rates to pay purchase and construction costs The tenants would assume that responsibility.

Hancock filed under chapter 12 of state statutes for reorganization in Federal District Court in Boston last month. Chapter 12 is a bankruptcy statute.

However Ms. Deborah Graham, an employee at Hancock contacted by phone yesterday said "we have not filed for bankruptcy." She referred reporter's questions to one of three court-appointed trustees who new are overseeing the financial arrangements of Hancock and the Colonial firms since the federal filing.

The three receivers according to court records, are: -- Colonial Realty -- Atty. Gordon A. Martin, Jr., 31 Grant Ave., Newton. -- Tri-Colonia Realty -- Boston real estate appraiser John Quincy of Milton. -- New Colonial Realty -- Atty. A. David Mazzone of 15 Broad St., Boston. None were available yesterday to comment on the reorganization. Questions about when Brittany Manor and Sugarloaf will become condominiums were referred to the three. Neither Bastien nor a clerk in the Federal District Court know which of the three realty firms operate the two Amherst complexes. Bastien said investments in Connecticut and Massachusetts in the three firms by the limited partners could exceed $34 million.

By a Staff Reporter

An estimated $150 to $300 worth of record albums were stolen from WMUA, the campus FM station early yesterday morning, the station manager and UMass police said.

The albums were stolen by an unidentified male who gained access to the Marston Hall basement studies via a window in the sports office, according to UMass detective Sgt. Phillip J. Cavanaugh.

Cavanaugh said the break was first reported at 1:06 a.m. by a telepone caller from the station. He said disc jockey Barry J. Williams, a senior living in Moore 227 described the man and a accomplice for police to make a composite drawing.

Cavanaugh said Williams saw one male carrying 50 - 100 albums in his arms out of the station. The accomplice joined him outside.

Cavanaugh said the department was pressing the investigation as a breaking and entering and larceny.

Station manager Jack Harper said last night the thief, if found, will be prosecuted "to the full extent of the law." He described record theft at WMUA as a real problem, amounting to the loss of up to 300 albums each year.

Harper said the albums, used for airplay, are worth about $300 each. He said an inspection of the station's record library did not reveal any pattern of musical taste on the part of the thieves.

"We're changing the lock on the door of the library," Harper said, "and anybody at the station caught stealing a recording won't be coming into the station any more."

CUETEP educates

The Center for Urban Education Teacher Education Program (CUETEP) is an education program whose primary goal is to develop and elevate effective teaching in urban classrooms.

Basic philosophies underlying the CUETEP Program are to provide teachers with those necessary strategies for "staying power" in urban schools; and to develop inner city teachers who, in addition to concepts and skills related to learning theory, will have political sophistication to the degree that they can become effective change agents in the urban schools and the systems in which they teach.

We urge all interested students to enroll for this in Room 125 at the School of Education, or drop by the CUETEP office room 222 A at the School of Education if you have any questions.

The new economics

To the Editor:

Re: The spate of recent articles on the economy appearing in your paper. This correspondent feels that a realistic appraisal is the first step on the road to renewed prosperity. Hence:

NEWS ITEM: At today's economic summit meeting, everyone was in top form, although some of the liberals were rather piqued. Asked whether the economy was in a depression, President Ford replied, "the economy is certainly bearing up". His Press Secretary quickly added, "and that's not bull!".

Asked about former President Nixon's economic policies, experts agreed, 'they certainly stoned Walled St." Pending congressional inquiry into market activities, the President refused to release the notorious "ticker tapes". Congress has assigned a Special Investor to look into the situation.

While most economists were rather ignored [as well as ignorant], the Federal Reserve's actions were followed with high interest, at any rate. The Board takes its responsibility seriously. Asked by business about tight money, Board members responded" "No sir, the buck stops here". When asked why, they kept their lips and their money pursed. [a new policy of stone wallet??] Even after repeated complaints about the difficulty of borrowing money, they reiterated "we will dough nothing about it." It was obvious what they mint by that. It would be to their credit if only the Fed would be more independent and go it aloan. But nothing seems to make cents any more...

Some observers blame the problem on Ford's support of paper money. They look back almost with nostalgia to the last Administration, when at least we had a coin-man in office. They were also quick to put the Knoof x on the present gold policy. Speaking o f speculators in metals, their latest slogan is "High-go-silver!!"

Among the pessimists in the current Administration is W. Sighman. [Others in this group include the profits of doom]. Citing the Dow-Jones averages, he said, "we can certainly call New York down-town."

After the success of the Arab cartel, other nations were quick to emulate them. Yes, the new fashion is pretty sheik. Well, that's oil foks.

Why suicide?

By DAVID FREID

Durkheim's Suicide has aroused more than a modicum of interest in Social Theory discussing this week as future little Emile Durkheim's are eagerly involving themselves in the sociological study of this popular problem.

Suicide commences by evaluating self-murder for what it really is. What do we mean when we say that a person has committed "suicide"? As Durkheim sees it, suicide means killing oneself with full knowledge of the lethal consequences of one's act. If one puts a gun to one's head merely intending to inflict a flesh wound and accidentally plugs himself one better, is that suicide? No, it is not. Rather this is termed shooting oneself in the head. If it was suicide, the deceased would not have in his wildest dreams intended to survive.

Why, Durkheim then asks, (being naturally curious and scientifically inquisitive), why does a person commit suicide? Prejudiced for sociology and against psychology, Durkheim immediately starts making excuses. "Sociological explanations are more accurate because one can not possibly know what goes on inside every single suicide's head. Many too many get away without writing notes explaining why they chose suicide. After all, suicide itself doesn't prove anything. I myself have maintained a "suicide alert" just plotzing to hear from a suicide-to-be. Not one of them contacted me nor did I derect one on my own. Thus, we must turn to evidence in social trends as underlying causes. Nor are suicides necessarily anything but normal as you or me. While this one may commit suicide, mental disturbance unrelated to an external social influence is not the cause of suicide."

Out goes the common sense explanation that persons who are out of their minds for personal reasons are somehow responsible for a high suicide rate. "I can not emphasize enough - just because a person is demented is no reason for him to exterminate himself."

Thus, suicide is done Durkheim's way. No longer is it a result of poverty and losses, family troubles, anal fixation, love and jealousy, anger, oedipal maladjustment, or general disgust with life. It is a result of social causes, such as Amy Vanderbilt cancelling her black-tie cookout, traffic jams, proms, Spiro Agnew, family reunions and other social phenomena.

I, personally, am a follower of Durkheim and I can't wait to get my hands on his notes on the sociological causes of masturbation. I wonder if he utilized statistics from governmental files for that study, too.

If interested, drop in on discussion this week. It's being held in Washington - upper.

Politics at WSYL

To the Editor:

One of the outstanding resources of the Sylvan Residential Area is radio station W.S.Y.L. Operated as an educational station for and by students of the Sylvan Area, it offers those interested a chance to try their hand at radio broadcasting. W.S.Y.L. disk-jockies receive one academic credit per semester.

Last semester I worked at W.S.Y.L., doing a show from midnight—2 a.m. Lack of experience and an existing tenure system exempted me from any prime time exposure. It was encouraging to discover at the first W.S.Y.L. meeting this year that this old system had been abolished and time slots had been assigned without regard to experience or "status". Instead, positions were determined by the type of music one intended to play on his/ her show, in an effort to obtain a new musical cohesiveness.

With this new system, it seemed very odd that the following coincidences developed:

[4] Due to the overwhelming number of applications many resident peons were assigned as alternates or put on a waiting list.

If this can happen here at UMass, then maybe Nixon isn't such a bad guy after all.

Fleet says nothing goes

To the Editor:

Eric Fleet's commentary is frought with such ideological naivete and faulty logic that a response would seem unnecessary. My instinctive reaction to answer such a politically repugnant opinion has, however, taken precedence. For the sake of brevity, and an unwillingness to inflate the significance of the original article, I wish to confine my argument to a central issue raised by Fleet, specifically his "When the ends justify the means, ANYTHING goes."

Exactly right, Mr. Fleet... When the ends [preservation of an "American System"] justify the means [political and economic repression, corporate irresponsibility, imperialistic wars, pollution, murder of students and foreign heads of state, wiretapping, etc., etc.] ANYTHING goes [Usually what "goes" is a concern for human life and welfare]. Only when people like Fleet come to see that their priorities are maliciously twisted [allegiance to a political or economic "system" rather than to their fellow humans] will there be any hope of alleviating the misery that now dominates our world. Meanwhile, we can only find some consolation in the hilarity of Mr. Fleet's cry to legislate against civil disobedience.

To the Editor:

I read Reid Fishman's article "Sleeping through the seventies" with some interest, but I hardly agree with referring to those displaced persons from the "late sixties" as "relics" and "remnants". I have been out of school since 1966 so I must qualify as a vintage "antique". I cannot further appreciate the alleged "culture of intimacy and personal caring" that exists somewhere [but where?] on the UMass campus. The only thing that I have noticed [due perhaps to the fact that I am from the south and unaccustomed to the chilly receptions one encounters in New England] that many people walking around on this campus may require surgery to have their frowns removed. I would suggest it that your editorial writers devote less time to this sort of nonsense and put the influence of the paper behind something constructive to all of us. I am referring to Economic teach-ins along similar lines to the Vietnam teach-ins of the "last generation". In case your staff hasn't been paying attention, we are all going down the same recessionary pipe, and we will most assuredly go faster if we are as apathetic and as divided as we appear to be now.

Bureaucratic blunders

"Bureaucracy is a giant mechanism operated by pygmies."

—Honore de Balzac

It's kind of interesting to follow bureaucracies, their lives and deaths, their trials - at least to get the satisfaction of seeing that which oppresses or infuriates you die the death that it inevitably does. And usually deserves. Nixon and his gang of merry pranksters did, alas, pass away, and the height of their early 70's arrogance of the Nixon bureaucracy, which at the time seemed like it would last forever, is now cause for laughter.

There's a bureaucracy much closer to home that's interesting to look at, too, the bureaucracy of UMass. It's bureaucracy that, while not yet dead, is definitely cause for laughter. It's a bureaucracy that has crumbled at some weak points, and they are the ones that are the most interesting to follow.
For example:

FOOD SERVICES - Three years ago Joel Stoneham was the director of this ever popular organization. In the Spring of 1972 there was a large increase in Board prices slated. Irate students began wondering whether Food Services was being run right. The response was that Joel Stoneham was in charge and that while he'd listen to students he had final say over what happened. He was supported by Whitmore in this seldom articulated but often used policy.

One day last year Joel Stoneham disappeared. The administration was silent, releasing faint mumblings about his contract not being renewed. He was "kicked upstairs" for the remainder of his present contract, and he'll presumably open up a soyburger stand in Hadley when his time here is done. Could it be that the students were right after all?

ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES - Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services Thomas Campion ran this leaking ship for a number of years. In that same fateful Spring of '72 large rent increases were also slated. With student help the increase was substantially reduced that year, but Campion became something of a symbol of incompetence in the private conversations of the student elite, especially the student government. Of course, Whitmore backed Camion 1000 per cent.

One day last year, right around the time of Campion's contract renewal, Chancellor Bromery (according to Student Government sources) offered him a job soliciting funds from alumni, which was a nice way of saying he couldn't be Vice Chancellor anymore. He has since disappeared from the public eye. Could it be that the students were right after all?

CAMPUS CENTER - Warren T. (Terry) Grinnan was the director of the "awful waffle" in the era of the ever increasing Campus Center fee a few years ago. Many students thought that the reason for the increased fees was mostly Warren T. Grinnan, but of course this was denied.

One day last year, without the usual bureaucratic coverup, Warren T. Ginnan was fired. His incompetence was not trumpeted too loudly in hopes that he would find a job somewhere else and not bother UMass anymore. He found a job at Hampshire college. God help Hampshire College. By the way, could it be that students were right about Warren T. Grinnan after all?

COMING ATTRACTIONS - It is being whispered in some (predominantly student) circles that Vice Chancellor Gage is not the greatest Vice Chancellor the University has ever seen. Of course, Whitmore is behind Vice Chancellor Gage 10000 per cent, we assume. Could it be that students are right after all? Keep it in mind the next time Vice Chancellor Gage's contract is up for renewal.

Maybe they'll offer him a job soliciting funds from alumni.

The state of the union

An idea for the Bi-centennial -- they should take the Statue of Liberty, melt down her arms and reshape them so that they are being held up in a gesture of "What can I say?" And on the bottom they should reinscribe "Take back your tired and your poor, I can't do anything with them."

Some changes must be made, because the super red, white and blue patriotic show that was originally planned by Nixon and the Watergate 500 can't go on now. The country is too deep in a depression, not an economic depression either. No, a far more serious kind which leaves America far more vunerable. The United States has gone into a deep psychological depression, which may prove to be the most serious dilemma Americans have ever faced. The implications of such a national state of mind run much deeper and the healing process is much longer than any economic or military events of the past have caused. The reason for this being that the state of national despair has grown out of a long history of political, judicial, military and monetary failures.

America has gone into a deep psycological depression which may prove to be the most serious dilemma Americans have ever faced.

There is no faith at all anymore in the Federal Government it seems. Ever since Gerry Ford pardoned criminal Nixon the country has been behaving like it has been stood up while preparing for a date with justice. Because for a moment the ideologies of democractic rule seemed so real.

The economic instability of the country is a major root of the problem. It has become totally discouraging that people are using less electricity and gas as well as eating less meat and at the same time paying higher rates than those who use far more.

This depression of the country's spirit is most visible in the press. The media of the country has become the clearest mirror of the current despondency. Television and news publications seem to have run dry in the wake of Watergate. For example, this week both major news magazines ran pictures of Betty Ford on the cover with long stories of the "operation" inside. Things have become pretty bad when the major news story of the week is the First Lady's mastectomy. Sadder still is the way that people are really getting off on reading about it. "Time" also decided to ressurect Chappiquidik. It seems that when there is no interesting news even the most prominent publications turn to muckraking and sensationalism. But the people enjoy it -- Americans can't take anymore corruption, starvation, or terrorism these days.

This running dry is also clear here on campus. Last week on these very editorial pages there were such poignant commentaries as the story of "Rufus the Midget", a column about cooking ones own meals, a few satires, and the duo of Tripoli and Fishman singing "I remember Pierpont" to the tune of "Blowing in the Wing". And once again, this is what students want to read. More people probably read "rufus the Midget" than read Gerry Cataldo's column on the CIA.

Even as I am writing this the lobby of the S.U.B. is completely packed with people waiting to get in for Angela Davis. One can only get the feeling that the majority of the students there have come to see Angela Davis rather than hear her. She is now more of an attraction than she is a political figure.

Someday historians will look back on the depression of the seventies with a retrospective, analytical eye and speak of it as a time of quiet change. But for us in the present we can only hope that we pass through this phase without national catastrophe. For in the debris left by Nixon, and Vietnam and Inflation, America is probably in its most vunerable state. A state of mental despair.

Tighten up

Last summer twenty four people died in a fire at the crowded Gulliver's discotheque in Rochester, N.Y. The Coconut Grove fire in Boston a few decades ago left a similarly large number of people dead, the victim of a flash fire and poorly planned emergency escape routes.

The prevailing attitude of bar owners is of course, "It can't happen here," or "we hope it won't happen here" and in the meantime they "pack 'em in and get those bucks." The truth is that a holocaust could happen, and that greed and laxity are more prevalent than concern for customers.

Ironically, Gulliver's was acting within the law that fateful night. The existing New York laws simply didn't protect the patrons.

Will patrons in local bars be protected from the flagrancy of local bar owners and managers? Perhaps, but perhaps before disaster strikes the present occupancy levels should be enforced and the laws for customer protection made more strict.

Some suggestion about the latter: fire extinguishers should be plentiful and hung where they are readily accessible to patrons. All exits should be well lit and unobstructed. Three exists instead of two should be law.

There is no doubt that suggestions of this sort will strike saloon owners as unfair because they add more costs to an industry that has been hit as hard as the rest of America during the last year or so. But like the miserable seat belts in 1974 and 1975 cars that helped raise the price....the goal with strict fire laws is to save human lives.

The opinions expressed in this space are those of the majority of the editors.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Renaissance fair is set

Tomorrow there will be a Rainbow Festival held in the spirit of a Renaisance Fair in the courtyard of Pierpont House, Southwest.

The festivities will begin at 1 p.m.

Period dress is encouraged, and everyone is invited to participate. Fire-eaters, Jugglers, Street Musicians, Artists, Unicyclists, Clowns, Jousters and Fencers, Fiddlers and Pickers, and Food Vendors are still needed.

The Fair will be followed by a "good ole fashioned", Twentieth Century Boogie.

Rep. Collins releases his '73 fed. tax forms

State Representative James G. Collins, D-Amherst, has released a full statement of his net worth and a copy of his 1973 federal income tax form 1040.

The first term legislator who is seeking re-election to the Massachusetts House of Representatives from the towns of Amherst and South Hadley recently listed a net worth of $14,817 with assets of $44,000 and liabilities of $29,183.

Included under assets were ownership of his home at 67 Butterfield Terrace valued at $37,000, automobiles and personal property valued at $6,000, and savings of $1000. Included under liabilities were a home mortgage of $24,983 and automobile and personal loan notes amounting to $4,200.

Collins' only salaried income for 1973 was $12,027, his legislative salary. In addition he listed $957 severance and vacation pay from the University of Massachusetts where he was employed before running for office and $1998 in rent from renting half his income for a total 1973 income of $14,182.

Collins also stated that his business expenses as state representative for 1973 was $6,691 with reimbursement of $4780 by the Commonwealth; thus leaving $1911 which he paid from his own income.

Mt. Holyoke pioneers international program

Mount Holyoke College has pioneered an International Internship Program for the summer and January intersession. The program is open to UMass students, both non-major with academic experience in political science and majors in this department.

An intern in an international organization frequently has access to meetings of assemblies, councils and committees. Interns assisting a foreign government official or a leader may also expect to participate in conferences and official interviews as part of the work.

In recent years the interns have held such positions as ones in Geneva, at the United Nations European Headquarters, in Paris with the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, in Vienna with the International Atomic Energy Agency, and in Addis Ababa with the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa.

Academic credit may be received if the internship is preceded or followed by related independent work. Students must incur all costs and living arrangements at international student centers are available.

Interested students should contact Judy Epstein at the International Programs Office by Thursday, October 10.

UMass 1974 Index ready, distribution starts today

By JUDY STUDLEY
Staff Correspondent

The 11,500 copies of the 1974 issue of the Index, UMass's yearbook, will appear on Monday. They will be distributed from the back of a truck in front of the Student Union building.

John Neister, managing editor of this year's Index, said yesterday that this issue is one of the best books ever put out, despite the fact that the Index's budget had been cut to $63,000.

For seniors, the sitting fees for photos going into the 1975 yearbook have gone up to $4. The sitting fee must be paid for all who have photos going into the yearbook.

This year's Index has only 16 pages of color, but the highlight will be its cover. It will feature a blue metal inlay of an artist's rendering of the chapel and library. The cover itself will be maroon with a snow flake silk screen.

Yom Kippur war effects subject of Hillel brunch

The effects of the Yom Kippur War on Israel government and society as well as on individual Israelis will be discussed at a brunch on Sunday morning, October 6, at 11:00 a.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

Dr. Donna Divine, an expert on the Middle East, who has spent considerable time in Israel, Egypt, Turkey etc., will analyze the political and social realignments caused by the war. Dr. Divine is in the Political Science Department of Smith College.

The brunch is being sponsored by Hillel and is open to all. A fee will be charged to help defray the cost of food.

Annual disc and book sale opens at university library

The second annual book and record sale, which is sponsored by the Friends of the Library, will be held today on the 26th floor of the University Library from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., and Saturday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

All items sold on Saturday will be offered at two for the price of one.

The proceeds will be used to buy "rare books, antiquarian materials, and anything the regular budget can't afford", a librarian said.

The items to be sold have been donated, and include not only books and records, but "almost anything you could imagine".

The items are decided upon by the bibliography division of the library.

Creating art from trash

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Writer

Twenty-four art students under the instruction of Dr. Lyle Perkins are busy turning old broken glass into works of art. These students are learning the fine art of glassblowing as a part of the ceramics concentration offered to art majors at UMass.

Old wine bottles and pieces of glass are broken up and melted to provide material for glassblowing.

A glass item is made by collecting a ball of red hot liquid glass on the end of a long hollow pipe. Students make a hollow bubble by blowing through the pipe, and the rudimentary bubble is smoothed and shaped with a wooden blocking tool. More hot glass is added to increase size and design and the shaping process is repeated.

The finished project is then placed overnight in an annealer, a high temperature oven which tempers the glass to prevent breakage.

Glassblowing students must work quickly before the hot glass cools off. It is a difficult art to master, and Dr. Perkins said that it ususally takes about four semesters for students to gain good control over glassblowing design.

Six students at a time work in the studio located at the back of Munson Hall Annex. Despite intense heat from glass melting furnaces, the atmosphere is relaxed and the students seem to love their work. Dr. Perkins told us he does not know of "anything in art to compare with the thrill of glassblowing."

Perkins said there are usually not enough opportunities in the field for students to go professional after graduation, although he added that one of his former students has established a studio in Ware, Massachusetts. Most students gain additional training through summer programs at other institutions.

Glassblowing is also taught at the Graduate research Center at UMass. This program is for scientific purposes, and students learn to make glass implements for the chemistry department.

Exhibits and demonstrations for small groups are given occasionally by students in Munson annex. Perkins feels that working before an audience seems to help students express their creativity.

After a week of the Dining Commons and its choice of cold ham, fruit plate, or last night's chicken, it will be a relief to be able to make your own food, that is if you know what to do.

If you follow this simple recipe, which only takes an hour in preparation and baking, you can avoid your weekend visit to MacDonalds or the Hatch.

It's a sort of pie, made of eggs, milk, cheese and bacon. It is served as a main meal, perhaps with soup or salad on the side. A loaf of French or Italian bread with cheese chunks would go great.

PAUL'S QUICK QUICHE LORRAINE

Ingredients:
3 eggs
6 oz. swiss cheese
1 one-third cup of milk
1 — 8'' pie crust (can be bought frozen)
6 slices of bacon
¼ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper

Equipment:
frying pan
oven (available in every dorm) cutting board fork

Preheat oven to 375 degrees.

Cook bacon until crisp, and drain.

Grate cheese or cut into small pieces.

Beat eggs.

Add milk, salt, and pepper to eggs.

Mix all ingredients, except bacon. Pour into pie crust. Place bacon strips on top. Bake for 45 minutes.

Optional: Add mushrooms to the mixture, or substitute ham, crabmeat, or shrimp for the bacon.

Serves 3 to 4 persons.

Checking Project Self

Want to write and writhe?

By DEBBIE FELTON
Everywoman's Center

"I'm really psyched about this workshop," said one of the facilitators for Project Self, a series of workshops for women sponsored by Everywoman's Center.

This fall forty courses are being offered in such diverse fields as yoga, batik, public speaking, women in American history, guitar, and freeing women's bodies. They are all open to UMass students.

The workshops focus on women as women, working towards creating an environment where they can develop their own potentials and interests and strengthen their awareness of themselves, center coordinators say Marsha Tzoumas, co-facilitator of a workshop on techniques and practices of newspaper journalism said, "Journalism makes you completely aware of what's around you, gives you time to think."

Romola Rigali, the other facilitator of this workshop, is equally enthusiastic. Together they plan to give participants an overall view of the newspaper profession and developwriting skills including interviewing, research, spot news coverage, writing under deadline, and rewrites.

Tzoumas and Rigali are both on the "Living" staff of the Springfield Union and the Springfield Republican newspapers. But facilitators are also supposed to create an atmosphere conducive to the sharing of ideas and experiences among the participants.

"As women in the journalism field, "one facilitator said, "we see as part of our role to bring to public attention issues of ultimate concern to women . . . Journalism thus affords a forum for both self-expression and challenging accepted roles."

Many of the workshops have developed out of individuals' growing awareness of problems they have faced and for which they have found solutions. Pat Griffin, who is leading a workshop entitled "Project Adventure" realized when she was growing up that the facilities for women's sports in no way equalled those for men.

She explains, "Women have been denied the wonderful feeling of challenging themselves physically because of social pressure."

Joan Chadbourne is co-facilitating a workshop called "Discovering Our Needs". When asked why she was facilitating this workshop, Joan commented that it was "because I've become aware of how many of my own needs have gone unrecognized and when I have recognized needs, it's been so difficult to do anything about that."

Registration for Project Self is by mail or in person from September 23 to October 15. Brochures are available at Evervwoman's Center. Goodell Hall, or will be mailed if interested women contact EWC at 545-0883.

Irene Yesner-Ringawa, one of several "facilitators" in this semester's Project Self workshops at Everywoman's Center. Yesner-Ringawa's "Freeing Our Bodies" workshop, like others, is open to the public.

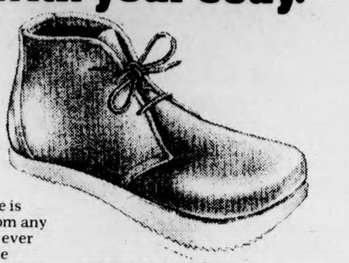
The shoe that works with your body.



This shoe is different from any shoe you've ever worn. It's the EARTH* negative heel shoe. The shoe designed to work in harmony with your entire body.

The heel of the Earth* shoe is actually lower than the toe. This allows you to walk naturally. Like when you walk barefoot in sand or soft earth and your heel sinks down lower than your toes.

The entire sole of the Earth shoe is molded in a very special way. This allows you to walk in a gentle rolling motion. And to walk easily and comfortably on the hard jarring cement of our cities.

But remember, just because a shoe looks like ours doesn't mean it works like ours. So to be sure you're getting the Earth brand shoe, look on the sole for our Earth trademark and U.S. Patent #3305947.

Your body will thank you.

Shoes, sandals, sabots and boots for men and women. From $23.50 to $42.50.

UPENN SOPH CRUSADES FOR FREE TOILETS is the word from Kent State, where Michael Gessel recently told a crowd of 15 in the KSU student union that his nationwide organization is fighting to free pay toilets.

The president of the Committee to End Pay Toilets in America (CEPTIA) claims 1,600 members in 10 chapters across the country. The five-year-old organization's biggest success to date, he said, is the Chicago City Council 37-8 vote to ban pay toilets there, making it the first major free-toilet city in the United States.

Gessel says pay toilets are big business in America, with 50,000 of them grossing about $30 million a year.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Friday, October 4

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Employ your executive ability to the highest degree possible this morning. Otherwise, you may find yourself in difficulties by afternoon.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Organization is the most important single factor on the way to success today. If you can keep to a planned schedule, you're half way to your goal.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You would do well at the present time to hide your feelings. Allow yourself the pleasure of speaking out — but from the standpoint of reason.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — If you allow another to stir you up emotionally you will forfeit a great part of your success today. Keep your wits about you!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You should feel extremely energetic this morning — which is the time for making important decisions. Results should accrue by late afternoon.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Keep your eye on your goal as you go about the business of changing your method of operation. Don't lose sight of your objective.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — It should be greatly to your advantage to cooperate with an old friend. You may have to delve into the past for the "know-how" but it will be worth it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Business ventures will take cooperative effort if they are to prove successful by day's end. Don't neglect to keep an old promise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Business affairs should be progressing well at this time. You can keep the ball rolling by keeping a balance between work and play.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take care that you don't make decisions on the basis of what another tells you is true. Be sure you know from personal experience what direction to take.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Any long-term investment needs careful watching at this time. You can put yourself in an excellent position for gain if you are willing to wait.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Morning hours require more of you in the way of preparation than you thought. Time spent now, however, is time saved later in the month.

Canada's Bruce McGregor (20) has words with a Soviet official after his fight with Russian Valeri Vasiliev in the second period of yesterday's game. Russia trounced Team Canada 5-2 to take a 3-1-2 lead in the eight-game series.

Soviets trounce Canadians, take commanding series lead

MOSCOW [AP] - Russia struck for a pair of goals in the first three minutes of the game and went on to defeat Team Canada 5-2 Thursday in the sixth game of their international hockey series.

The victory was the third against one loss for the Soviets. Two games have ended in ties.

Boris Mikhailov got the Russians in front quickly, scoring with the game only 34 seconds old. Valeri Kharlamov assisted on the goal.

Two minutes later, the Russians were on the scoreboard again on defenseman Valeri Vasiliev's unassisted goal Marty Howe was in the penalty box when Vasiliev scored.

Team Canada, composed of players from the World Hockey Association, struck back with Rejean Houle scoring on a feed from Paul Schmyr with just over four minutes left in the first period.

Gordie Howe, professional hockey's alltime scoring king, tied the score for the Canadians at 6:15 of the second period, with his son, Mark, assisting. But the Russians regained the lead quickly on a goal by Viacheslav Anisin just two minutes after Howe's score.

Victor Shatalov made it 4-2 for the Russians before the second period was over.

Goalie Vladislav Tretiak blanked the Canadians the rest of the way and the Russians added a wrapup goal in the game's final 20 minutes.

Pesky may become Sox coach

BOSTON [AP] - Former Red Sox manager and star infielder Johnny Pesky, and Eastern League manager Stan Williams are being considered for coaching jobs at the American League baseball club, the Sox said Thursday.

The word came as manager Darrell Johnson confirmed The Associated Press report that coaches Eddie Popowski and Lee Stange will be replaced on his staff.

Popowski, 62, who has been with the Red Sox organization for 36 years, will remain to work with young players, instructing in the minor leagues, and "will be with us in Winter Haven," the Red Sox spring training camp, a spokesman said.

Stange, 38, a former Red Sox pitcher and pitching coach for three years, may end up with the Minnesota Twins.

Stange left Boston for his home in the Minneapolis area after getting word Wednesday that he was being dropped as Red Sox pitching coach.

The Red Sox said that Williams, who managed the Bristol, Conn., Red Sox, in the Eastern League this past season, is being given "strong consideration" for the Boston pitching coach job.

Pesky is being considered for the combination job of first base coach and hitting instructor.

He now does color and some play-by-play telecasting of Red Sox games on WBZ-TV.

THE LITTLE THINCLADS — Four members of the JV cross-country team (the fifth is an enemy runner) speed along in Franklin Park in tri-meet action. The JV's topped both Providence College and Harvard.

vs NU, St. John's

Thomas after mark

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

The focus tomorrow afternoon will probably be in Alumni Stadium, as the football team opens its home schedule, but about the same time, Randy Thomas will get his last shot at the UMass course record when the harriers host Northeastern and St. John's.

Thomas held the course standard until the UConn meet last year, when Bruce Clark outdueled him and set new course record. Clark, now a sophomore at UConn, is the only runner who has run the hilly UMass course in less than 25 minutes. Clark presently holds the top time for the course, a 24:54. Thomas has run the five-mile route in 25:00 and is expected to come up with an all-out attempt to better the year-old mark.

Thomas and Northeastern's Mike Buckley have a personal rivalry going and past results are so even that it's hard to pick a favorite. Of course, if Thomas wants the course record he'll have to beat Buckley, and the team's top runner is coming off a terrific race against Providence.

Northeastern boasts a 3-0 record, and will need good performances from John and Bob Flora, a pair of freshmen harriers from Connecticut, if it hopes to challenge UMass. Howie Scribner, Ken Graham and Kevin Hartford complete the top group of competitors for the Huskies. Ken Flanders, who placed fourth in the New Englands last year, is a doubtful runner for NU, but should the New England indoor two-mile champ compete, the meet will be much closer.

St. John's is entering the tri-meet with a 3-3 record and has primarily a young team. Ed Valenski leads St. John's while captain Tom Cappelluzzo and Steve Keating are the number two and three runners.

A great race can be expected because if Thomas goes for the record, Buckley, Bill Gillin and John McGrail will be pulled along. It will be the last chance to watch the harriers, who are headed for the NCAA's.

Booters hope to rebound vs WPI

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

The UMass soccer team will try to rebound against W.P.I. tomorrow after Wednesday's 3-0 loss to Keene State.

"We just had a bad day," said Coach Al Rufe in reference to the 3-0 whitewash at the hands of the Owls from New Hampshire. "I guess I didn't have my best day coaching either."

"Our problem is one of team unity and hustle," said Rufe. "Whether or not we get it straightened out will be answered Saturday against W.P.I."

Senior Alan Long and junior Bill Spyker will see more action against W.P.I. than in the past in an effort to return to winning ways.

A tough game is expected from the technicians from Worcester, who tied UMass 1-1 last year. Coach Rufe said that they are a well-coached team and will be a good test for the Minutemen.

There were a few bright spots in Wednesday's game, despite the loss. Halfback Bill MacDonald, forward Bill Belcher, and fullback Dan Ouellette were cited for their hustling play.

QUICK SHOT - Game time tomorrow is 11:00 a.m.

JV's face Green

By DAVE OSTRANDER
Sports Staff

Yes! There is a J.V. football team at UMass. Surprised? With good reason. Playing in the shadow of the varsity, JV football, like most other junior varsity sports, rarely gets the headlines, or the fans. Yet these teams work just as hard and deserve the notice and support.

Today at 1:30, in Alumni Stadium, the junior Minutemen will face the sub-varsity of Dartmouth, in what will be ther first game of the season. The Dartmouth JV's will have the experience of one game behind them, that being a 44-7 hammering of Albany State.

Although Dartmouth is a big team (their offensive line averages 220 pounds), the UMass coaching staff, headed by Bill Maxwell, is looking forward to the game with optimism.

Capitalizing on the speed of halfbacks Dave Douvadfian and John Fernandez, the Minutemen will be able to avoid Dartmouth's size by using an outside running game. Expected to call the signals for UMass is John Czerapowicz, a Northampton native and graduate of Deerfield Academy.

Scouting reports indicate that Dartmouth will come at the JV's with a wishbone offense. Dartmouth's offensive line has the edge over the UMass defense in size.

Pigskin prognosis

According to my comical colleague, Steve Saraceno, I was a failure in my first week of pro football prognostication because I didn't pick the Patriot shocker over the Rams. Well, I'll let my 10-3 mark of a week ago speak for itself. Just for those of you who have any doubts, including Mr. Saraceno, here's another look into the future.

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS 34; BALTIMORE COLTS 14

Jim Plunkett, Mack Herron and Randy Vataha will have Colt GM Joe Thomas wishing he never took the job as Baltimore's head coach. This one's especially for Ben Caswell and Saraceno.

CINCINNATI BENGALS 24; WASHINGTON REDSKINS 20

Not really an upset, as George Allen and the 'Skins had their picnic last Monday night at the expense of the Broncos. Ken Anderson-Issac Curtis combination will be key to Bengal victory.

OAKLAND RAIDERS 21; CLEVELAND BROWNS' 10

Cleveland QB Mike Phipps will have to face tough Raider defense, but won't have any more success than Joe Gilliam and Steelers did a week ago. Should be an enjoyable afternoon for Ken Stabler and teammates.

NEW YORK GIANTS 17; ATLANTA FALCONS 13.

Giants will be flying after inspirational win over Cowboys and New York defense should handle Falcons, who will still be looking for first 1974 victory next week.

CHICAGO BEARS 14; NEW ORLEANS SAINTS 7

This one shapes up to be a low-scoring game that has become associated with the Chicago offense, but this week, Bears' signal-caller Gary Huff will outshine troubled Archie Manning.

BUFFALO 20; GREEN BAY 16

The Bills will have a tougher time with the Packers because the weather probably won't be on their side in Wisconsin, but Braxton-Simpson duo will be enough.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS 27; HOUSTON OILERS 10

Look for Joe Gilliam to go wild, after being shut out by Raiders. Oilers can only hope for another off day on Gilliam's part, but that's not likely.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS 10; DALLAS COWBOYS 7

Frustrated Texas Stadium crowd won't be the only problem Roger Staubach has to face. Watch the Vikes' defensive line rush Staubach into another week of ineffectiveness.

KANSAS CITY CHIEFS 23; DENVER BRONCOS 17

Jan Stenerud should prove to be deciding factor as opposing QB's, Charley Johnson and Mike Livingston, offset each other.

LOS ANGELES RAMS 28; DETROIT LIONS 13

John Hadl and Rams will rebound in convincing fashion and the Lions will have to come up with more trick plays like QB Bill Munson centering to Altie Taylor if they hope to beat LA.

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES 24; SAN DIEGO CHARGERS 21

This one could go either way, but Chargers are down after nearly upsetting Miami and Eagles will fly high.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS 28; SAN FRANCISCO 14

49ers lack offensive punch and Cardinals should easily remain unbeaten.

MIAMI DOLPHINS 27; NEW YORK JETS 21

Only a good performance by Joe Namath and Jet offense will keep New York in the game. The Dolphins are too talented and are overdue for an impressive showing.

Cats clash with UMass in '74 home grid opener

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

The roadtrip is over for the UMass Minutemen. For two weeks they can forget about the long bus rides to King of Prussia, Orono, and Hanover and look forward to a quick ride down to Alumni Stadium this Saturday for their Yankee Conference match against Vermont (WMUA, 1:00).

It's a new season now for UMass as they head into four straight Yankee Conference clashes starting with Vermont, and continuing with games against Boston University next week at home, Rhode Island at Kingston, and the Big One, the Oct. 26th confrontation between the Minutemen and the University of Connecticut in this year's Homecoming Game.

UMass is coming off last week's tremendous win over Dartmouth, the first win by the Minutemen over an Ivy power since 1960, when present mentor Dick MacPherson was a UMass assistant coach and beat Harvard. Even though some people might be thinking of a UMass letdown tomorrow, MacPherson does not envision one.

"I would be 100 percent surprised if we had a letdown. When I say that I'm reflecting the great leadership of our two co-captains Dennis Kiernan and Ed McAleney who've done such a magnificent job keeping the guys together. Without looking down at any of our past teams, I'd have to say that this team has the highest morale of any UMass team that I've been associated with."

Tomorrow the Minutemen defense which has given up only seventeen points in three games and not allowed their opponents a single touchdown on the ground will lock horns with a very young Vermont offense with only three seniors.

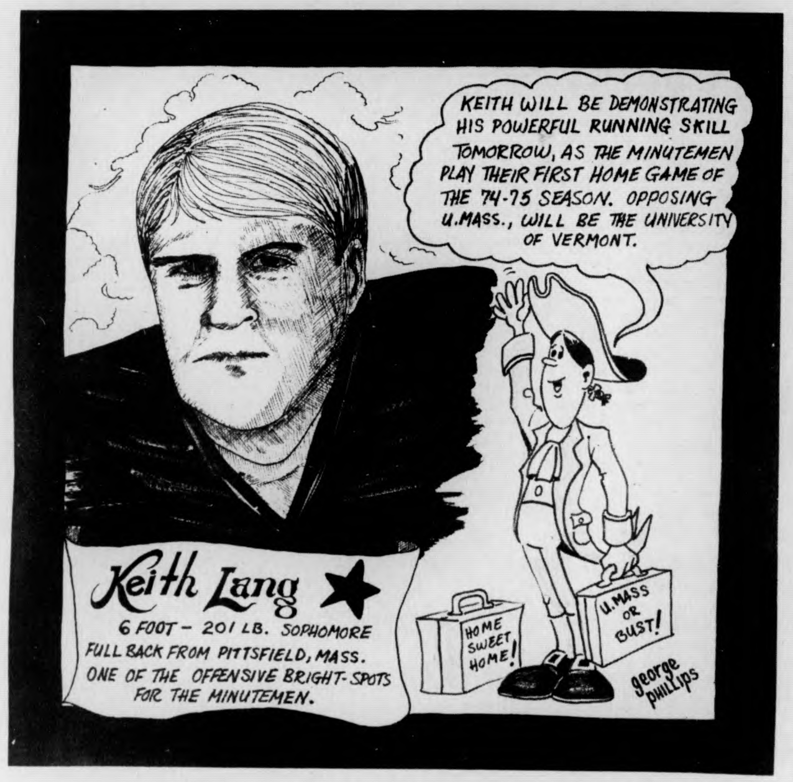
However, the Catamount quarterback Bob Bateman could give the defense problems. At 6'6", the 187-pound Bateman leads the Yankee Conference with 35 completions in 66 attempts and a 14.2 average gain per reception. Since passing is Vermont's bread and butter and their running attack has been moving at an inefficient three yards per carry, there could be a lot of balls being thrown around Alumni Stadium tomorrow afternoon. Although the UMass defensive secondary was something to worry about prior to the season opener they've proved a tough nut to crack, but Bateman could prove a formidable foe according to Coach MacPherson.

"I was worried about the secondary before the season and to be honest they've done a great job. Everybody said that the Villanova quarterback Sikorski was a good passer and they said the same thing about Snickenberger at Dartmouth and Cosgrove at Maine, but they're really not the best passers in the world. As far as I'm concerned this'll be the real test for our secondary facing the best passer in New England."

Mark Tripucka will lead the UMass offense against the Catamounts with the expectation that the UMass running attack which has garnered 659 yards in three games will make up the bigger part of the offensive repertoire. At Wednesday's Gridiron Club luncheon center Bruce Pinto said that one of the goals of the offensive line this year is to gain 1000 rushing yards by the time the Vermont game is over. It might not be so terribly outlandish a claim since the Vermont defense boast a 6' right defensive end and a 6'2" left defensive end with a bunch of smaller men behind them. UMass could have a field day.

Tomorrow marks the beginning of the main thrust of the Beanpot, emblematic of YanCon supremacy. As Dick MacPherson says with clockwork regularity, "that's what our whole season is about."

The only injury problems at the moment for UMass center on co-captain Ed MacAleney. The defensive end will definitely not play tomorrow with his spot being taken by sophomore Dennis Fenton.



KEITH WILL BE DEMONSTRATING HIS POWERFUL RUNNING SKILL TOMORROW, AS THE MINUTEMEN PLAY THEIR FIRST HOME GAME OF THE 74-75 SEASON. OPPOSING U.MASS., WILL BE THE UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT.

Last rites of '74

I stop at the refreshment booth outside the park to load up for the game. The place used to be only a little shack selling just Milky Ways and Coke — "The M & K Stand".

Now the stand is about half a mile long and sells everything from popcorn to smoked crawdads. The name's changed to "Hot Dogs Unlimited", or something important-sounding like that. I down a Coke in one gulp, stash fifteen or twenty Milky Ways in my pockets and hurry to catch my entourage, already passing through the turnstiles.

Below the stands is the smell of the football season, whatever that smells like, and I climb the ramp half-expecting to see Babe Parilli fading back to look for Gino on the square-out.

Instead, I see a rookie left handers with a mother curve having control problems, as rookie left handers with mother curves usually do.

Darrell Johnson emerges from the dugout amid a chorus of boos. He settles down Steve Barr and returns to the dugout. Suddenly, an object thrown from the skyviews resembling an M-80 lands near the mound.

The thought flashes through my mind, "They're going to blow up Steve Barr!", but the firecracker, if it even was a firecracker, never goes off. It may have been just a peanut. Heck, this crowd isn't vengeful or bitter. Even the boos for Johnson were light and widely scattered.

The people at Fenway Park now are the "real" fans.

Cecil Cooper muffs a two-hopper, displaying the form that has made him one of the top fifteen first-basemen in the Eastern Division. By the time Barr gets the Cleveland Indians out, the Sox trail, 3-2.

"GO YANKEES!", screams a guy.

The bleachers are deserted but for about 75 people, and it gives me the willies. At the top of the bleachers (over a hundred feet from the street below) sits a solitary fan in the October nighttime chill. A die-hard, depressed at the catastrophic Sox collapse, in recluse even from fellow bleacherites huddled behind the bullpens...

Another morbid thought: "Maybe he'll jump!"

The Sox forge back to take the lead. Rick Miller (ah, Rick Miller) doubles in a run and then unnerves the Indian outfielder with his speed, going to third on a bad throw. Where was Mr. Miller all year, Manager Johnson? Juan Beniquez is no answer to your centerfield problems.

"GO YANKEES!", hollers the lost Bomber fan.

Later, Dewey Evans knocks in Miller (two doubles and a single) with a hit that he stretches into a hustle-double. As wrong as you were putting Miller in the doghouse, Mgr. Johnson, you were right in playing Evans regularly despite some criticism. Now he's one of the top rightfielders in the game.

Bill Gogolewski comes in to pitch for Cleveland. I'm mildly surprized. I thought he had gone back to wherever Gogolewski's come from.

"GO YANKEES!", again. Will you shut up, lost Bomber fan?

By and large, the ninth rolls along. Barr gets Frank Robinson on a weak grounder to complete his first major league victory, 7-4.

Chilly fans head for the exits as the outfield lights go off for the last time this year, plunging the bullpens into darkness. The talk is not merry. The win means nothing.

Just then, with Boston seven games out of first and only one left to play, some cockeyed optimist walking behind me says, with the assurance of someone who has it all planned, "Now, if we can just pick up a good lefty reliever, we still got a chance..."

Including rink and gymnasium

Complex for Boston campus

By RICH SEVIERI
Sports Staff

The UMass-Boston harbor campus will begin construction this spring on a 9.6 million dollar sports center. The center will include a hockey rink, a multipurpose gymnasium, and a swimming pool.

William Rawn, Assistant Chancellor of Planning at the Boston campus, told the Collegian in a telephone interview of the rink and the gymnasium to be laid sometime this winter and if the weather permits, construction on the total complex will start in May.

The original budget of $18-20 million for the complex was slashed to 9.6 million by a University Board of Trustees amendment.

At an August 28 Board of Trustees Meeting, President Wood reviewed the sequence of events which led to the amended program for the sports complex at the Harbor Campus. He stated that the governor's support of this project and the Legislature's appropriation of $4,750,000 additional funds had made possible the construction of the complex, but on a substantially reduced scale from that originally planned.

The full Board of Trustees voted to approve the amended sports complex program at their September 4th meeting.

The sports complex is part of the Harbor Campus's Phase II construction program. The amended program anticipates a building of 121,600 gross square feet as compared to 185,000 plus parking in the original design. The major program elements, however (Hockey rink, multipurpose gym, swimming pool), were retained.

Several costly features of the original design relating to the roof and structural systems and utility specifications will be substantially changed. Spectator capacity in the hockey arena will be reduced from 2000 to 1000, and in swimming from 600 to 300 seats.

Planning personnel will try to maintain as much as possible the various sports programs originally planned despite the lower budget. Besides the reductions in seating capacities, office, locker, and laundry space will be reduced. Proposed saunas and a running track have been completely eliminated from the complex design.

The University's replanning of the sports complex will yeild cost savings in the following areas:

—A more conventional and economical roof system will be utilized.

—The spectator walkway separating the skating rink and the gymnasium will be eliminated.

—Spaces that will be reduced in size include the gym, swimming pool storage, laundry and training room offices, and general storage.

The gymnasium will have a seating capacity of from 3500 to 5000. Gymnastics and weight training rooms will adjoin the gym.

Board of Trustees members have expressed concern that reductions in the complex had not been discussed with local community organizations. Chancellor Rawn believes that the changes would not affect community athletic programs. Youths from Columbia Point and Dorchester are active participants in Harbor Campus athletic programs.

Astronomers discover new pulsar

By JERRY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Two UMass astronomers, Professor Joseph Taylor and grad student Russell Hulse, have recently discovered a binary pulsar after approximately a years work in Arecibo, Puerto Rico.

Of the 140 known pulsars, 40 of which Taylor and Hulse have discovered, this is the first binary one ever discovered in what has been termed "the discovery of the year, if not of the decade" according to Frank Drake of Cornell University.

Pulsars were first discovered in 1967 and are believed to be "neutron stars" or stars that have burnt out and collapsed in on themselves. They are extremely dense with one teaspoonful of their material weighing 100 million tons; and they make their presence known by sending out beeps of radio emission at regular intervals of about one second.

A binary pulsar is one pulsar in orbit around another object. At present this object is still a mystery but is thought to be either another pulsar or a "black hole" which is even denser than a pulsar. Due to its orbiting around another object the beeps of radio emission are sent out at the extraordinary rate of 17 beeps per second.

Also due to the orbit the beep rate is irregular and gradually increases and decreases over an 8-hour cycle. These irregularities made it possible to classify the binary pulsar as such since its presence was first discovered in July.

The scientific importance of the discovery involves the measuring of the mass of a star. Due to the forces of gravity the pulsar and the second object exert on each other and to the characteristics of the orbit, it is now possible to use this information to measure the mass of the stars. This was never possible before.

Hulse is still in Puerto Rico working but Taylor is back home and "pretty excited". Hulse is using the facilities at Arecibo, which contains the world's largest radio telescope and the only one strong enough to pick up the faint radio signals of the pulsar, to gather more information on the discovery.

Taylor said, "It's been pretty hectic; I was down there a week ago but in the week that I've been back I've gone to Cornell and received phone calls from a dozen observatories."

"It's got most of the astronomers in the world pretty excited, at least enough so that people are willing to fly us all over the country to talk about it," he continued.

Dr. Thomas Arny, head of the astronomy program, has described discovery of the pulsar, which is 15,000 light years away, as "potentially one of the most exciting discoveries in astronomy in the last 5-6 years."

Apartment conversion unlikely

By BILL DENSMORE
MDC Staff

The trustee handling the reorganization of a firm which owns two apartment complexes in the Amherst area now says it is unlikely they will be converted into condominiums.

Atty. A. David Mazzone of Wakefield told The Collegian by phone Friday he thinks a college town like Amherst is best served by apartments.

The 1,200 unit Brittany Manor Apartments in South Amherst and the 600-unit Mt. Sugarloaf Apartments in North Amherst, both owned by New Colonial Realty Investments of Boston are the affected apartments.

New Colonial filed a reorganization statement which could lead to bankruptcy in mid-September in Federal District Court in Boston. Two other realty firms which are owned jointly by two partners also filed.

At stake is about $34 million in "limited partnerships" sold to about 7,000 investors in Connecticut and Massachusetts. But the legal move has no immediate effect on tenants at the two local complexes, Mazone said Friday.

"I think you have to look at the market in Amherst," Mazzone said when asked about conversion to condominiums. "If it's feasible we might consider it," he said.

"But generally I don't think condominiums are the answer in a college town where you have a high turnover," he said.

Earlier, the three firms had told their partners by mail on September 9 that they intended to restructure and set up condominiums. The statements by Mazzone appeared to dispel that possibility at least for the Amherst apartments.

Mazzone said tenants in the complexes should continue to pay rent to Hancock Management Co., Longwood Towers, Chapel St., Brookline, Mass. Hancock runs apartments for the three holding firms.

Symposium workshop finds feminism needs. Socialism

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

At the start of a two hour workshop Friday afternoon entitled "Women and Socialism", Philosophy professor Ann Ferguson stated that, "Total equality between men and women in this country cannot be achieved until the United States becomes a Socialist nation."

The workshop was part of a three day symposium on "The Socialist Alternative" sponsored by the New American Movement, and was conducted by Professor Ferguson who is a member of Marxist Activist Philosophers and is involved in New University Conference and Valley Women's Union.

"I want to contrast the position of women in the United States today with the position of women in socialist countries," said Ferguson. "We can then use this general contrast to help understand how we can use our strengths to organize women."

"It is important for women to organize women," she said, urging a separation of the sexes in the movement for sexual equality.

Feguson cited statistics which detailed differences between female input into Soviet society and the women's place in American society.

"In the Soviet Union, 50 per cent of all students in all schools are women," she said, "while taking UMass alone, the male enrollment actually went up from 56.2 per cent in 1967, to 56.9 per cent in 1972."

Ferguson continued by documenting the fields of study which had the greatest concentration of women at UMass in 1972.

"Home economics was 96.8 per cent women, nursing was 96.8 per cent, public health, 51 per cent, education was 80.5 per cent, and arts and sciences was 43.5 per cent women," she said.

With the exception of arts and sciences, Ferguson stated that these fields were, "extensions of women's traditionally supported, child orientated role."

Ferguson pointed out that the cry for "equal pay for equal work" is meaningless because women, blacks and Puerto Ricans don't get the jobs with the better pay. They are assigned to the lower echalon positions.

"Women have been taught by the socialization process to do the shit work," said Ferguson. "It's part of the extension of their role in the home. Women are supposedly more patient, caring and humanistic."

Ferguson stated that in a socialist state there would be free child care, free education to eliminate unemployment, and no inflationary spiral.

"Women can't get better jobs now because they are locked in the home with children. Poor women can't afford babysitters.

"Women aren't going to be liberated until they're relieved of this pressure," she said.

Ferguson listed concrete issues which the Valley Women's Center organizes around:

—Work (Helping working women gain better pay and working conditions.)

—Community control issues:

—Working against nuclear power plants

—Free health care

—Better controlled public education (non-sexist, non-racist, non-classist education)

—Tenants rights (Poor women can't get housing)

Nomination papers for the undergraduate Student Senate are due Wednesday at 5 p.m. in Student Union room 420 Senate Speaker Cindy McGrath said yesterday.

She said students wishing to run for election as their dormitory's representative on the senate should obtain papers from room 420 and solicit 25 signatures from dorm-mates to be eligible.

The Student Senate has sole authority for the dispersal of $992,000 in student fees collected by the University on the tuition semester bills.

The funds are used to support the Collegian, WMUA, the Outing Club, Black Mass Communications Project and hundreds of other campus activities.

Freshmen and sophomores are eligible.

The following senate seats have no candidates as yet: Baker: 2, Chadbourne: 1, Johnson: 1, Brett: 1, Gorman: 1, Dickinson: 1, Field: 1, Coolidge Middle: 1, Kennedy Upper: 1, Adams Lower: 1, JQA Lower: 1, JQA Middle: 1, Washington Middle: 1, Prince: 2, Third World: 15, Greeks: 6, Commuters: 15.

After Professor Ferguson finished her 30 minute presentation which was designed to "raise questions", a discussion began among the approximate 75 people in attendance.

The topic centered mainly on the issue of women working solely with other women in the struggle for equality, versus women working with men and helping them understand where changes are needed in society.

A dark-haired woman wearing a white apron who explained that she was on a break from working in the coffee shop, spoke for a merging of effort between the sexes. "Until we see that we're all going to benefit from this," she said, "we're all just going to fall back into the same problem.

"Men can be hurt by nuclear power just as much as women can. And there are plenty of men as well as women who have been unjustly sentenced to jail," the woman pointed out, before leaving to get back to work.

Several women voiced support of the above statement while others urged a separatist position.

A blond bearded man spoke in opposition to Ferguson's remarks saying that she was "assuming everything was rosy in the Soviet Union."

He said that women in the Soviet Union still have the double responsibility of a full-time job plus caring for the children after work. "Who washes the dishes?" he asked.

One woman countered his argument by repeating the view of Angela Davis which is that each country develops its own brand of socialism.

The discussion moved back to the separatism issue and Ann Ferguson said that some women feel intimidated by men and so therefore would only get involved in current affairs if able to do so with other women. "Men tend to take over a discussion," she said.

A woman wearing waist-length dark hair supported this and cited the SDS movement in which the men eventually took over and "the women were going out for coffee".

One woman said that on one hand she was "frustrated with men who don't care about women's issues," while she could also sympathize with men like her husband and her brother who wanted to get involved somehow with the movement but couldn't because of separatism.

Another women said, "We must work with men and teach them. We must make men clean up their act."

Tobin damage repairs to begin in November

by DEBBI DIMASSIMO
Staff Reporter

Extensive repairs on Tobin Hall's fire-damaged fifth floor will begin in early November, almost two years after the blaze, according to Edward Hayes, Chief Designing Construction Engineer at UMass.

An estimated $160,000 will be spent to restore the building to its original condition and replace equipment. The January, 1973 fire destroyed the main corridor on the floor, a small computer, and several animal experimentation laboratories.

The 20-month delay is a result of the state's policy of self-insurance. Massachusetts does not carry private insurance on its structures, and funds must be appropriated by the legislature. "This process usually takes a full year," said Hayes.

The appropriation will pay for the restoration of the floor to its original condition but will not pay the costs of equipment replacement.

The contract for the repairs has been awarded to J.W. Prout Company of West Roxbury, whose bid was approximately $68,000. Tentative completion date for the project is September, 1975, according to Hayes.

Police conduct four UMass drug arrests

By RICK DUCEY
Staff Reporter

UMass detective and patrol divisions in a joint effort made 4 drug related arrests here Friday afternoon.

An investigation which ended up in the confiscation of a pound of marijuana, several ounces of hashish and drug apparatus as evidence, began with the report of an armed robbery occuring in Webster dorm.

The caller claimed that stereo system had been stolen from him by three armed males. At the station he gave a description of the suspects' car and with the help of the "Identi-Kit" likenesses of the three suspects were sketched.

The car, located in Southwest lot, was kept under surveillance for two hours when two males were seen entering it. They were stopped and brought into the station. Between the "Identi-Kit" sketch and the complaintant, positive identification was established for one of the two.

The suspect then claimed that it was not the stereo but drugs that were ripped off. At the time, it was not certain whether or not a stereo was involved, but there will be further investigation into the alleged incident declared Capt. Joyce.

Arrested for unarmed robbery and assault and battery were: Courtland M. Roberts, Donald Powell and Antone J. Mendes, Jr. Arrested for possession of and possession of with intent to sell marijuana and hashish was Harry T. Spohr. Their arraignment was to be held Saturday morning at 9:00.

Teachers unprepared for job

By Staff Reporters

Bill cosby, the first Black to star in a TV series and UMass graduate student, said Saturday night that universities are not preparing students for realistic teaching situations.

Cosby, a third-year doctoral student in the School of Education spoke before 430 faculty and administrators participating in an international conference on improving university teaching.

"Graduates go into the cities and are shocked and not prepared to teach. The universities should get teachers out on the street and see the area they will be working in" he said.

In an effort to upgrade education and aid the teacher Cosby said "we should use visual aids in such a way to tell a story better than the teacher" he said.

Cosby has written three books and produced three films. Also, Fat Albert, a cartoon series depicting life in the ghetto, is part of his PHD thesis.

Cosby, 37 years old said he entered the education field late but he plans to participate more in education with the urban, lower economic groups in mind.

The conference is jointly sponsored by the University and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), and participants are from the United States and several foreign countries. The conference is the first one to discuss means to objectively measure teaching quality, according to its organizers. It began on Friday and will last until Tuesday.

Among other speakers were HEW administrator Virginia B. Smith and UMass President Robert C. Wood. Wood will speak tonight.

"The external forces that are pressuring for change in higher education's role are pressuring for increasing rigidification," Smith told a dinner audience Friday.

Smith, director of the Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary education at HEW said it is difficult to get funding to improve teaching because there are no established methods for improvement.

She said Congressmen and legislators who ask for cost-effectiveness in teaching improvement programs make it difficult to get the funds.

"Demonstrating cost effectiveness is very difficult to do if the techniques have not become available in the field for guaging effectiveness," the former University of California-Berkeley administrator said.

UMass school of education dean Dwight D. Allen, a nationally-known educational innovator, said the conference is trying to "expose isolated pockets" of experimentation in teaching improvement and bring them together.

"Universities are acting pretty much at the level of rhetoric in terms of teaching improvement," according to Allen, because they are "unwilling to accept the consequences" of evidence which shows some teachers' ineffectiveness.

"Someone who knows a lot and can't teach it isn't very useful as a teacher," he said Friday night. He said the crucial political problem facing teacher improvement is "whether we are willing to deal with vested interests."

Black artists exhibit many creative arts

by JACK CAHILL
Below the Salt Staff

Bowker auditorium Saturday night witnessed a combination of the musical-spiritual forces of the Voices of New Africa choir and the Collective Black Artists Ensemble big band in an inspirational musical journey entitled "Ritual: The Evolution of Afrikan-American Music."

Presented by the Fine Arts Council, this educational program consisted of many forms of expression: Diana Ramos' fluid dancing, a running narration of musicologist-choir conductor Dr. Horace Boyer, poetry, a slide collage, plus the wide gamut of musical styles handled so well by vocalist Joe Lee Wilson and the stellar CBA band.

The evening's musical investigation began with percussionist Lawrence Killian demonstrating the earliest form of today's black music, Afrikan drumming.

Dr. Boyer's commentary moved along to the influences on Afrikan music in America, conducting the choir (situated in the balcony) in spirituals, hollers, and folk songs including "Kuumba Ya" "Motherless Child" and the testifying "I Got Religion." The choir and the vocal trio on "I Believe" took hold of the audience's collective soul as they showed the irresistable power of a large goup of inspired voices.

The band, powerful even in a backup role, performed their first feature, Charles Tolliver's ominously beautiful "On The Nile". A rousing original arrangement of "The Lord's Prayer" ended the first part of the concert.

An enthused audience returned after intermission to hear the band perform an excellent set encompassing many important aspects of jazz history. Trumpeter-conductor Jimmy Ownes led off with his own "Lo-Slo Bluze", describing the blues as the common denominator among all styles Afrikan-American music.

Dave Burrell's euphoric composition, "Crucificado," featured Joe Lee Wilson's powerfully agile voice in front of the band in full, hair-raising shout, all exhorted onward by Charles Stephens' upraised trombone cries to a breathtaking finale. Tenorist Roland Alexander soloed well on Thelonius Monk's moody classic "Ruby, My Dear."

A medley of pieces using different types of Afrikan-calypso rhythms followed and included Cecil Payne's "Flying Fish" and the Dizzy Gillespie opus "Tin Tin Deo," all of which were held together perfectly by Reggie Workman's propulsive, supple bass lines. "Parker's Legacy", dedicated to Charlie Parker, swung a la bebop and was further highlighted by a gloriously bitchy sax section solo.

The late Duke Ellington's "Come Sunday" was sung well night perfectly by the much-appreciated Joe Lee Wilson, and Count Basie was honored by two tunes: "Down for the Count" and "Shiny Stockings." Frank Foster, a long time pillar of the Basie band, blew such a searing alto solo on the former that he was motioned by conductor Jimmy Owens to take another chorus, which he did most gladly.

"Heritage Hum" by Jimmy Heath reflected its title and this version employed the choir humming deep and low, three dancers and poetry by Black Rose. Stanley Cowell's "Abscretions", led by Cecil Bridgewater's trumpet above the band, closed the concert to a well-deserved standing ovation, returned by the appreciative members of the band.

Words of thanks were offered by Reggie Workman, former faculty member, who received a plaque commemorating his educational and inspirational contributions to UMass during his 3 year stay. Audience and performers left fulfilled and stimulated from Bowker that night.

Prof. James to lecture on "Native Son"

Prof. C.L.R. James, distinguished professor of literature at Federal City College in Washington will deliver the second lecture on Richard Wright's famed novel "Native Son" tonight at 8 in Herter room 231.

The "notes on a Native Son" lecture series is sponsored by the commuter assembly.

Mr. James was an organizer of the Pan-Africanist Conference and is the author of "Black Jacobins, the History of the Haitian Revolts." He was an intimate friend of Wright and will offer personal observations on the black literary giant.

A reception will follow his talk in the Center for Racial Understanding at the faculty resident apartment in Moore House (Southwest).

The lecture is free and open to the public.

Bilodeau modeling state proposal for servicing of mentally retarded

By LANA FISCHER
Staff Reporter

Attorney Ray Bilodeau, director of the Mental Retardation Project (MERREP), conducted a panel discussion recently at St. John's Episcopal Church.

He stated that the pilot project hoped to use other people's experiences to discover the kinds of problems that the mentally retarded face. "Our goal is to set up a model proposal for statewide services," said Bilodeau to an audience of 50 concerned citizens.

The panel of four, consisting of Atty. Oliver Fowlkes, Dr. Benjamin Ricci, Atty. John Callahan, and Michael Miskiv were each given 15 minutes to speak.

"The greatest miscarriage of justice in the Commonwealth concerning mentally retarded citizens was in the case of The Commonwealth of Massachusetts vs. Daniels, declared Ricci, President of Belchertown State School Friends Association.

Ricci was referring to Russell Daniels, a former resident of Belchertown State School, who was convicted of murder last year and whose case is now being appealed.

"The Commonwealth was out to lunch as it always has been," said Ricci. "If the case is not overturned in 6 months it will be brought to the Supreme Court," he added.

With the MERREP, there is now "an opportunity in adversity, rather than adversity in opportunity," said Ricci who continued by citing twenty problems facing the mentally retarded pprson.

"The most important item on this laundry list, I think, is the question of civil rights and privileges which will take some time to solve," he concluded.

Fowlkes, Professor of Legal Studies at Hampshire College and Treasurer of the Mental Health Advisory Committee, reviewed the ramifications of acts concerning the mentally retarded.

He cited Chapter 893, passed in 1973, as having established legal representation that would work in the institutions. This covers an executive staff who gather a list of attorneys and their qualifications, but the law does not provide funds to pay the lawyers, said Fowlkes. He said the staff has to appeal to the local Bar Association to pay the bill.

"A special body of lawyers is needed for people with mentally retarded backgrounds, said Fowlkes.

Miskiv, CERC team staff at the Mass. Dept. of Health in Region I, spoke of situations that the mentally retarded person finds in court.

"The police look for deviant behavior in a community and the mentally retarded are considered part of this deviant society and, thus, reinforces this kind of thinking that dates from the early 1900's to the present day," said Miskiv.

He explained that when a mentally retarded person is arrested and undergoes the standard questioning by the police they are usually very passive in their reactions because they want to please ... their defense or ego strengths break down rapidly ... they will say 'yes' because they can't deal with hostility."

The court proceeds to check the person's competency through the court clinic where he/ she is evaluated by the psychiatrist and given further tests by the psychologist, continued Miskiv.

Because the psychologist is given a high salary, the tests (Stanford-Binet, etc.) are hurried and he has a tendency to give low scores; thus, "the label of mental retardation is tagged on a person," said Miskiv.

Atty. Callahan, District Attorney for the Hampshire/ Franklin counties, began his defense by saying that the "law enforcement has been trying to educate police officers on Mental Retardation issues to provide sufficient sensitivity to the problem, but it hasn't been doing as much as it should."

He cited the 1967 Massachusetts Supreme Court decision which states that a person is not criminally responsible if he is mentally retarded. "Deciding this point is the problem," Callahan said.

The panel was then open for questions from the audience where the issues of release, guardianship and competency arose.

Miskiv clarified that a competency test may be given when someone (family) feels threatened by the person's presence and that money interests are usually involved.

One question from the audience was, if by giving civil rights to the mentally retarded person," does that erode the possibility of intervention of therapeutic treatment on the part of community agencies."

Fowlkes responded that if a person has the right to refuse treatment then it's necessary to clarify certain bounds and that he only has a choice if he's competent.

When the question of leaving an institution arose, Bilodeau responded by saying that only a person who entered voluntarily can leave and only after a 3-day request notice has been submitted.

Bilodeau added that these programs are part of the "process of normalization."

Ford meets exporters today, to seek trade limitations

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Ford planned to test further his "jawboning" tactics for reversing grain deals for the Soviet Union when top administration aides meet with some of the nation's largest exporters today.

The meeting follows his weekend success in obtaining cancellation of contracts by two major grain companies calling for export of 3.4 million tons of corn and wheat in a year of disappointing American harvests.

The 2 p.m. EDT meeting at the Agriculture Department will focus on methods for reporting exports under a "voluntary cooperation" system. The White House said representatives from the Commerce, Agriculture and state Departments and the National Security Council will attend.

The North American Grain Exporters, Inc. and the Federal Grain Cooperatives, both organizations of exporters, and eight separate companies will represent the exporters.

Monday's scheduled talks resulted in a one-day postponement of a hearing by Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., who contends the grain companies should have advised the White House before signing the new Soviet deal.

The White House said it did not learn of the new contracts until late last week, after the deals were closed.

Ford will have more than his own persuasive powers behind him when he talks to the grain companies. A statement released late Saturday pointedly noted that dealer cooperation will help avoid another alternative - general export controls, anathema to farmers who still raise more wheat and other grains than any other nation and need export markets.

The meeting is intended to help assure an adequate domestic grain supply while allowing at least some export, the White House said.

In announcing the Monday meeting, the White House statement said "It is anticipated that this voluntary cooperative effort will enable the United States to avoid the imposition of general export controls."

Jackson, who is an all-but announced 1976 presidential candidate, yesterday postponed his meeting of the Senate Investigations subcommittee until tomorrow because of the dealer meeting at the White House.

The Washington State Democrat wants to know why the White House was not informed of the Soviet negotiations during a period when food prices are rising, partly because of the high cost of feed, especially corn, and prospects of a harvest hit by both drought.

Chile buying U.S. military planes; expects invasion from Peru

SANTIAGO, Chile [AP] - Chile is quietly buying supersonic jet fighters and close air support attack planes from the United States in a multimillion dollar arms deal, it was learned yesterday.

Diplomatic and other sources say the military government is purchasing the aircraft and looking for additional weaponry because of concern that Peru may eventually go to war against Chile.

A high source in the Chilean air force confirmed the arms deal but said he is "optimistic" about future relations with Peru's military regime.

Peruvian officials have denied publicly that they want to wage war on Chile, and Chilean officials also have said they maintain cordial relations with their northern neighbor.

The Chilean military overthrew the government of Marxist President Salvador Allende 13 months ago. Thousands of Allende supporters went into exile or were rounded up and imprisoned.

Although Chile is in a state of siege, foreign sources say the aircraft purchases are being made with an eye to defense and not for use against Chileans.

For internal security reasons, they say the bulk of the armed forces are now stationed in and around the capital, leaving border areas undermanned.

The sources said the Chileans are paying $60 million for 18 F5E Freedom Fighter jets, the latest model of a fighter especially produced for developing coutnries

Hawthorne, Calif.

Delivery of the first units are expected in about two years and in the interim, Chilean air force pilots are flying training models in the United States.

They said Chile has paid an initial down payment of $6 million for the Freedom Fighters and the balance of the money will be paid over eight years.

In addition, Chilean air force and other sources said 36 A37B close air support attack planes, manufactured by Cessna and used by U.S. pilots in Vietnam, are being purchased. Each aircraft is worth about $300,000.

McGovern outspends Senate opponent 6-1

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., has spent six times more than his Republican opponent in his bid to win re-election to a third term.

But the challenger, ex-POW Leo K. Thorsness, has received three times as many connributions of $1,000 or more from individuals, nearly all-out-of-state, and has received sizeable sums from two U.S. ambassadors.

McGovern, the 1972 Democratic presidential nominee, started the year with a large financial advantage - $212,872 in various campaign committees.

This was after spending $552,711 in the re-election effort last year. Thorsness began the year with a $750 debt and faced a GOP primary. He did not begin active campaigning until this year.

The financial data was compiled by UPI after a search of campaign reports filed with the Secretary of the Senate by the two candidates over the past two years.

The records show McGovern

during the two years, up to Sept. 1 of this year, while Thorsness received only $270,000.

Expenditures mirrored contributions, with McGovern's three committees spending $1,326,685, compared to Thorsness' $217,000.

Included in large, itemized contributions to Thorsness' campaign were $2,000 from John P. Humes, U.S. ambassador to Austria, and $500 from Shelby C. Davis, U.S. ambassador to Switzerland, each total in two separate contributions.

Clemency board head stresses fairness

Goodell predicts acceptance of amnesty plan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Charles Goodell, chairman of the presidential clemency board for Vietnam war resisters and military deserters, predicted yesterday that President Ford's earned re-entry program ultimately will be accepted by both pro and anti-amnesty organizations.

"I think the initial reaction of the veterans groups and the representatives of the resisters in Canada...was predictable," Goodell said.

"They are very sincere, they have very strong views. On the other hand, I think as they see this program operate, assuming it operates fairly, I think a great many of them are going to come around — even the veterans organizations and the resister groups."

But Goodell, interviewed on Washington Window UPI Audio, declined to predict how many resisters might come back from self-imposed exile to take advantage of the earned re-entry program.

Goodell's clemency board, which is scheduled to hold its second meeting today, handles only the cases of those already convicted of either draft violations or desertion of the military.

At the same time, Goodell stressed what he believed was the fairness of Ford's program. He took exception to resisters who claim the program is punitive.

"I believe that every American has the obligation to serve the military in peace and in war, according to the law," said Goodell, an early opponent of the Vietnam war.

He said that although the resisters found it impossible to discharge the obligations during the Vietnam conflict, now Ford is giving them the opportunity "to come back and discharge that obligation in a completely peaceful, constructive way that is consistent with their conscience."

At least one organization, however, the American Civil Liberties Union, has announced it is prepared to challenge the legality of some aspects of Ford's program — the loyalty oaths demanded of returnees and the requirement that returnees surrender some Constitutional rights before being admitted to the program.

Ford's economic message tomorrow to stress restraint, sacrifice

WASHINGTON (UPI) President Ford's anti-inflation message tomorrow will ask for "restraint, self-discipline and sacrifice", from all sections of the nation, including the federal government, a White House aide said yesterday.

Ford spent one hour and 15 minutes with his key economic advisors yesterday afternoon, making final choices on economic and energy conservation programs that will be announced to a joint session of Congress and a nationwide audience tomorrow afternoon.

It was understood Ford's proposals would focus on measures to increase production and conserve supplies of food and energy, the two major sources of the rampant inflation now running at an annual rate of about 12 percent.

There will also be programs dealing with the depressed housing, industry, unemployment, record high interest rates and the credit squeeze on banks and businesses, sources said.

"Almost all major decisions have been made," Ford's press secretary Ron Nessen told reporters after the final strategy session in the Cabinet room.

The press aide said Ford would ask Americans "to exhibit restraint, self-discipline and sacrifice and I want to emphasize that the government itself is not exempt from any of these three."

But Nessen stressed that the burdens the President will ask the nation to shoulder "will be distributed equally...so that everybody bears their just share."

The proposals should not be seen as a "shopping list" from which Congress can adopt the items it finds most palatable, Nessen said.

Rather, he said, Congress and the public must adopt and carry through the entire package if it is to meet Ford's previously stated goal of bringing inflation "under control" by July 4, 1976, the nation's 200th birthday.

The long-awaited, anti-inflation statement is, in part, an outgrowth of a month of conferences that ended in last weekend's two-day summit meeting here.

Boston busing protests include motorcade, religion

BOSTON (UPI) — Anti-busing forces opened the fourth week of their battle against court ordered school desegregation yesterday with a peaceful motorcade and the beginning of a three days of religious observances.

About 200 opponents of the busing program which has affected about half of the city's 94,000 students, took part in a motorcade and demonstration outside the Statler Hilton Hotel in the business district of the city.

They attempted to enlist the support of the Massachusetts Building and Construction Trades Council, which was holding a convention at the hotel.

The 100 car motorcade, horns blaring and placards waving, drove from South Boston to the hotel, where the demonstrators held a rally.

Police reported no arrests for incidents.

Meanwhile, a spokeswoman for the South Boston Home and School Association, Mrs. Rita Growl, said her organization was sponsoring a three day rosary recital and had scheduled an ecumenical service today as another part of the protest against the busing program ordered by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity.

Police criticized

BOSTON (UPI) — About 1,000 persons carried out a noisy motorcade around the city's police headquarters yesterday, protesting police conduct in a night spot melee the previous night, which left eight persons injured.

The demonstrators displayed signs demanding a meeting with Police Commissioner Robert J. di Grazia, who later in the day issued a statement promising a "complete investigation" into the incident.

The demonstrators, some carrying signs such as "di Grazia: What's next, gas chambers?" motorcaded from Castle Island in South Boston and remained at the headquarters building on Berkley Street for several hours, blocking off several streets, and backing up traffic as far as a half a mile away.

There were no arrests and no incidents.

Oil spills in Sound

NEW HAVEN (AP) — About 60,000 gallons of oil escaped into New Haven harbor from a tanker early yesterday and another 42,000 gallons was contained in water around the ship by booms, a Coast Guard spokesman said.

He termed the spillage as being intermediate to major.

The oil seeped into Long Island Sound and washed up onto several city beaches by late yesterday morning, the spokesman said.

Drug arrests made

NEW YORK (UPI) — Forty-five persons, mostly from Colombia, allegedly involved in smuggling hundreds of pounds of cocaine and marijuana into the New York area from Latin America, were arrested over the weekend, federal and city law enforcement officials disclosed yesterday.

Officials said the arrests brought to 150 the number of persons taken into custody over the last several months as part of a continuing investigation into narcotics traffic.

Officials stressed the series of arrests did not involve any single drug ring but said the activities of those seized were interrelated, and that all the arrests were part of the same investigation.

Nixon recuperating

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (UPI) — Former President Richard M. Nixon recuperated from his bout with phlebitis and blood clots at his home yesterday, with the decision on his subpoenaed testimony in the Watergate coverup trial still up in the air.

Nixon's physician, Dr. John Lungren, says the former President is too sick to appear at the trial in person — too ill even to give a written deposition in the case for the "next few weeks."

This biography of Dr. C.L.R. James was prepared by Research Institute a non-profit organization.

Although virtually unknown to all but the most astute students of history in the United States, C.L.R. James stands among the world's greatest historians. Born in 1901 in Trinidad, British West Indies, James graduated from Queen Royal College. He wrote the Life of Captain Cipriani, the first political biography to be published in the West Indies in 1932.

That same year he moved to England and became cricket reporter for the Manchester Guardian. A prolific writer, James wrote Minty Alley, a novel which is now being republished in England, and The Case for West Indian Self-Government in 1936. While in England he wrote, performed in, and directed "Toussaint L' Ouveture," a play produced on the London Stage with Paul Robeson.

In 1936, James wrote what could be considered his first major historical work, Black Jacobins, a book which is considered throughout the world as a classic history of the Haitian revolution. This book has been published in paperback form in the United States. In 1937, he wrote and published World Revolution, 1917 to 1936; the original version was published in England, and reprinted in 1970.

Although an important recorder of history, James lived a life which also made history. He helped organize the African International Service Bureau in London from 1936 to 1938, along with George Padmore, Jomo Kenyatta and others, and served as editor of its periodical.

James translated Boris Souvarine's biography of Stalin from the French original, and wrote A History of Pan-African Revolt, in 1938 in London. The later book was reprinted in the United States.

James came to the United States in 1938, after conversations with Leon Trotsky in Mexico. Those conversations were dealing with significance of the race question and other matters and have since been reprinted. While in the United States he lectured coast to coast on the decline of the British Empire, and wrote journalistic pieces and pamphlets on current questions of the day. Among the topics he wrote about were "The Balance Sheet of American Trotskyism," "Education, Agitation and Propaganda," and in 1948, a series of letters on Hegel and Marxism which were published in 1963 as "Notes on the Dialetics"; Notes is currently being prepared for a second edition.

In 1955 James left the United States and returned to the West Indies. In 1956, he published "Every Cook Can Govern", a second edition of "State Capitalism and World Revolution", which was first published in 1950, and had other editions in 1956, and 1969. He also published a classic called "Mariners, Renegades and Castaways", "Herman Melville and the World We Live In". This was done in 1953 while he was still in the United States. Also while in this country, during the 1940's, James organized a sharecroppers group in southwest Missouri, involving many sharecroppers in their first union experience, and a wartime strike.

After returning to the West Indies, James participated in the formation of the People's National Movement, pressing for the independence of Trinidad. Also while in the Indies, he became editor of the journal "The Nation" and secretary of the Federal West Indian Labor Party. In 1961, he published Party Politics in the West Indies in 1962, it was Federation, Why We Failed, Wilson Harris: A Philosophical Approach and Kwame Nkrumah and the West Indies; In 1960 he published Modern Politics, and in 1959, The Artist in the Carribean.

James returned to England in 1961 and again took up reporting cricket. In 1963 he wrote Beyond a Boundry which is now in its third paperback edition. He also contributed to The Cricketer, during this time. In 1966 while reporting cricket tours in the West Indies Islands, James stayed in Trinidad to organize the Workers and Farmers Party and edit its paper which was called We The People.

He went back to England in 1967. While visiting Montreal, Canada, he lectured on The Making of the Carribean Peoples, which was published in two editions, 1968, and 1970. New versions of the play, Toussaint L'Ouverture, premiered at the University of Ibadam in Nigeria.

Given an award by Black Academy of Arts and Letters in New York in 1970, James published "Black Studies and the Contemporary Student," in 1969-1970. A special C.L.R. James Issue of Radical America was published in May of 1970. The title of that issue symbolizes James' position among black people for he serves as tie between "The Old World and the New".

UMass invited to compete for fellowships

The University of Massachusetts has been invited to nominate four seniors and one recent graduate in this year's competition for approximately 100 Danforth Fellowships.

These fellowships are designed for persons who have serious interest in careers of teaching and-or administration in colleges and universitites, and who plan to study for a Ph.D. in any field of study common to the undergraduate liberal arts curriculum in the United States.

During the past eight years, 11 UMass students have received some form of recognition in this competition, and during the past four years, three students have won fellowships. Last year's winner, Janet Berlo, is pursuing a Ph.D. in History of Art at Yale University.

Since the Danforth Foundation itself does not accept direct applications for Fellowships, persons must be nominated by Liaison Officers of their undergraduate institutions. The local campus representative, Associate Dean James Shaw, 210 South College, 545-2627.

Fellowship stipends are based on individual need, but may not exceed $2,025 for single Fellows and $2,200 for married Fellows for the academic year, plus dependency allowances for children and required tuition and fees. The awards are initially made for one year, but are normally renewable until completion of the degree or for a maximum of four years of graduate study.

The Fellowships are open to all qualified persons of any race, creed or citizenship, single or married, although applicants must be under 35 years of age at the time application papers are filed, and may not have undertaken any graduate or professional study beyond the baccalaureate.

All applicants for these Fellowships must take the Graduate Record Examination. October 8 is the last date on which the Educational Testing Service will accept applications for the October 26 examination; applications for the December 14 administration of the GRE should be submitted by November 19.

The Danforth Foundation was created in 1927 by the late Mr. and Mrs. William H. Danforth of St. Louis as a philanthrophy devoted to giving aid and encouragement to persons, to emphasizing the humane values that come from of religious and democratic heritage, and to strenghtening the essential quality of education.

Northeast Utilities denies overcharging fuel customers

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — Northeast Utilities Saturday denied claims it overcharged customers through fuel adjustment charges and said it was in fact still losing money.

Northeast said the fuel adjustment charges do not recover the full actual cost of oil used in generating electricity and warned that without sufficient revenues, reliable service to homes, offices, factories and farms "will be a thing of the past."

Northeast's statement, to be published in Connecticut daily newspapers today, denied as "totally false," allegations that electric companies have illegally computed the fuel adjustment charge on electric bills.

Contrary to claims it was overcharging, Northeast said it "actually failed to recover from June 1, 1973, through last June 30, about $16 million" because of the two month time lag which must pass before utilities can charge the customers.

This is in addition to $2.5 million paid out in the same period to the state under the 5 percent gross earnings tax, according to the statement.

The Canon F-I.
Images are what it's all about.

Photographic equipment can be a trap. Sometimes, you can get so involved with it that you lose sight of your real purpose—making photographs.

The Canon F-1 can help you forget about equipment and concentrate on images. It was designed, and functions, as an extension of your photographic vision. It's responsive in a way that you must experience to appreciate. And since it was conceived as a system camera, every part works together with effortless smoothness, from the more than 40 Canon FD and FL lenses to the over 200 accessories.

The heart of the camera is it's central spot metering system. With it you can use anyone's exposure system, no matter how critical, since it only measures the central 12% of the finder area—regardless of the focal length used.

So if you're spending too much time lately worrying about your equipment, it's time you stopped, and took a good look at the Canon F-1 system, and Canon's other fine cameras—the automatic, electronic EF, the full-feature FTb, and the TLb. If you're interested in images, Canon's your camera.

Howland getting freebees

To the Editor:

I've just read Richard Howland's Legal Advice Column and wish to raise a couple of issues:

First, it is against the American Bar Association's Code of Professional Responsibility for lawyers to solicit business. It states in part, "a lawyer shall not publicize himself, his partner, or associate as a lawyer through newspaper or magazine advertisements..." and "a lawyer shall not recommend employment as a private practitioner, of himself, his partner, or associate to a non-lawyer who has not sought his advice regarding employment of a lawyer." Howland is using the student newspaper to solicit the business of UMass students, couching it in terms of free advice, is this advice actually free?

Second, Mr. Howland is no longer the student lawyer at UMass precisely because he was not responsive to students. For two years many people including myself tried to prevent Howland from being rehired. As a past student senator, I had ample opportunity to view Howland in his position. I found him to be rude and unhelpful. When we started the People's Market I went to Howland to ask about laws regarding such a store. He told me to go look in a law book. Numerous people told me similar experiences they had with Howland. Not very helpful for the $27,000-year salary that students paid him.

Although students do need legal help, I hate to see the Collegian aid Howland in abusing this need and making his living off students, particularly when there is a full legal services office on campus.

Granted, the picture does show Mr. Archie Shepp 'pounding the keys', but since Mr. Shepp has been in the music business for over fifteen years and on the faculty of this university for three, one might expect someone in this vast, cultural wastelenad we know that he is not a "jazz Pianist"*. Arabs not opportunists

To the Editor:

The Monday morning editorial entitled, "Arabs Without Oil: A Big Sandbox," was a shameful display of journalistic talent, but the shame lies in the truth of the matter. Do a majority of Collegian editors truly envision Arabs leaders to be, "opportunists traipsing from country to country endeavoring to pocket quadrillions of dollars, marcs, and yen in return for a pint or two of the black stuff?"

If so, I suggest a close look at John D. and the Rockefeller domination of the worlds oil reserves, and possibly some Near Eastern Studies here at the University.

While condemning what you've termed, "quite stubborn demands to the rest of the world," by the Arabs, you've failed to bat an eyelash at the true cause of inflation in America--monopoly!!

REMEMBER THE ENERGY CRISIS, the greatest fabricated rip-off in history! Only one year ago it was a widely publicized fact [NIxon himself said it] that the Arabs only supply 6 per cent of the oil in America. But while oil company profits are soaring upwards of 50 and 100 per cent, the Arabs are blamed for the high price.

The Seven Sisters, [Standard N.J., Texaco, Standard Calif., Gulf, Mobil, Shell, and British Petroleum] happen to control two-thirds of the world's oil and dominate refining, transporting, and marketing. Granted the Arabs, Iranians, and Venezualans didn't have the technology to develop their reserves, but now they do. Like Angela Davis said, in exposing Rockefeller, he is the opitome of a struggle to, "Take back the oil that people rip off from them."

President Ford has warned against, "artificial rigging of prices," but what right does the U.S. have in setting their own price? And who has done the price rigging?

It is surprising to see a Board of Editors so strongly opposed to corrupt corporate business and government in America that is on the other hand supporting the U.S. and glorifying Kissinger, the man who heads The 40 committee, the CIA.

It appears you've placed Israel above all other political beliefs, and thus are supporting U.S. Imperialism under the guise of Israeli aggression, i.e., if the Arabs won't sell their oil, it will be taken from them. Sadly enough, no one can stop it from happening. You are number one!

Coupons to help needy

To the Editor:

Gamma Sigma Sigma National Service Sorority has been collecting Betty Crocker Coupons during the past year. Thanks to the wonderful contributions that so many people have made, our chapter collected over 50,000 coupons which made us the top in the nation. With these coupons we purchased a wheelchair for Newington Children's Hospital in Connecticut to be used on loan to any needy child.

We urge people to continue with this worthwhile endeavor. Our deadline has been extended indefinitely. Please think of those who are not as fortunate as yourself.

Send the coupons to: Gamma Sigma Sigma, Alpha Theta Chapter, RSO Box 314, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Ethiopian students oppose CIA

We Ethiopian students in Western Massachusetts, in conjunction with our Ethiopian student compatriots all over the world, make the following statements to protest against the C.I.A. backed military rule in Ethiopia.

Delightful of the fact that the archaic and repressive feudal system is fast crumbling under the blows of the rising Ethiopian peoples, and cognizant of the fact that at the present moment there are forces of reaction that try every manoeuver and facile design in a attempt to hoodwink and subvert the genuine upsurge of the Ethiopian people, we want it to be known that we stand in complete solidarity with the heroic masses of Ethiopia in their struggle for peace, justice and democracy.

In light of this:

WE OPPOSE:

(1) The establishment of a military regime - provisional of otherwise;

(2) C.I.A.'s involvement in our country's internal affairs;

(3) The restoration of the monarchy under whatever guise;

(4) The military junta's attempt to impose censorship, suppression of all democratic liberties and the arrest of progressive labor-union leaders, students and intellectuals.

WE WHOLEHEARTEDLY SUPPORT:

The struggle of the Ethiopian people against Imperialism, Feudalism and military rule.

WE DEMAND:

(1) The unconditional and immediate creation of a civilian, provisional and democratic government;

(2) The enactment of a law guaranteeing the right of any class or social group to form its own political party without any interference;

(3) The immediate implementation of the call, "LAND TO THE TILLER";

(4) The decreeing of labor legislation which protects the basic rights of the working class;

(5) The constitutional guarantee for equality between nationalities, sexes, religions, languages, cultures, etc.;

(6) The guaranteeing of freedom of association, press, assembly, speech and etc.;

We appeal to all progressive forces in the United States to pressure their government to stop its subversive activities in the internal affairs of the people of Ethiopia and also to cease to prop-up fascist military dictatorships elsewhere in the world.

Mackimmie misunderstood

By JERALD KASSNER

The halls are quiet now.

An occasional cigarette butt, or perhaps a half-full beer can remain as leftovers of a Saturday night dorm party. Dorm parties are not uncommon in Southwest. As a matter of fact, they have developed into a kind of institution, a reason for high school seniors to call UMass a zoo, famous for its wild social life.

But this is Mackimmie House. A place where parties aren't supposed to happen, a place reserved as a welcoming committee for social organizations that can't seem to gain acceptance elsewhere on campus. Mackimmie opens its doors to Third-World, anti-sexist, feminist, and gay groups; people who are willing to fight for their rights, so that others may not have to.

So what kind of place is this for a party anyway? Don't those people know that groups of that sort don't party? Aren't they too busy fighting social oppression to engage in dorm parties?

When the questions cease, and the initial astonishment of it all passes, an astounding discovery is made. Behind the protesting left-wing radical beliefs (as some would put it), there lies a person. A very real person. A person who goes to classes, studies, eats at the dining commons, and yes, even goes to dorm parties, just like everyone else. Why, you could even go so far as to call these people regular guys. Real UMies, just like the ones in Kennedy Tower, or Patterson House, or any other of the multitude of residence halls located at UMass.

Then why all the fuss? Surely, we're far too intelligent to believe that these people are really any different than you or I.

The real problem lies within one's mind. People have a tendency to develop generalities and stereotypes about things that they actually know very little about. They base their opinions on rumors, or trust that every person, place, or thing will live up to its given reputation, whatever that may be.

No, people will form judgements on what they hear, and not from what they've experienced. And that's what's wrong with society today. Maybe if people would stop and think before they make their judgements, they would realize the senselessness of it all. However, there are those who insist that people have their opinions, and nothing but nothing is going to change them. But people do have brains, and unlike most other animals, they are capable of reasoning. If people would just open their minds, and widen the narrow streets inside, maybe they would see that wherever you go, people are people are people...

But what's the use of telling you all of this? As long as there is black and white, there will always be racism, and as long as there is male and female there will always be sexism. Can we really expect people to change their minds after years of conditioning? Probably not. But there is one thing that we can expect them to do.

They can try. They can try to accept people for what they are, human beings, rather than turning and shaking their heads, ignoring the message that is desperately trying to get out.

So you see, Mackimmie may be different insofar as its social views are concerned, but the people living there are just like everyone else. Yes, there are dorm parties at Mackimmie, and regular people go to them.

The ultimate, naked truth

Rufus was asleep in his infirmary bed, dreaming madly. He dreamed he was in a court of law in the year 2054, when the truth was outlawed and lying was a noble pastime. Journalists were exiled and authors of fiction were hailed as imaginative souls. Deceiving, conniving politicians were hailed as clever and tricky, while scientists were sought out and shot by firing squads. Statues of Richard M. Nixon were constructed in town squares, with the inscription: "He fooled all of the people all of the time." The mere mention of Lord Nixon's name brought tears to citizen's eyes, cheers to their lips. As one Lions Club President once put it on Nixon's birthday, "Why, he even had a dishonest face!!"

Rufus was in court for truthing an undercover agent, who had approached Rufus on a busy street outside a McDonald's and asked him if he had any spare change. In his haste, Rufus answered honestly that he did, and was promptly arrested and brought to court.

On the stand, Rufus was trying his damnedest to sputter and spout lie and lie, while the prosecuting attorney was demanding that he respond faster and faster to the questions. Rufus kept up the pace, following lie with imaginative lie, and the jury cheered him on, pleased with his performance, gradually becoming convinced that Rufus was indeed an honorable liar.

Finally, the prosecuting attorney stabbed a finger at Rufus and demanded: "Are you lying??"

Rufus was flabbergasted. He didn't know how to answer. The D.A. repeated the question, louder and louder. The jury held its breath. The judge banged his gavel....

Rufus awoke, breathing hard, the banging of the gavel echoing through his head. Half alert, he realized someone was banging on his infirmary door. "COME IN," he yelled, hobbling to the door and wrapping his bathrobe around himself. He opened the door, and there stood the most beautiful young woman he had ever set eyes on.

"Welllll, hellllllo..." he smiled.

"Hello, my name is Joyce and I'm from the Campus Crisscross Crusaders," the woman recited in a much-too-pleasant voice. "I've come to tell you about... The Truth!

Rufus was stunned.

"The Truth??!!" he said, frowning. "The Truth??" He was outraged. "You wanna know The Truth?" he hollered. "I'll show you The Truth!!"

Whereby, in one sudden motion he opened his bathrobe, extending his arms Dracula-style.

"There!!" he cried defiantly. "There's The Truth!! The ultimate, naked Truth!!" And he proceeded to laugh like a moron. The girl smiled, shook her head, and left.

Rufus hobbled back to his bed, muttering to himself, "The Truth, The Truth," over and over. It reminded him of a philosophy class freshman year, when the prof assigned each student a 250-word essay: "What Is The Truth?"

"The Truth was discovered in the early 1400s by Leonardo da Vinci, who correctly asserted, years before his time, that it had something to do with carbon atoms. Years later, in 1892, a gentleman named Galileo, in his quest for the perfect wine, found that The Truth was not carbon atoms at all; rather, it had to do with uranium atoms. Modern research has shown, however, that nuclear power is the answer, although solar energy is not out of the question ..." And so forth.

The prof gave Rufus an 'A', and wrote, "Clear, logical thinking," in the margin on the last page.

At the next class, the prof informed the class that no one had written the right answer, and proceeded to tell the class what The Truth was, a lecture which became known as The Horse's Ass Theory.

"The Truth," he explained, "is this. All the world is an electron. That's right," he repeated. "Planet earth is an electron in an atom which has, at its nucleus, the sun. The solar system is an atom in a molecule which is known by humans, as The Universe. The Universe, as we know it, is one molecule which, along with millions and billions of other molecules, composes a gigantic horse's ass." He paused here.

"And the function of human beings and all other life in our universe," he concluded, "is to pray, day and night, that that horse, that gigantic horse, does not move his bowels. That, my friends, is The Truth."

Go for the big one

"BBBRRRIINNGGGG!!! BBRRINGG!"

"Yes Hello. White House Press Secretary, Ron Nessen, May I be of service?"

"Yes, yes you may. I'd like to talk to Gerry Ford. I hear he's been having trouble with his ballclub."

"Well, Coach Ford is a busy man. Not just anybody can talk to him. Are you with the local Press?"

"No, not exactly. I'm the Head Coach of that other ballclub in town, the Washington Redpersons. My name is George Allen."

"Yes, yes, Coach Allen of course. How is your team doing?"

"Fine, fine, but it's not my team that I'm worried about. It's your team. Coach Ford seems to be having a tough time gaining yardage. So I just throught I'd call and give him a play or two that would work against a tough Inflation Defense, and help him get that valuable first down."

"That's very kind of you, but......"

"Ya know Ron, I just wanna say that I really appreciated when our last Head Coach — what was that dude's name, the one that got canned — Nixon? I appreciated when he called me with some plays. Not that we ever used them, it seems he didn't know that holding and clipping were against the rules, and we didn't have the equipment to bug the other team's huddle. But it was the thought that counted."

"Yes, I know Coach Allen, but Coach Ford just doesn't run that kind of a ship. He just doesn't......"

"And that's why I called. When I heard that his team was losing some big games, I thought that I'd take the initiative this time and call in some plays myself."

"But Coach......"

"Yes I know. The Redpersons aren't doing so well either this year. But we've had some good seasons lately. Unlike Coach Ford's team, we have a veteran ballclub which just doesn't make those rookie mistakes. It bothered me to see Coach Ford cut some of the valuable vets with so much experience. People like "Hardass" Al Haig and Big Jim Schlesinger were put on waivers. And Ron Ziegler was given his unconditional release."

"Yes Coach Allen, Coach Ford decided to go with Youth which he feels will turn the team's fortunes around. Why with a little experience......"

"Youth! Schmouth! I say go with the vets. Not only that, he made a bad decision for his Assistant Coach. Why the last team that man coached, up in New York State, when they had a players strike, instead of waiting for the vets to finally report as they always do in the end, he had 39 of em shot, killed and then blackballed from the League. What kind of Football is that?"

"Yes, but that can be explained. You see, Coach Rocke had no choice but to......"

What Coach Ford needs is a solid Defense. You can't win without a Defense. And the best Defense is a good Offense. With a few smart draft choices, and maybe a couple of free agents from ROTC (Gook-Shooting 350), you can do wonders. Also it would be smart to send Henry on a few flairs deep......"

"Listen Coach Allen. One thing Coach Ford will not do is reinstitute the Draft. As a matter of fact, he's even offered to let the players who jumped the League to play in Canada, the opportunity to play in our League again. Why just look around, you'll see some of them playing already."

Then how can you explain Coach Ford's biggest loss — that of letting former Coach Nixon quit and still keep all the money on his contract. You know some people were ready to kill that guy when they found out he wanted to sell the Franchise down the river."

"Yes of course, but......"

"Listen Ron. I'll just give you one last piece of advice. When all else fails, use the Secret Weapon!"

"What's that?"

"Throw the BOMB! Go For The Big One! SCORE!!!"

"NO!!!!"

The executive branch: Give it back

By RICHARD WRIGHT

The founding fathers faced a decision two hundred years ago, the results of which are still being evaluated today. The Constitution was the culmination of centuries of political thought by free men trying to establish a system of government that provided for the common interests of all people. The singularly most innovative component of this radical Constitution was the inclusion of three separate branches to administer the new social order. Most particularly the decision on the structure of the Executive branch is a timely issue today, for it is in the Executive branch that the people lost contact with those who govern.

The Legislature represents pockets of people, ranging from small geographic districts to entire states. The Judicial branch can be approached by any individual or group to litigate their grievance or charge. But the Executive branch remains after nearly two hundred years, almost completely out of touch with the role it should be playing as the chief executor of the laws of the land. It is this branch that has established intriging and intrigue-filled little semi-official organs of authority that pursue the course of manipulating national and international affairs. The White House is surrounded by people who are expected to be the experts in economics, social planning, defense tactics, and especially political knowhow. These experts have the answers that the Chief Executive wants to hear, and that almost always the Congress and the Courts cannot get until it's been legitimized by Executive order.

With an amazing consistency, almost to be considered of frightening proportions, the Executive branch has embarked with increasing regularity into the areas of domestic and global affairs that perhaps would be best left in the hands of the less presumptuous Legislative branch. As the Executive branch surrounds itself with the 'instant-answer expert, the Congress suffers the embarrassing condition of always playing catch-up with the constituencies back home. How many times lately have we heard the admonition: "Well, you know, the President probably knows more about it than any of the rest of us, you know, he has all those sources of information, all those experts from the great Ivy League Universities, well, you know".

If all of this expert advice is so infallible, and so tuned in to what this nation is all about, then how do we explain away inflation, the need to talk about amnesty or pardons, oil shortages, pollution and all the rest? The Executive branch should have a direct link to the electorate by elimination of the electoral college and the removal of the two term limit on Presidential terms. These two steps alone would return the Executive branch to a more political hot seat, rather than the final shot for old politicians to take a few swats at those people or nations who irritated them on their way up the ladder.

The founding fathers did not want us to be subjected to omnipotence of any degree in the Executive branch, and unless we return the occupant of that seat to the people at large, (the real experts in our democracy), then we will continue to be faced with mere men grasping at the strings of immortality.

Richard Wright is a Collegian commentator.

The heat's on at UMass: Part coal and part oil

By DAN LaBONTE
Staff Correspondent

The University's $3-million oil burning heating system will go on a part-time operating schedule within the next few weeks, according to T. T. P. DeLesdernier, chief utility engineer.

"Although the system is capable of heating the entire campus, it will operate in conjunction with the old coal burner for the next few years until all the bugs can be worked out," he said.

The campus has been heated in the past primarily by coal, with occasional use of natural gas when it could be bought at good prices, DeLesdernier said.

The University decided to convert to oil in 1967 and the State Legislature appropriated $3,352,000 for the system.

A comprehensive site selection and economic study was done at that time and the Tilson Farms location was chosen in view of possible expansion if needed, he said. At present, the two oil tanks are capable of storing up to half a million gallons of 6 grade oil each.

The price for coal and oil has over the years remained nearly the same. DeLesdernier said oil heating is better however since it is cleaner, more convenient, and saves on labor.

Originally scheduled to begin operation early last fall, the oil system was delayed due to labor strikes and material shortages until October of this year.

DeLesdernier said, "experts in the field estimate the world has only a 30 year supply of oil, however the way things change nowadays no one can say for sure what's in store."

Astronomy Club opens observatory

By JERRY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

After a lot of work and with Mother Nature's blessing, the Astronomy Club opened the Orchard Hill observatory to the public Friday night from 7:30 to midnight.

Work on the observatory has been slow and tedious but two years of diligence by the Astronomy Club have put the telescope in working order. The weather was favorable to the cause too and, after having the scheduled opener of two weeks ago rained out, it was crisp and clear on Friday.

"It either rains for two days or it's beautiful out. We get all or nothing," said Club president Joel Leonardi refering to the weather.

The observatory's large reflector telescope was focused on the moon with its craters and mountains showing up clearly and distinctly. Outside another large telescope was focused on Jupiter.

When Leonardi, Peter Smart and other guardians of the observatory are finished work the observatory will house a 20-inch Cassegrain reflector telescope modeled after the famous Mt. Palomar Observatory's telescope. The telescope was built by an amateur astronomer from New Hampshire and given to the University in the mid-sixties. After lying in a dormitory attic for two years, an observatory was finally built to house it.

For a few years it worked fine, but through carelessness and with the onset of electrical problems in the drive mechanism, the quality of the telescope dropped sharply. The Astronomy Club took it under its wing and brought it to its present condition of reasonable working order, according to Dr. Thomas Arny, head of the Astronomy program.

At present there are three different introductory programs in astronomy: one for the astronomy major, one two-semester sequence for any math or science major, and a course for those majoring in neither math or science. Present enrollment in the latter is up to 800 students in five sections.

Food and nutrition at UMass...

...from a machine

CANDYSHOP
good things from Candyshop

By GRACE H. GREENSIDE
Staff Writer

Vending machines need a food transfusion in order to promote a positive way to health for UMass students.

The ubiquitous vending machine, recognized as a quick, concentrated source of energy, is beginning to manifest harmful effects upon the welfare of its users.

Missed breakfasts or lunches overlooked were easily substituted and filled in by chewy, candy bars, freshly wrapped pastries, soft drinks, and ice cream. For 25 cents or more, real hunger was conciliated and put off until a more substantial meal could be had.

However, the dependency on the vending machine grew and began to displace the three traditional daily meals. Heavy reliance on the notorious machine contributed to the wide spread popularity of snack foods and convenience foods usually deficient in furnishing essential vitamins and proteins. The student, inevitably suffered.

Unable to return to a normal meal cycle, the student increasingly consumed large portions of potato chips, milky ways, fudge brownies, and as a result, formed poor eating habits.

Certain symptoms of the malady surfaced soon after. Unsightly fat bulged and swelled and was concealed under loosely-fitting clothes. Compounded by weight gain was lack of attention and concentration during class hours, caused by weakness and fatigue.

The student's nutritional status was approaching a critical point of no return. Clearly, a rescue had to be devised to help the sickly student regain his ideal health.

Vending machines can act as the hero not the villain. Instead of pushing foods containing high amounts of empty calories that only add fat, the vending machine should provide an attractive variety of wholesome, enriching snacks. Dried apricots, cold cans of skim milk, yogurt, canned fruits wrapped in their own juices are a few examples to mention.

Vending machine companies should be aware of their responsibility in protecting the health of each and every UMass student as well as satisfying their nutritional needs.

Vending machines should not be abandoned. The machine should undergo a major operation and follow a new, prescribed diet. For 25 cents or more, a student should be able to obtain from any one vending machine an 'indescribably delicious' frozen blueberry yogurt bar.

Junk foods replaced by foods high in nutritional value will save the student the misery of carrying around unwanted weight and help him maintain a consistant and regular eating pattern.

...from a co-op

By SUE KIERAS
Staff Writer

Democracy prevails in a co-op.

A co-op is a food store owned and operated by the customers. It offers produce at the lowest price possible for good quality. Hopefully, groups of large numbers will join to save time and work.

Co-ops have a few drawbacks. Waiting lines, customers' working hours, and unarrived produce occur. What is required by the customer is patience and the desire for a variety of good quality foods at a price lower than the supermarkets.

There are three co-ops in the Amherst area, two of which involve membership. All rerun on the same basis, with the only difference in what they offer the customer.

The oldest co-op, which originated 3 years ago, is the Yellow Sun Natural Foods Co-op, located in the Alley (35 North Pleasant Street). They primarily offer a wide choice of dried foods: fruits, spices, grains, flours, bread, and nuts. A member will receive these supplements at a price 22 percent above whole-sale. A non-member will pay 45 percent above whole-sale.

Pre-requisites in becoming a member is an eight dollar fee per year, and one hour of work per person per month. An advantage of this co-op is that pick-ups may be made on any day except Sunday, at your convenience.

"The difference between a rock and sponge," is a fine distinction between the Yellow Sun and the Amherst Food Co-op, founded by Tom of the Yellow Sun.

The AMF, at 17 Seelye Street, offers fresh imported produce yearly, varying from vegetables to dairy produce. This year added new cheeses, and breads from the "Corn Creek" natural foods bakery.

Only members can obtain food. To become one, there is an approximate fee of the amount a party would spend in one week (roughly $4-$5 per person). Pick-up is every Thursday from 3-6. Orders must be in by Tuesday. Each party must also work a total of 3 hrs. per mo. Prices run from 16-20 percent above cost at whole-sale.

The third co-op is the People's Market, located in the Student Union. Due to the fact that it is fairly new and growing, it suffers the problem of variety and small space. However, no membership is required and prices run from 16-20 percent above whole-sale, depending on the produce.

One nice advantage is that on a weekday they offer portioned cheese and home-made breads for lunch, in contrast to Hatch and Bluewall fast service meals.

If you are interested in joining any co-op, just go down to their office. The AMF would prefer you to come on a Tuesday. The addresses are: Amherst Food Co-op, 17 Seelye Street, 256-0333 and Yellow Sun, 35 North Pleasant Street, 256-8401.

MassPIRG investigates current prescription drug price info.

The Mass. Public Interest Research Group, Inc. [MassPIRG] is a non-profit, non partisan corporation inspired by consumer - advocate Ralph Nader and devoted to issues of public concern. MassPIRG was formed to generate research and information in the areas of consumer protection and environmental preservation. The PIRG has a membership of over 40,000 students, many of whom use prescription drugs.

MassPIRG has requested the Mass. Board of Registration in Pharmacy (BRP) to repeal their Regulations, Rule 49, item 16 and 20 and "take any other steps necessary to insure that consumers will receive prescription drug price information."

In November 1972, MassPIRG conducted a comparative price survey of ninety (90) western Mass. pharmacies. Variations in price were found ranging from $2.00 to $10.00 for the same drug. A follow up study was completed in November 1973 with the price for twenty (20) capsules of penicillin G ranging from $1.20 to $8.00.

PIRG's study reinforces a 1970 Boston Consumer Council survey documenting that prices for the same drug varied as much as 300 per cent in Boston area pharmacies. Also, for two years MassPIRG has filed legislation to require the posting of prescription drug prices, legislation that has been opposed by many Massachusetts pharmacists.

At present it is extremely difficult for consumers of prescription drugs to determine where they can purchase drugs at the lowest price. MassPIRG believes the single most important reason for the difficulty is Mass. Board of Pharmacy Regulation Rule 49, items 16 and 20. Items 16 and 20 state in relevant parts:

> Item 16. The registered pharmacist or a pharmacy shall not advertise or promote in any way... articles or medical preparations for sale... Such advertising or promotion is considered a fraud upon the deceit of the public and is therefore, unethical and an act of malpractice...
> Item 20. The registered pharmacist or pharmacy shall not advertise by any means,.. medicines or prescription items... by the use of terms "cut-rate" or "discount" or any similar phrase or work which would tend to degrade the professional nature of pharmaceutical services...

The only way to acquire this information is by going store to store, a method particularly burdensome to senior citizens, who are among the prime users of prescription drugs, according to PIRG. Many pharmacists will not provide drug price information over the phone because they believe that Rule 49, items 16 and 20 prohibit such disclosures.

Several states have declared similar statutes or regulations unconstitutional on the grounds that by denying this vital consumer information, the regulations violate citizens' 1st and 14th Amendment constitutional rights.

Since 1972 MassPIRG has consistently advanced a variety of programs designed to protect the "consumers right to know", particularly in the area of prescription drugs. They now believe that the "consumers right to know" will be served by repeal of the above mentioned regulations.

But because of the urgency of the matter, MassPIRG is prepared to pursue their rights in court if the MassPIRG has not heard a response from B.R.P. by Oct. 22.

MassPIRG reports

A nuclear greening

By DONALD J. PARSONS
MassPIRG Intern

This is the first in a series of weekly columns on the issues and projects undertaken by the Amherst-based, student-funded Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group [MassPIRG]. The columns will be written by MassPIRG student interns.

Mass PIRG diagnoses too high a dosage of NUKES. Before Wednesday, September 18, the terms "MassPIRG,", "NUKES" and even "AEC" meant very little to me. Then, a nuclear symposium was held that awakened me to the facts:

MassPIRG is more than an optional $2 on my tuition bill, NUKES is more than a nickname for nuclear power plants and the AEC is less than a benevolent organization of atomic scientists.

The basic goal of MassPIRG is to educate people and bring them together so that, collectively, they may more efficiently take action upon issues that affect them. I was rapidly educated. My attitude toward nuclear energy changed from a feeling of security with a science-fiction come true Godsend for man's energy needs to a feeling of paranoia in that I suddenly felt my personal safety threatened by a Nuclear Demon condoned by my government.

The problem of nuclear energy and the expansion of fission power plants is not a new issue. It is just that the issue has been brought uncomfortably close to us by the planning of twin reactors on the Montague Plains by Northeast Utilities.

The points of controversy involved in the issue are also not new:

a) What are the effects of the daily low-level radioactive emissions from a nuclear power plant?

b) What are the chances and what would be the results of a major accident at a nuclear reactor site?

c) What are the chances of sabotage either of the plants themselves or of the 'fiendishly toxic' by-products being transported and stored?

d) Where on this earth can those by-products be contained safely — and for how long?

Carl J. Hocevar's resignation as an AEC nuclear safety expert in protest over unsatisfactory AEC safety provisions is really nothing new either. Hocevar is not the first to pass this way:

"The present population would experience 16,000 additional cases of cancer and leukemia each year if exposed to the extent now allowed (under AEC regulations) for thirty years." So said Dr. John Goffman, formerly of the AEC's Lawrence Radiation Laboratory now a premier nuclear and AEC critic.

"It is unfortunate that the AEC is not only the overall protagonist of a nationwide atomic-power program; it is also the body that must sit as judge of the safety to the public of the design, mode of construction, and site of particular atomic power plants.

It short, the AEC, as a general promoter of atomic power, must also decide the quasi-judicial issue of whether a license is issued. With a world of good-will and integrity and technical competence on the part of the AEC, how well is the public protected by this dual and conflicting role?" So said David Lilenthal, former chairman of the Atomic Energy commission, now also a critic.

"The AEC is ignoring advice from many of its experts on reactor safety problems, a situation that has given rise to numerous resignations. Several of my colleagues have gone to work trying to help the utility companies understand the reactor safety problems that the AEC would prefer to ignore.

"But I believe that the general public, and not just the companies investing in nuclear generating equipment, must be told the truth about the potential hazards." So says Carl J. Hocevar himself, formerly of the AEC's Idaho Safety Research Center.

What is new is the fact that Hocevar is beginning work immediately with some of the AEC's most staunch critics - Ralph Nader and the Cambridge-based Union of Concerned Scientists (UCS). More and more scientists are deserting the AEC because of their dissatisfaction with AEC safety programs. The scientists are openly objecting to the AEC's cover-up of vital and often damaging information. The once all-powerful AEC is slowly beginning to crumble.

AEC announcements, such as the recent shutdown of 21 reactors to check for leaks, have proved to be some of the most damaging

Women's support available

Everywoman's Center is sponsoring a support group for older women who have returned to school. Issues explored will be: academic advising, career counseling, study skills, and ways to restructure one's time and priorities as student and parent.

Women are invited to bring their lunch and to share with others the concerns, conflicts, and confusions facing them as the semester begins. The group will meet on Tuesdays at 12:15 p.m. in Goodell Hall beginning October 22nd.

WFCR 'Tout en Francais' presents new programs

This year, two Franco-American programs per month have been scheduled within the framework of the WFCR French-language program TOUT EN FRANCAIS. They will be heard the second Tuesday and the third Thursday of each month.

Professor Donald Dugas of the French and Italian Department of UMass will coordinate and present the programs, which will generally consist of an interview and French-Canadian music.

This week's broadcast on Tuesday, will examine the transformation taking place among Franco-Americans in New England, including students as well as those not involved in academia. Also to be discussed are proposed plans for the social and cultural development of Franco-Americans and Francophiles.

WHY COMMIT YOURSELF TO THE PRIESTHOOD?

Why be a priest? Certainly, in times as difficult as these we live in, being a priest is a lot harder today than it was in years past.

And committing oneself to anything for any amount of time seems to be one of the conflicts of our modern age. But the priesthood is a challenge. A big one.

Today, more than ever before in history, men and women, young and old, are searching for religious meaning, for withdrawal from isolation and alienation to joyful community experiences, for Good News in the midst of discouragement and hope in the place of pessimism.

The Paulists are trying to minister to these needs. As a contemporary religious community serving the American people, our mission is to communicate the love of Christ to people.

Every Paulist is a missionary: in the pulpit or the parish house . . . on campus or in the inner-city . . . with the spoken or the printed word . . . he is communicating to people. His mission is to all of America. His message is love; the love of Christ for all people.

It isn't easy but the Paulist welcomes commitment. Welcomes the challenge. If you are interested in the Paulist way of life, send for the Paulist Papers.

arguments against nuclear power. AEC reports released to allay public apprehension over nuclear energy have served to do just the opposite:

Worst case death tolls of 3400, injuries of 43,000 and 7 billion dollars worth of property damage over an area as great as 150,000 square miles are cited by one report, called Wash-740. The 1957 AEC study was titled, "Theoretical possibilities and consequences of major accidents in large nuclear power plants".

"Look at the problems of the light water reactors today. Some of them are falling apart and they come from simple things like defects in the steam generating systems or vibration in the core."

Milton Shaw, formerly Director, AEC Division Reactor Development and Technology, quoted in National Journal Reports, December 15, 1973.

Wash-1250 — The Safety of Nuclear Power Reactors, US AEC, July 1973:

"The number of defects, equipment malfunctions, or failure events that have been encountered during construction, pre-operational testing and routine nuclear power operations to date has been large, attesting to the fact that there is considerable room for improvement in practice if not in philosophy."

Because of the colossal risks involved, groups such as the MassPIRG are united in inoculating the public with the vaccine of nuclear education in an effort to avert the deadly disease that threatens the world.

WEEKEND SPECIAL

ONE OF THESE DAYS YOU'RE GOING TO GET YOURS

A Domino's pizza, that is. The word's out that Domino's not only makes the best pizza in town, but that they deliver it fast, usually within 30 minutes. And there's no charge for delivery. These are the big reasons why Domino's is rapidly becoming the most popular pizza home in town. So, next Saturday, after a hard day of "girl passing" in the stands settle down to a pizza from Domino's. You owe it to yourself.

Financial aid has new hours

Effective today, the Financial Aid Office (243 Whitmore) will establish new office hours. The office will be open for general traffic as well as interviews from 9:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Monday through Friday. In addition, appointment hours will be established from 6:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. Wednesday evening and 9:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon on Saturday.

The new hours will give the staff the time necessary to process all of the paper work required to get aid money into the hands of student recipients while at the same time providing for evening and Saturday appointment hours for those students who need them.

BEST BET, BEST BUY

Right from the start, you knew Tampax tampons were your best bet. They're the only tampons to come in three absorbency-sizes. Regular, Super and exclusive Junior—to help young girls get started.

Tampax tampons always keep you feeling fresh, clean and comfortable. And you always feel secure, too, because you know they're softly compressed for the best absorption. You like the assurance that nothing shows when you wear them and that you can't feel them. You carry them discreetly. You dispose of them easily. You know that they're your best bet when you're buying sanitary protection.

NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

But did you know Tampax tampons were also your best buy? They come in economical packages of 10's and 40's, yet cost about the same as other brands that package 8's and 30's.

Tampax tampons are your best bet. And they're also your best buy.

Student ombudsman cuts through red tape

By PAUL LOGUE JR.
Staff Reporter

Students, grad students, faculty members, or university employees who have a problem are encouraged to see Jay Savereid and his assistant Phyllis Foster at the Ombudsman office in 919 Campus center.

They can probably help. Problems which are not being resolved within proper channels may be rooted out through this department. Tying together loose ends of university policies can speed problem solving, they say.

"Nobody is expected to fit into the standard of this university in every case," Jay said. "Our job is to seek out exceptions, reconsiderations, and reversals when due."

Financial aid, housing, meal tickets, school policies and the appeals process information are common grievances.

"Scheduling was a big problem for a few weeks." states Foster. "Genuine oversights were made and some found they had lost all their courses. This was sometimes due to an administrative error: We helped clear up errors and contact the professors involved to explain the situation. This advanced them into the courses they had lost."

"We can help those who are having problems in housing and off campus living, states Saveried. "Direction and information are our valuable tools used in helping someone's case."

Foster pointed out that the Ombudsman's office doesn't want to interfere in the normal chain of command. "We try to work with the policies set up. But when a lapse of communication occurs within offices or a time element is crucial, we will attempt to cut the administration's red tape."

A person might want to find out his status concerning his financial aid; how much, and when will it arrive. Short term loans drawing off this intangible money can be arranged through the Ombudsman.

Savereid says, "ironically it is the people who need us most who know nothing about us. In the past we have dealt with more Seniors than Juniors, more Sophmores than Freshmen. It would be to the underclassmen's advantage to become aware of our office. In this way will the differences of this situation be adjusted."

"Last year we handled nearly 500 cases. Thus far 100 cases have been reviewed," he explained. The nearly 100 percent capacity of the dorms are a good indication that it will be a busy year."

Indifference to a problem is sometimes met in dealing with administrative policies. People on both sides of the fence are being strained, according to Foster. "Our office can put things into a better perspective providing a little 'tender loving care' said Ms. Foster. This can make all the difference.

"We are opened Mon.-Fri. 8:30-5:00 to assist all with University related problems and grievances," Jay explained. "We will do our best to help in whatever way we can."

Kayak freaks unite!

Eric Evans will be presenting a lecture and film on kayaking at the next Outing Club general meeting tonight at 6:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Room 113.

Mr. Evans will also be discussing his past races, kayaking techniques, upcoming kayak building seminars, and his weekly kayak trips which are open to everyone.

Eric Evans has been the National Kayak Champion the last four years in a row. He took seventh place in the 1972 Olympics in Munich, Germany, and is currently a member of the U.S. Olympic team. He recently placed third in world competition races in Europe.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Monday, October 7

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Several things culminate at the same time today to make this a day of real success. Don't exaggerate your involvement in another's project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Realize the importance of a small business matter. You may be tempted to set aside projects which don't take your interest; you would be wise to resist.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Engage in a new business venture at your own risk. Take your time when it comes to applying new knowledge to the present situation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You would be wise to develop your powers of concentration further. Lend a hand to one who has much to accomplish before day's end.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Stick to your own method of operation today. You can experiment with other people's ways of doing things later in the week.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — A profitable day as well as a pleasurable one. You can relax late in the day but be sure responsibilities are met beforehand.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Make sure that those who work under you carry out your directions accurately. Otherwise, you may find yourself taking the blame for failure.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Plan your schedule well and keep to it precisely. That is the only way that you are going to accomplish your ends at this time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Make sure that alternative measures are available to you if and when you consider taking on new responsibilities. Plan can be altered.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Share good news with those who have had some interest in your career. You can make another a lot happier than he is now if you are successful.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — The cooperation of all involved in the present phase of work is required for success. Make your business to see that all participants follow through.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — This is a day for action. Make certain, therefore, that plans are well make ahead of time. Don't rely on another to keep your promises.

Cey leads Dodgers 5-2

PITTSBURGH [UPI] - Ron Cey, so ill the past few weeks that he lost six pounds, made the Pittsburge Pirates feel even worse Sunday with a booming bat that looked anything but sick.

Cey, the diminutive dandy with a hearty bat that belies his 5-foot-9 frame, collected a homer, single and a pair of doubles to lead the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 5-2 triumph over the Pirates in the second game of the National League Playoffs.

The triumph was the second in a row for the dodgers in the best-of-five series and moved them to within one game of clinching their first pennant since 1966.

Cey, who admittedly played one of his worst games of the year Saturday when he committed two errors in the Dodgers' opening game 3-0 triumph, hit a solo homer in the fourth inning Sunday but it was his leadoff double in the eighth that ignited a three-run rally which proved decisive.

Cey, who batted .302 against the Pirates during the regular season, triggered the Dodgers' winning rally in the eighth with a double off reliever Dave Giusti, who was roughed up by Los Angeles for the second straight day.

United States Air Force? He had three scoring passes and totaled 252 air-yards. Though he has fine receivers in Paul Jarry, Larry Lockwood and Billy Looker, chances are he could split wide Betty Crocker, the Pillsbury Dough Boy, and Little Poppy and still toss for 200 yards a game.

The UMass pass defense played it loose, trying to stop the bomb, and they did...but Bullet Bob completed 21 passes.

Next week the secondary will face less pressure against Boston University freshman Greg Geiger, who completed only five passes in the Friday night win over Northeastern. Incidentally, BU beat Vermont earlier this year, 29-6. Hmmmmm.

Two Minutemen starting offensivee tackles were injured though. Ross Schubarth suffered a badly sprained ankle to go with a twisted back as he pivoted a stop Vermont's Gary Gottfried's interception return for a TD.

Tom Harris tore a hamstring and will be out 3-4 weeks. "It was a quarterback sprintout and I turned to block the defensive end," said the dejected Harris. "That's when it went. It hurts bad now, but losing makes it worse".

The quarterback situation is deteriorating. Tripucka looked bad in completing only three of fourteen, although one has to wonder why flanker Lee Harriman carries margarine in his mitts. Tripucka was yanked two-thirds of the way through the fourth period in favor of Peter Colton but the sophmore came out three plays later after a Lang fumbel, never getting a chance to throw.

Tripucka, reinstated, promptly tossed the interception that iced the game for the Cats. UMass still hasn't scored in the fourth quarter this year.

It was a bitter loss for the MacPherson-Men. There was only the post-game realization that the lack of a balanced offense quite probably would doom them to another mediocre season.

Whether the miscues can be remedied by next Saturday's game is at best anyone's guess, for, as a prominent coach once queried, "How do you practice not fumbling?"

Orioles' left fielder goes high in the air in vain as Sal Bando's homer settles into the stands.

JV gridders upset by Green

By BILL ELIAS
Sports Staff

Dartmouth, aided by five UMass fumbles came back to control the second half and defeat the junior Minutemen 31-28.

Trailing 21-14 early in the third quarter, Dartmouth scored ten quick points as a direct result of UMass mistakes. The first, a bad snap to Massachusetts punter George Colello, set Dartmouth on the UMass one yard line where Rob Swenson scored his second touchdown. Minutes later the Minutemen would fumble again allowing a costly Dartmouth field goal that would prove to be the difference.

Dartmouth opened the game with a score but UMass stormed back on the quarterbacking of John Czerapowicz who had 96 yards rushing in the first half. Massachusetts tied the score at 7-7 when halfback Dave Douvadjian broke through a big hole and outraced all defenders for a 51 yard touchdown.

A recovered fumble by UMass defensive tackle Steve Ciccolini set up the go ahead points as Czerapowicz optioned right, cut back and scored from the Dartmouth 49 yd. line.

In the next series UMass defense did its job as Ciccoline, Penta, Rourke, and Ried exchanged good plays to stop Dartmouth cold. Again with the ball Czerapowicz mixed his plays well to move the offense 70 yards for the score. Completions to ends Justin Cotten and Moses Williams were crucial in the drive capped by fullback Sherman Moyston scoring the touchdown. UMass led 21-7.

Holtzman pitches A's even with Orioles 5-0

OAKLAND [UPI] - Sal Bando, Joe Rudi and Ray Fosse provided the firepower and Ken Holtzman, pitching his best game of the season, stopped the Baltimore Orioles on a Masterful five-hitter Sunday in leading the Oakland A's to a 5-0 victory that evened the American League playoffs at one game apiece.

Holtzman, often lifted by manager Alvin Dark at the first sign of trouble, held the Orioles to a third inning single by Andy Etchebarren, ran into mild trouble on two-out eighth inning singles by Enos Cabell and Etchebarren, and then went on to wrap things up in a neat package for the victory that got the A's back into the playoff picture.

The Orioles, who had won Saturday's opener 6-3, got only one man to second base--Cabell in the eighth--as Holtzman kept them in check while striking out three batters and walking two. Two quick double plays, including one in the ninth, plus three fine running catches by centerfielder Billy North prevented trouble.

A walk and wild pitch put North on second with two out in the sixth and Rudi, a 99 RBI man in 1974, followed with a triple off the right centerfield fence.

In the eighth, with Bob Reynolds on the mound. Gene Tenace walked and stole second after two out, Claudell Washington reached on an error by shortstop Frank Baker and then Fosse, fighting to regain his form after being sidelined for two months with an injury, rifled a long homer to left off Grant Jackson.

Team Canada nyet 3-2

MOSCOW [UPI] - A pair of third-period goals by Viktor Shalimov enabled the Soviet Union to defeat team Canada 3-2 Sunday night in the final game of their eight-game international ice hockey series.

The victory gave the Soviets a 4-1 lead for the series. Three games ended in draws.

The Canadians played under a threat by Soviet officials to halt the game at the first outbreak of rough playing.

Canada opened the scoring at 13:47 in the first period with a goal by Bobby Hull, assisted by Ralph Backstrom and J.C. Tremblay.

Alexander Yakushev scored during a power play to draw the Soviets even at 13:33 in the second period and Shalimov made it 3-1 with his pair in the last period.

Women "field" stickers sizzle 4-0

By LINDA MACKLER
Sports Staff

Twenty minutes into the first half, UMass had unwound, braved the cold weather, and scored the first and winning goal on their way to posting a 4-0 victory over Central Connecticut College and bringing their record to 2-0.

The UMass players dominated the field and the statistics, in their home opener, while maintaining their very aggressive and determined style of play previously demonstrated at Sportsday and against Keene State. They also had thirty-two shots at the goal compared to Central Connecticut's six.

The defense, featuring Barb Martell, Lori Nazar, and Kate Stanne preserved the team's second shut-out; while Friday's offensive credits went to Joanne Smith and Kathy O'Neil, who each scored half the goals.

Coach Albert was certainly pleased with the team's continuous outstanding efforts.

"They were defensively very, very good today," she said. "The second half showed what good condition the players are in."

The junior varsity team was also victorious, 2-0, in its first home competition. They too completely dominated the game, as the first half barely spotted the ball in UMass territory.

As Connecticut College did not pose a strong threat, Coach Albert had planned to look for ways to tighten playing style and make minor strategy adjustments to prepare for this week's two tough games against Mt. Holyoke and Springfield College. Tuesday afternoon will be the first test in Northampton beginning at 3:30 p.m.

Patriots hammer Baltimore, 42-3

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Jim Plunkett fired three touchdown passes and the unbeaten New England Patriots rolled to their fourth victory Sunday in a 42-3 National Football League romp over the winless Baltimore Colts.

Plunkett ruined the head coaching debut of Baltimore General Manager Joe Thomas on the third play of the game, hitting Reggie Rucker on a bomb for 69 yards and a touchdown.

Plunkett later passed to Sam Cunningham for four yards and to Rucker again for 16 yards for touchdowns before being given an unusual rest, retiring with more than 10 minutes remaining in the third period.

The rebuilt New England defense wrecked the Colts. Thomas, who took over the coaching duties after Howard Schnellenberger was fired last Sunday, went along with Colts' owner Robert Irsay and started young Bert Jones at quarterback in place of Marty Domres.

Jones was harassed throughout the afternoon. He was unable to get the punchless Colts rolling and Baltimore had to settle for a mere three points on a 27-yard field goal by Toni Linhart after New England had built a 21-0 lead in the second period.

The Patriots scored the first two times they had possession, the first being Rucker's TD. Then, Darryl Stingley swept the right side for 23 yards and a touchdown.

A fumble recovery on an attempted punt return set up New England's third touchdown, Mack Herron banging his right side for five yards and the score early in the second quarter.

While winning their first four games for the first time since 1964, the Patriots rolled up their highest point total since they whipped Miami 41-10 seven years ago.

Plunkett completed eight of 16 passes for 141 yards before being rested with the Patriots in total command.

Jones, forced to go to the air because of the strong New England rushing defense, completed 22 of 41 tosses for 215 yards, but was sacked five times and intercepted once.

For the third time in four games, the Patriots held an opponent to less than 100 yards rushing, Baltimore netting just 85. The Los Angeles Rams managed 109 in bowing 2-15 to the Patriots.

The Patriots also forced five Baltimore fumbles, recovering three times.

In addition to throwing the three touchdown passes, boosting his total to nine for the year, Plunkett made a key block which enabled Stingley to turn right end for the second touchdown.

New England coach Chuck Fairbanks cleared his bench in the second half, enabling reserves to get valuable experience.

Herron led the Patriots in ground gaining with 59 yards in 13 carries. Cunningham managed 41 yards in nine attempts.

Punchless Giants upset as Falcons record first win

NEW HAVEN, Conn. [UPI] - Safety Ray Brown returned an intercepted pass 59 yards for the go-ahead touchdown Sunday to give the Atlanta Falcons their first win of the season, a 14-7 victory over the New York Giants.

The Giants had begun a drive of their own six yard line midway through the third quarter and had advanced to the Atlanta 42 with second down when Bown stepped in front of intended receiver Ray Rhodes. Brown, a four-year veteran from West Texas State, picked off Norm Snead's sideline pass and, with clear sailing, streaked untouched down the left sideline.

Bob Lee, a last-minute replacement for scheduled starting quarterback Pat Sullivan, hit tight end Jim Mitchell with a 15-yard touchdown pass late in the second quarter for the Falcons' first TD.

The Giants, four-point favorites, took a 7-0 lead in the opening quarter when rookie Doug Kotar slashed off tackle for a 53-yard touchdown gallop.

Lee's pass to Mitchell capped a 10-play, 80-yard drive. Three of the plays included passes from Lee to Mitchell as the Falcon tight end victimized strong safety Chuck Crist of all three of his receptions and was all alone in the middle of the end zone on his scoring catch.

Lee was named to start by Falcon coach Norm Van Brocklin in an attempt to get some punch into the Atlanta offense which saw the Falcons score only two touchdowns in their first three games.

Kotar, a preseason acquisition who wasn't given much of a chance of making the final squad cut, broke loose for his touchdown run on the Giants' second offensive series of the game.

The Giants, whose record dropped to 1-3, began their only scoring drive on their 28 following a missed 45-yard field goal attempt by Atlanta's Nick Mike-Mayer, who also belw a 28-yeard attempt in the final quarter.

Kotar ran for seven yards and Joe Dawkins for five more to give New York a first down on its 40. Snead then completed a seven-yard swing pass to Bob Grim before Kotar, Rookie from Kentucky, burst over right tackle and broke into the clear, outracing the Atlanta defenders to the goal line.

JV booters trounce W.P.I.

By RON ARENA
Sports Staff

The UMass J.V. soccer team recorded its second consecutive shutout victory Saturday morning with a 7-0 trouncing of W.P.I. The win raised the junior booters' record to 2-1.

The Minutemen completely dominated the game with numerous scoring threats, while the UMass defense stifled any W.P.I. rushes.

Center halfback Andy Moore, the team's field general, ignited the scoring outburst on a direct kick cleanly beating the opposing goalie. Brian Crowley, also a halfback made it 2-0, and Sophmore Tony Bilodeau completed the first-half scoring with a close-in shot off his own rebound.

Forward Raffi Denoyan displayed a fine offensive showing resulting in two second-half goals. Kurt Grazewske and Tom DePalo ended the scoring for the -0 decision.

On September 20, UMass lost their opener at the hands (or is it feet?) of Holyoke Community College.' First-year coach Todd Buck (last year'a assistant) noted that his team had but one week of practice prior to the opener, and with the team being mainly composed of freshman, the task of creating unity in seven days was nearly impossible. Mike DeCosta scored the lone Minuteman goal.

With more time to organize, the J.V.'s, behind goals from Bilodeau, Grazewske and Mpke Crowe, bounced back to defeat Keene State 3-0.

Coach Buck, who himself played soccer here for four years, lettering three, did not cite winning as his goal this year though. He admitted "Everyone likes to win," but Buck stressed preparing the players for varsity as more important. For this reason he substitutes frequently, trying to give game action to as many players as possible. For instance, Preston Kise and Vincemt Vafiades share equal time as goalie, with a third seeing action in the W.P.I. game.

Buck emphasizes discipline, conditioning and short passing as his coaching techniques. The squad seems to learn quickly as they played their positions well rather than just following the ball. Buck has noted an improvement in each game, and if the team continues at their pace, the varsity will have many hopefuls in the next two years.

My God! Vermont 25-14

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

From rags to riches - and then back to rags.

That's the story of the Minutemen after Saturday's stunning loss to the University of Vermont Catamounts, 25-14.

The loss put UMass a full game behind UConn in the race for the Beanpot, and brought them back to earth with a resounding thud after last Saturday's unexpected shutout of Dartmouth.

If the game was dominated by anyone, the choice would have to be Vermont's version of the blade man, junior quarterback Bob Bateman. His ability to pick apart the secondary reminded one of an NFL veteran and not a college junior.

"We saw the films from the UMass game with Villanova," said Bateman in explaining Vermont's success in the air, "and we figured we could take advantage of the linebackers' deep drops by throwing a lot of dump passes in front of them. I think the strategy worked."

SPORTS

The Minutemen gave up the ball five times, losing four of eight fumbles and having a desperation pass picked off and returned for the points that iced the win. In their last two games especially it had been the UMass patent to make the other team give up the ball at key moments but in this game, at least, the rights to the patent were stolen.

The game was really all UMass until midway in the second quarter. It took Vermont that long to even get a first down. On 3rd and 7 from the Vermont 43, Bateman hit Billy Looker for 44 yards to the UMass 14. On the next play, the 6'6" junior hit end Paul Jarry on a down and in pattern and the UMass streak of two consecutive shutouts was no longer possible to continue.

That made it 14-6 UMass, after a Jim Torrance dive from the Vermont three at the 51-second mark of the second quarter, and few of the fans had reason to worry. But then the Catamounts did something few had believed possible — they put together a 14-play drive which took them from their own 21 to paydirt with only 16 seconds left in the half.

With the score 14-12 midway through the third period the Minutemen moved from their own 30 to the Vermont 7. On first and goal, UMass picked up a disastrous holding penalty which pushed them back to the twenty-two. The Minutemen failed to score when Greg Sprout was wide from the thirty with a field goal attempt and it was from then on that people started thinking upset.

Fear turned to terror when Keith Lang fumbled on his own 35 on a third and 195 pound defensive end Phil Vrana recovered for UVt. on the UMass thirty-five. Two first down passes to Billy Looker (who caught seven passes for 124 yards) moved the ball down to the UMass three from where Bateman hit flanker Larry Lockwood in the corner of the end zone. Bill Cooke blocked the conversion attempt but Vermont had the lead with only 3:43 left in the game.

But the nails were not completely hammered in to the UMass coffin by the Catamounts. On the ensuing kickoff, Rich Jessamy returned the ball 42 yards to the 50-yard line and for a moment it looked like an upset could be averted. However, the Catamount defense prevented that when Jessamy fumbled on the very first play after the kickoff and Pat Dwyer recovered for the Catamounts. The Minutemen got the ball back again with little over a minute left, but a Mark Tripucka pass intended for Gary Mika was intercepted at midfield and returned for the score by Gary Gottfried. That closed the UMass coffin.

19 Vermont points came as the result of Minutemen mistakes, so whereas UMass had gone to riches forcing other teams to make the goofs, they went to rags a week later because they started making the mistakes.

That was the kind of thing nobody would have expected.

Fumbles spell UMass doom

By STEVE SARACENO
Sports Staff

Saturday, Vermont gained what Catamount coach Carl Falivene termed "the biggest victory in the history of Vermont football", and the win was due mainly to two things: 1) the four UMass fumbles lost, and 2) the aerial attack of Bullet Bob Bateman.

Let's start with the fumbles. First quarter: Rich Jessamy's fumble kills a drive at the Vermont 41-yard line. Second quarter: Mark Tripucka's fumble sets up Vermont's first touchdown. Fourth quarter: Keith Lang's fumble sets up the winning Vermont TD. Then Jessamy's fumble at midfield kills any comeback hopes.

What was especially grinding about the errors were that they came from the same people who had otherwise looked brilliant in gaining 316 ground yards. And most of the fumbles were of the agonizing type, just barely slipping out of the grasp of the ballcarriers split-seconds before the knees touched the ground. As a result, half the stadium didn't even know there had been fumbles until the referee signaled turnovers.

As for the passing of Bateman...how do you stop the Harriers overrun St. Johns and Northeastern

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

A four-way tie for first resulted in a controversy and the eventual designation of places by meet officials as the UMass harriers swept a tri-meet from Northeastern and St. John's, Saturday afternoon.

It was the final tour of the five-mile UMass course for seniors Randy Thomas, Tom Wilson, Bill Gillin and Devin Croft. Thomas failed to set a new course record, but the afternoon was a fruitful one for the Minutemen runners, who won with a total of 31 points. St. John's and Northeastern finished with 46 points apiece, but a new NCAA tie-breaking rule gave St. John's second place. The rule states that in the case of a tie, the team with its fourth runner across the finish line first wins.

The race was a battle between Thomas and NU's Mike Buckley for the first four and a half miles. A good-sized crowd (at least for a UMass cross country meet) of about fifty persons ran along to various points on the course, cheering on Thomas, as yells of "C'mon Randy, you can break that record," prevailed. Buckley and Thomas were even as they ran up the hill in the orchard for the second time and headed toward the downhill finish. To the surprise of those who ran from the orchard to see the finish, there was no kick by either Thomas or Buckley, but rather an easy finish by a group of four runners. John McGrail and Bill Gillin caught Buckley and Thomas at the top of the last hill and the quartet of runners coasted across the finish line, apparently tied for first. The coaches discussed scoring procedures with the decision to pick places for the four runners, according to how the meet officials saw them crossing the finish line, and disallow the tie. The foursome was timed in 25:11.

McGrail said he just tried to stay with Thomas as long as he could, and the strategy paid off for the sophomore standout, who ran his best time on the UMass course. Referring to the Providence meet, McGrail commented, "We ran the best we could, but Providence was better than us that day." McGrail is optimistic about the remainder of the season. "Croft and 'T' (Tom Maguire) are coming back," stated McGrail, who feels the team is capable of winning the IC4A title and faring well in the NCAA championships.

Booters rebound over WPI 4-0

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

"This is the best UMass soccer team I've seen in the 18 years I've coached," said Alan King, the W.P.I. coach after seeing UMass dominate his squad, 4-0.

After a slow start UMass controlled the play as they bounced back well against W.P.I. after their disappointing loss to Keene State.

"We had two good practices Thursday and Friday and we held team meetings to work out our problems," said UMass coach Al Rufe. "We decided to play as a unit today."

Bill Belcher had two goals and Tom Coburn, a goal and an assist, to pace the UMass attack. Bob McChesney scored the other UMass goal.

Without a doubt UMass played their best overall game of the young 1974 season. The Minutemen constantly beat their opponents to the ball with their hustling play. After committing poor passes against Keene State, UMass had their best passing day of the season.

As good as UMass looked, W.P.I. looked just as bad. "We have an experienced team," said the W.P.I. coach, "but we just had a bad day. UMass played extremely well." W.P.I. now has a record of 4-2.

Bill Belcher opened the scoring at 7:45 of the first half. Tom Coburn passed the ball out in front from the goalie's left and Belcher knocked it in after the goalie had made the original save.

Tom Coburn scored the second goal at 30:00 on the prettiest play of the game. Coburn got the ball all alone in front of the goal. With all the time in the world, Coburn put a pretty deke on the goalie and fired the ball past him in the far corner.

In the second half, Belcher scored again on a rebound. The W.P.I. goalie made the original save but then mysteriously lost control fo the ball and Belcher was Johnny-on-the-spot and wacked it home into the left corner.

After the third UMass goal, W.P.I. changed goalies in an effort to halt the on rushing Minutemen. The strategy failed however as Bob McChesney scored the final goal of the game on an assist from Tom Coburn.

UMass goalie Marc Hanks played extremely well. He wasn't tested often but when he was he was equal to the task.

UMass' next game is here on Saturday, Oct. 12 against Boston University. "Boston University is an important Yankee Conference game. We will have to stay up for them during practices this week," said Coach Rufe.

BU lost to Maine 1-0 and Brown 18-1 ("I don't know what happened against Brown but I expect them to be tough," said Rufe.)

QUICK SHOTS: Mohammed Othman sat the game out for UMass. He hurt his left knee in practice, Friday. It's a reoccurrence of an old injury but Othman says he expects to be back in 2-3 days. Bob McChesney took his place and did well, scoring a goal.

Ford vows halt to price hikes

By RICHARD E. LERNER

BURLINGTON, Vt. [UPI] — President Ford hoping to boost his party's prospects in next month's elections, promised Monday night "to halt the rise in prices" with his forthcoming anti-inflation package.

Ford made the pledge at a $50-plate Republican dinner to launch a personal campaign blitz on the eve of his economic address to a joint session of Congress.

Ford urged a strong support for leading GOP candidates in the Nov. 5 balloting, and appealed for preservation of the traditional two-party system in American politics, noting that national polls find the number of independent voters growing since the Watergate scandal.

Without going into detail, Ford said he would recommend "a two-pronged" approach calling for legislative action so that the government could "do its part in whipping inflation" and other "actions in which everyone can participate."

"If every citizen enlists in this effort, I am not only confident, I am certain, that we will win this fight against America's Public Enemy No. 1," Ford said in a prepared speech.

"In this battle, I am particularly mindful of those who are unemployed and of retired people living on already small, fixed incomes. The commitment I make to you tonight and will repeat to the American people tomorrow is to halt the rise in prices and the problems it forces onto each one of us."

Ford's text provided no new clues to the action plan that he will unveil Tuesday at 4 p.m. EST in a nationally-televised appearance on Capitol Hill.

But he reiterated previous White House assurances that "I am not asking for any increase in the federal gasoline tax." He said he wanted that known because he had been told "in no uncertain terms of your views on an increase in federal gasoline taxes."

The President flew from Washington to Burlington in early evening for the appearance and planned to return to the capital by midnight.

Ford maintained that "the two-party system is the very foundation of our political balance," that it has worked "exceedingly well," and that its failure would be damaging to the nation's stability, as has happened in other countries.

"On the one hand, a mass of small, regional or class-oriented splinter groups emerges, none of which are capable of governing for long," he said. "Alternatively, after a period of chaos and uneasiness, one emerges from the many — more ruthless and more unscrupulous — and the democratic

Wood notes:
"Educational changes"

By FRED NOBLES
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert Wood, in a speech last night at the Student Union Ballroom, discussed the changing role of education in a society "that no longer believes in the American dream."

Addressing his remarks to about 200 educators at a dinner for the International Conference for the Improvement of University Teaching, Wood said, "Now we have a public that asks why there is public higher education."

Discussing the changing role of college education, he noted that "the sixties have past, the seventies are not like them... the limits of growth are upon us." Referring to an increasing trend in American society away from traditional education, Wood said that "The student body is new and will be new increasingly."

He expressed his opinion that the educational community must be responsive to the needs of part time students and women who are, "finally getting a crack at the ring."

Referring to the recent legislative discussion about "contact hours" — the number of non-classroom hours a professor is available to help students — Wood said that there is "a profound misunderstanding about what a professor does, and what a contact hour is."

Pointing out that the issue of contact hours is presenting an unbalanced picture of college education, Wood said that, "We simply have to explain again what it is to be a professor."

Wood went on to discuss graduate level education. "I believe what we have to do to be serious about teaching is to look at graduate education," he said. Wood feels that the graduate student is an important resource in the educational community because "they are the ones who will carry on the university tradition."

Wood believes that good teaching is a "risky business." He told his audience that it is, however, a "risky business that we must go about."

Burns critics refuted

A recent survey by the Collegian indicated that the majority of students interviewed who participated in programs sponsored by the International Programs Office I.P.O. are satisfied with the way it is run.

About two weeks ago the Collegian reported that the Student Senate was going to set up an inquiry board to investigate complaints against the office.

Out of 18 students interviewed only three had complaints against the office. Of the other 15, most were enthusiastic about their individual programs.

Three students participating in the Bologna Program under I.P.O. charged Barbara Burns with incompetence and negligence in a reent Collegian article. However most of the other students traveling through the office had great praise for it.

One student who participated in the Frieburg Program said it was "one of the best programs I've ever been involved with."

Susan Chamberlin, who participated in the Athens Program, said Burns is "very efficient." Beverly Lloy, who went to West Germany, stated it was a "very well organized program." She added; Mrs. Burn was always willing to help."

Friedrich Von Kries, former director of the Frieburg Program called Burns the "most industrious and busy woman on campus."

Credit where credit is due?

A group of UMass students is now involved in the establishment of a credit union for students and alumni. Operating under the sponsorship of the Student Organizing Project, S.O.P., a coalition of concerned students representing a wide range of campus viewpoints, is now in the process of drafting a set of by-laws for the proposed credit union.

A credit union is a cooperatively owned and democratically controlled financial institution chartered and supervised by the National Credit Union Administration, an arm of the federal government. The prime purpose of a credit union is to provide members with an institution which can pay high interest on their savings and offer low-interest loans.

Credit union policy is set by the members, who elect a board of directors and a credit committee to review loan applications.

According to John Fisher, economic development coordinator of the Student Organizing Project, "the idea of a student credit union has been around for a long time. It was one of those things that everybody was in favor of, but no one had the time to follow through on.

"Since the goal of the Organizing Project is to set up a student union, giving students the power to have a real say in their lives, the concept of a student-controlled credit union was a natural for us, he said.

"Since the Project got under way last May," he added, "we have been sounding out other credit unions, the Credit Union Administration, and the Massachusetts Credit Union League as to the feasibility of the project."

Once the by-laws are adopted and officers elected, representatives of the group will travel to Boston to meet with field representatives of the Massachusetts Credit Union League and the National Credit Union Administration, N.C.U.A., according to a spokesman of the S.O.P.

It still may be a while before students can actually deposit their money in the credit union, however.

"We have a lot of work to do in coming weeks," Fisher said. "We should be starting a petition drive in the near future to get students to pledge that thay would use the services of the credit union, and we'll need to obtain a secure space for the union office and dig up a safe," he added.

Even when these tasks are taken care of, the credit union still will not be able to open its doors until it receives its charter from the federal government, members of the group agree.

Fisher notes that "it is important to lay the groundwork for the credit union as carefully as possible." There are two reasons for this, he said. "First of all, while credit union deposits are insured in a manner similar to the Federal Deposit Insurance system required of banks, we nevertheless have the responsibility to establish a mechanism that will handle student funds in a prudent manner."

The second reason according to Fisher is to show the N.C.U.A. that UMass is capable of sustaining a viable operation.

Membership in the proposed credit union would be open to any student or employee of the students who would pay a nominal membership fee of about fifty cents and make an initial deposit of at least $5.00, student organizers say.

C.L.R. James-personal reflections of Wright

Prof. C.L.R. James

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

In order to understand an important literary figure such as Richard Wright, one cannot begin by discussing his writing, one has to first dilineate concisely the historical and ideological continuum in which he is a part. It was this approach employed by Professor C.L.R. James, historian, novelist, and revolutionary, a personal friend of Richard Wright, as he discussed the life of "that natural man of letter," in a program presented by the Commuter Assembly last night at Herter Hall.

"Richard Wright", Mr. James asserts "is one of the two foremost writers of imaginative literature and prose in the United States, the other being William Faulkner. The genius of Mr. Wright lies in the fact that unlike most writers of his time, he was an uneducated man from Mississippi.

He divided the life of Mr. Wright into three historical periods, period one being that time up until the writing of "Uncle Tom's Children". The period of Mr. Wright's life during which they were close friends and the second period ended with the discussion of the writing of "Black Boy". The time after which Mr. Wright left the United States for Europe, he called the third period.

In order to understand the works of Richard Wright, one has to understand where he comes from. To explain this, Mr. James drew an analogy between himself, who was born and educated in Trinidad, and had by age 8 read Shakespeare's "Vanity Fair", and Mr. Wright who didn't read a book until he was seventeen.

It was his lack of a sound educational foundation that other literary artist possessed, coupled with his dissappointment in the communist party and the realization that he had no family left in the United States, which Mr. James illustrated with a passage from his book "Black Boy" about his father, which stifled his creativity and alienated him.

He spent the rest of his life in self proclaimed exile in Europe where he travelled extensively lecturing, never again to produce the quality works he did in his early life.

Bromery sponsors lectures

Chinua Achebe

A mathematician, a writer and a philosopher will give the first three lectures in the new Chancellor's Lectures Series at the University of Massachusetts, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery announced last week.

They are: Marshall Harvey Stone of the mathematics department, Chinua Achebe, who holds a joint appointment in English and Afro-American studies, and Robert Paul Wolff of the philosophy department.

Stone will present the first lecture Oct. 30, Achebe will speak Feb. 18, and Wolff's lecture is scheduled for April 2. The presentations, which will focus on one aspect of the speaker's intellectual and academic concern, are all scheduled for 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. All are open to the public without charge.

The purpose of the series is to "provide greater recognition of scholarship and the presence of our own distinguished scholars," according to Dr. Bromery. It will also "provide increased opportunities for the members of our campus to gather and communicate as an academic community," he said.

Those selected to give the lectures this year were recommended by the 10-member Chancellor's Lecture Series Committee, chaired by Prof. Everett Emerson.

Marshall Harvey Stone, one of the country's most noted mathematicians, is known for his work in quantum field theory, the Stone-Weierstass Theorem, his representation theorem for Boolean Algebra, and the Stone-Czech Compactification.

Robert Wolff

Elected to the National Academy of Sciences at the age of 35, Stone is also a past president of the International Mathematical Union. He holds honorary degrees from institutions in this country, South America, and Europe, including an honorary doctor of science degree from UMass in 1966.

Chinua Achebe, from Nigeria, is a leading novelist of modern Africa. His works have been translated into 20 languages, and he is regarded as a candidate for the Nobel Prize for literature. Last summer, Achebe received two prestigious international literary honors: the Neil Gunn International Fellowship of the Scottish Arts Council and membership in an honorary fellowship of the Modern Language Association of America.

The monies coming from the deposits, or "shares," of the members would be loaned out to members at attractive interest rates, subject to limitations set by the directors. In turn, the earnings from these loans (and certain other investments) are expected to be used to pay shareholders dividends on their deposits, according to organizers.

Credit union members would be able to retain membership after graduation and would automatically be considered members.

"In effect, the credit union would function like a bank," said Fisher. "The main differences between a bank and a credit union are that a bank can offer checking services — something a credit union is presently prohibited from doing — and that a credit union would devote all its energies to using student monies for the benefit of students — something no bank comes close to doing."

"The actual decision as to whether all income above basic expenses would be used to pay dividends to shareholders or whether some part of it would be diverted toward developing other student services is one that the directors of the credit union would ultimately make, "Fisher added.

The credit union also plans to sell food stamps to students who qualify for the program, according to S.O.P. members.

Burns said she was "mystified" by the complaints about the Bologna Program.

Three students from the program were irate about living conditions in the program. They complained about not being able to take showers, eating only five days a week one meal a day, and paper thin walls, among other things.

Burns said the students were warned of these things. She added that these conditions were unavoidable since; "That's the way Italians live."

David Evans, Director of the Center for International Ed., pointed out that; "In organizing any international operation today there is a serious possibility of communications problems." He described Burns' position as "very difficult", because she is "required to direct things she has little or no control over."

And this, above everything else, is the reason you and I and millions of others over the years have dedicated ourselves to the Republican Party."

Ford urged the audience to work for election of all Vermont GOP candidates and particularly praised Sen. George D. Aiken, who is retiring after 34 years in the U.S. Senate. "He has given the nation the benefit of his down-to-earth wisdom, his leadership and his guidance in many areas," Ford said. "These very different fields of endeavor only suggest the breadth and greatness of this man."

Wood shifts emphasis to quality education

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Reporter

University President Robert Wood indicated yesterday that the quality of education should improve because the freezing of the university budget will focus energy away from expansion and into existing facilities.

At a press conference yesterday, Wood and School of Education Dean Dwight Alan, along with several representatives from the International Conference for the Improvement of University Teaching, which is meeting on campus, discussed the topic which the name of the conference suggests.

The need to establish methods to improve student-teacher communication was emphasized. Wood also placed importance on the scheduling of courses which he said should be determined by teachers and students, instead of by administrators who are unaware of the time needed for the most effective teaching and learning.

Wood added that the university will be better able to concentrate on teaching improvement because of the de-emphasis on expansion. The universities capacity to change with fixed resources will be tested, he said.

Wood said that in the past, higher education was based on faith, but with the present generation more skeptical of the validity of higher education, it will have to provide proof of its worth.

The university will attempt to put tighter controls on the granting of tenure, according to the president. He said that is has been getting out of hand, with 80 per cent of the staff of some departments holding tenure.

Subjects discussed at the teaching conference were: university curriculums, university course organization and the improving of teaching behavior.

SS elects new treasurer

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

It's a hell of a lot of work, and there's a lot of money floating around," Jack Margoussian, the new treasurer of the Student Senate, said about his job. He was elected by the Student Senate September 25 defeating Norma Farris by a vote of 19-8.

Paul Hammel, former student senate treasurer resigned August 2, and Margoussian was appointed by the Student Senate Executive Committee to serve as acting treasurer until the next election.

"Jack was chairperson of the finance committee," Cindy McGrath, Speaker of the Senate said, "and he was well knowledgeable of the Senate finances."

Margoussian sees himself as an overseer of everything that has to do with finances in the Student Senate. "My job," he said, "is a smattering of everything that tries to make it easier for all students."

The treasurer and the Finance Committee of the Senate work together to allot money for student organizations.

Margoussian signs RSO transactions, pays bills as well as listens to interest groups who need money. Margoussian wants students to know that there is only a limited amount of money. He said, "People representing groups come with self-interests. They have to realize that they are not only one but part of the whole."

He also suggested if groups made profits, it would be less money for the students."

The new treasurer said, "sometimes we have to make decisions about the money, and some people don't always agree, but you can't have fifty-thousand people making the decision."

"Most people feel that the Student Senate is on an egotistical trip. We could make it easier for students; but now can we do the job without support?" he asked.

"One of the best educations to be gotten is up in the office," he said.

Thefts, fights keep cops hopping

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

It was another busy weekend on campus, according to Captain Robert Joyce, of The Department of Public Safety at UMass. Two fights and a series of thefts and larcenies kept the police force busy.

One UMass student was injured in a fight at Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity, Saturday night. William Pananos received a puncture wound under the arm and was Hospital. The case is currently under investigation by the UMass Police, said Captain Joyce.

A suspect was charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, (switch blade), in the vicinity of the Graduate Research Center, on campus. His case is also under further investigation, said Joyce.

There were also several thefts and larcenies, (under and over $100.00), from unlocked dorm rooms and parking lots, on campus, this weekend, according to Joyce.

The dorm thefts occured in Washington Tower, Coolidge Tower, and Greenough dorm. Property stolen from motor vehicles in parking lots included tape decks and speakers.

Captain Joyce emphasized that anyone seeing suspicious persons around the parking lot areas should call the UMass Police immediately.

SSCC takes complaints

The Student Senate Communications Committee (SSCC) in conjunction with the University Ombudsman has installed a grievance box in the Student Union Lobby near the Collegian bins.

This is an attempt by the Committee to handle any grievances UMass students may have concerning Student Activities Fees, University hiring practices or individual complaints, according to a spokesperson.

review- Muddy Waters, clearly a legend

By MIKE KOSTEK
Below The Salt Staff

Even if the folks at the Collegian can't tell Muddy from his rhythm guitarist, and even if he really cruised most of the evening, he showed why he is one of the world's greatest blues singers.

A most appreciative crowd of about 1,000 fans comfortably filled the Hatch, for the fourth attraction in their Celebrity Series. These people were not your usual beer nuts who populate the Bluewall; rather they were actually there to see and hear a legend.

Anyone who has ever gotten a taste of Muddy Waters must surely know, surely glow at the thought of The Voice. The man and The Voice, "Ah hahve hahd mah fuhn..."

And even though the closest most folk in the crows had ever come to the blues was the much-discussed all-night Allman Brothers, they too were liquidated by Muddy and his frayed Fender guitar.

Muddy, originally known as McKinley Morganfield, is in his fifties; and he venerated enough excitement to get the place jumping with classics like "Can't Get No Grindin'," "Baby Please Don't Go, and "Blow Wind", and especially his trademarks "Long Distance" Call" and "Got My Mojo Workin". I say venerated instead of generated because it was the idea of Muddy Waters rather than his actual music that got the crowd howling.

Most of the tail dragging was done not by Muddy, but his band, some of whom couldn't cut it in Chicago. Biggest cruiser was the harpe player, who knew all the standard blues licks a la Magic Dick of J. Geils Band, but these cliches were poorly played; and he seemed sublimely bored all night long.

Shining lights were 'Pinetop' Perkins on piano and 'Guitar' Junior on, surprise, guitar.

This was the finest concert yet in the Hatch's Series of Celebrities, and certainly will be remembered as one of the best of the year.

If Watergate jury not picked

Ford's testimony to Congress may be delayed

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Ford's scheduled Capitol Hill questioning about his pardon of Richard Nixon will be postponed from Thursday until late next week unless a jury is seated in the Watergate cover-up trial by tomorrow, a House Judiciary subcommittee, informally agreed yesterday.

Leaving the matter to be decided late tomorrow the panel tentatively agreed to invite Ford to reschedule his appearance - thought to be a historic first - for Thursday, Oct. 17, or later.

The subcommittee is anxious to avoid prejudicing the selection of jurors for the trial of five former high White House aides and political associates of Nixon for conspiracy in the Watergate cover-up.

Rep. Wiley Mayne, R-Iowa, said he was the only member of the nine-member subcommittee to oppose postponing Ford's appearance.

Scant information was available on progress toward seating a jury in the case, but Judge John J. Sirica said Monday he was hopeful the selection could be completed by the end of this week. That would indicate the Ford appearance would have to be put off, under the subcommittee's agreement.

Under the agreement, a later date will be found that fits into Ford's calendar if Oct. 17 is unavailable.

The subcommittee initially asked Ford to send a knowledgeable White House aide to Capitol Hill for questioning about the Nixon pardon, but Ford in a gesture thought to be unprecedented volunteered to come himself and the offer was accepted.

Mayne said he objected to the agreement to delay the appearance, if necessary, because, "I feel that if we were to agree to a further week's continuance, the thing is apt to be delayed indefinitely and it's too important to be delayed indefinitely."

Rep. William L. Hungate, D-Mo., subcommittee chairman, told reporters that "as of now, it's set for Thursday."

Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., of the parent Judiciary Committee, asked if the questioning of Ford would take place before the November elections, replied: "You can make book on that."

Before the subcommittee meeting one member said there was some concern within the panel that announcement of a postponement would itself prejudice jury selection in the cover-up trial.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen has characterized Ford's offer of a personal appearance before the committee as intended to bring the truth of the matter before the public. The subcommittee opened the planned appearance to live television coverage.

Heroin spreads to small cities as widespread drug abuse grows

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Federal officials told Congress yesterday heroin use is on the increase again and spreading from metropolitan areas to smaller cities in what may be another upswing in widespread drug abuse.

Increased seizures of cocaine, marijuana and hashish and a rise in drug abuse among servicemen point to resurgent growth in a problem that had appeared to be steadily declining in recent months, the officials said.

The officials, the top line-up of drug abuse specialists in the government, expressed special concern over Turkey's decision to resume growing opium poppies, saying it would add to a heroin supply already available on american streets from the Mexican poppy.

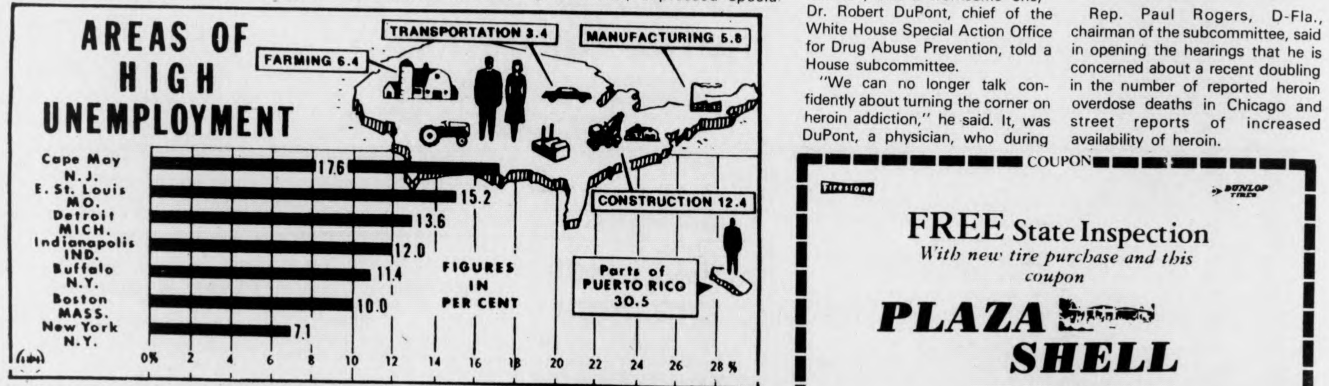
In the military services, a court ruling July 18 banning compulsory urine tests for drugs was followed in less than a month by a 50 per cent increase in the percentage of confirmed drug users among servicemen, the officials said. The percentage had remained steady for the previous 10 months.

"We have a genuinely new situation, and a worrisome one," Dr. Robert DuPont, chief of the White House Special Action Office for Drug Abuse Prevention, told a House subcommittee.

"We can no longer talk confidently about turning the corner on heroin addiction," he said. It, was DuPont, a physician, who during the last months of the Nixon administration reported the heroin problem had been turned around and was declining.

DuPont also reported that recent research shows marijuana has unexpectedly widespread effects on body processes and may have harmful effects on users, though there is "no direct clinical evidence." But he said marijuana use has been found to have adverse effects on reaction time and mechanical performance, which may be of "particular concern" in connection with driving.

Rep. Paul Rogers, D-Fla., chairman of the subcommittee, said in opening the hearings that he is concerned about a recent doubling in the number of reported heroin overdose deaths in Chicago and street reports of increased availability of heroin.



The national unemployment rate of 5.8 per cent tends to mask the distressing fact that in specific communities the jobless rate may be several times that figure. Statistics from the Labor Department's Manpower Administration can pinpoint the specific areas and sectors in which the rate is higher.

Clemency board to act on draft furloughs

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Presidential Clemency Board yesterday decided to "stop learning and start deciding" in the face of a 10-day deadline before furloughed draft resisters have to return to prison.

A spokesman for the board, which met in private after an initial public session, said the board had taken as top priority the cases of 83 draft resisters who were serving time when President Ford announced his earned re-entry and clemency program for Vietnam War resisters.

But the spokesman said the nine-member board had not yet made any decisions on the individual draft resistance cases before it.

He said the board decided it had to act on those cases because the Justice Department had granted only 30-day furloughs to the convicted resisters at the time of Ford's announcement, and this period would be up in 10 days.

"That means we have to have a recommendation to the President before that," the spokesman said.

The spokesman also said the board had not yet received a report on the 40 deserters who refused to leave military stockades at the time of the Ford announcement.

He said the board has obtained the files of 83 of the furloughed draft resisters and "everybody is wrestling" with those cases.

"They decided today to stop learning and start deciding cases," the spokesman said, even though they have not agreed on all the administrative procedures and don't even have a permanent staff.

Butz asks grain exporters to report sales

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz asked U.S. grain companies yesterday to report in advance any major sales to foreign countries and warned that mandatory export controls might be imposed if the voluntary system failed.

The new reporting system-designed to make sure the domestic grain supply is not depleted by an unexpected surge of sales abroad-was unveiled at a meeting between Agriculture Department officials, major grain exporters and other government agencies.

It differed from the old system primarily in that grain companies formerly were required only to report after the fact on major foreign grain sales. A secondary difference was that companies must now report smaller grain deals than in the past.

Announcement of the new system coincided with conflicting claims by Butz and two major grain companies over whether the Agriculture Department knew in advance about a sale to the Soviet Union called off this past weekend at the request of the President.

The companies said they cleared the sale in advance, even though they were not required to do so. But Butz said he did not know about it until after the fact.

Grains covered initially under the new requirements included wheat, corn, sorghum, soy beans and soy bean meal. But officials hinted the program might be expanded later to barley, oats and soy bean oil.

Butz said he hoped the new reporting system-formulated in haste after two major grain companies postponed under White House pressure the sale of 3.4 million tons of corn and wheat to the Soviet Union-will make the imposition of across-the-board export controls unnecessary.

He also said he hoped the new reporting system would guarantee exports of as much grain as the previous system, which forced companies to report export sales of much larger volumns of grain to the department after the sales were made.

"We intend to remain vigorously in the export market," Butz said.

Although there are no teeth in the new reporting policy, Butz strongly indicated that export controls could become a reality if major exporters fail to meet the requirements.

"The alternative in the absence of cooperation in this situation is general export controls, which we want to avoid at all costs and these people the exporters want to avoid," Butz said.

Surcharge proposed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — With President Ford reported ready to propose a 5 per cent surcharge on income taxes in the higher brackets, Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said he favored the idea if it is limited to those making $20,000 or more a year.

Mansfield's Republican counterpart, Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, gave his unconditional support to the surtax should Ford include it — as has been widely reported — in the economic package he will present to Congress and the nation today.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., demurred, calling the 5 per cent levy "an unfortunate suggestion."

Attica trial delayed

BUFFALO, N.Y. [UPI] — State Supreme Court Justice Frank R. Bayger has recessed the first Attica prison riot trial until tomorrow so that he can consider a defense motion to dismiss the charges.

The motions for a trial order of dismissal were made by defense attorney James Kemp, of Rochester, after the presecution rested its case against Willie Smith, 27, of Buffalo. Kemp rested his case without calling any witnesses.

Kissinger travels

WASHINGTON [AP] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has added three energy-producing Arab states to his Middle East trip, at the same time claiming there's no link between Arab-Israeli negotiations and the high cost of oil.

He told reporters yesterday at his first news conference in nearly two months that he will stop in Saudi Arabia, Algeria and Morocco in addition to Egypt, Syria, Jordan and Israel.

Kissinger leaves tonight for the Middle East in his latest effort to rejuvenate negotiations for a Middle East settlement. He is now scheduled to return Oct. 15.

None of the three countries added is directly involved in the Arab-Israeli situation, but each is pivotal in Arab policy-making on the price and supply of oil as well as related products such as natural gas.

Police battle whites blocking Boston buses

BOSTON [UPI] — Police yesterday battled an estimated 600 whites who formed a human chain across a South Boston street to block busloads of black children on their way home from school in the worst violence connected with court ordered desegregation.

All bars and private clubs in South Boston were ordered closed last night after the major incident there involving arrest of 85 persons. A total of 33 predominantly young people were arrested Monday, 18 of them at Roslindale, where unrest prevailed early in the day.

Mayor Kevin H. White late Monday asked for a meeting at 9 a.m. Tuesday with U.S. Judge W. Arthur Garrity who issued the controversial order to review the situation, which included firing of at least two shots by police.

White has been an advocate of enforcing racial balance in the schools. But city officials were obviously disturbed by the outburst of violence Monday. Although 300 police-many wielding clubs-subdued demonstrators, police armed with guns stood on rooftops to avoid furtheg trouble. Two persons were hospitalized, including a 31 year old black man hit by a thrown bottle and a 17 year old white youth who claimed he was beaten repeatedly by police. Several police also suffered apparently minor injuries.

A black man, en route to a South Boston school to pick up his daughter, was stopped by hundreds of whites, some of whom shouted, "There's a nigger!" He got out of his car and fled, with some whites in pursuit.

They cornered him on a flight of stairs and continued to beat him. When police went to his aid, they turned on police.

Off-shore oil leases delayed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Interior Department will not sell leases for off-shore oil exploration before environmental studies have been made despite a controversial memo that indicates the contrary, a department official assured Congress yesterday.

Jared G. Carter, deputy Interior undersecretary and author of the memo, said it was intended as merely a "schedule" for off-shore leasing and was "not a very important policy statement."

The memo, published by the Washington Post last week, said that at the direction of Interior Undersecretary John C. Whitaker, Carter was asking the federal officials responsible for leasing to draft a "firm leasing schedule" to include "10 million acres leased in 1975 — not just 10 million acres offered."

Rolling 201: HOW TO ROLL BETTER
Required Textbooklet: e-z wider
Prof. E. Z. Jay

1. Fold the paper (approx. ¾") at the end that isn't gummed. Sprinkle tobacco into this fold. Put more at the ends than in the middle Close the paper over the tobacco. But don't tuck it in back of the tobacco just yet.

2. Hold both halves of the paper, cradling the tobacco inside with your thumbs closest to you and your second and third fingers in back.

3. Spin the tobacco by sliding the paper back and forth a number of times.

4. When the tobacco is shaped and packed; pinch the tobacco and the paper at the center so that when you start to roll, the paper will guide itself around the tobacco.

5. Roll the cigarette tightly, beginning at the center; and by pulling, work your fingers out to the ends.

6. Lick the gummed edge closed. Trim loose tobacco from the ends. The cigarette is now ready to smoke.

This course is open to both beginning and advanced students of hand-rolled cigarettes. Emphasis is on easier, better rolling via the use of E-Z Wider double-width rolling papers. The course exposes the disadvantages of conventional rolling practices such as sticking two regular papers together to roll one smoke. Students will learn that there is no better gummed paper made than E-Z Wider.

Everywoman's Center announces fall program

Everywoman's Center is now offering workshops by, for, and about women. This Fall the Project Self workshop program includes many new and innovative workshops.

Creative Divorce Adjustment, is a workshop in which women can identify and support each other in the new alternatives that they choose for their lives. This helps themselves and each other to make their divorce adjustment more creative and less traumatic.

The participants in the Effective Public Speaking workshop will learn the basic skills of addressing groups of people as well as overcoming the fears that many women struggle with when speaking to individuals and groups.

Teri Rumpf, a staffwoman at Everywoman's Center is facilitating a workshop in Career Explorations. The purpose of the workshop is to facilitate the career development of women through information, life planning and group sharing. This workshop will run for four weeks on Tuesday nights from 7-9.

Registration for Project Self workshops is by mail or in person until October 15. Workshops will begin the week of October 21. The workshops are low cost ($20) with scholarships available to women on welfare and others needing financial assistance.

Everywoman's Center fall hours are Monday-Friday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Wednesday, 1 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Smith College Museum holds Rodin exhibit

The Smith College Museum of Art is exhibiting until October 28 a group of Auguste Rodin's sculptural studies for his controversial Monument to Honore de Balzac. Though rejected by a jeering public at the time of its first exhibition in 1898, the monument is an artistic triumph as well as a pivotal work of modern sculpture.

The fourteen bronzes in the exhibition are part of the major collection of Rodin's work made by B. Gerald Cantor which, earlier this year, he presented to three United States museums, the Stanford University Museum of Art, the Los Angeles County Museum and the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

Rodin accepted in 1891 a commission from the influential Society des Gens de Lettres to create a monument to the great French writer, author of La Comedie Humaine, whom he admired but whom he had never seen. Between 1891 and 1898 Rodin made nearly fifty studies for the monument, depending on caricatures, paintings and sculptures made of the writer during his lifetime and on literary descriptions of his appearance and his personality, sometimes using living models whose physique resembled Balzac's.

The studies for the monument to Balzac in this exhibition now belong to the Stanford University Museum, and are part of Mr. Cantor's gift to it.

The Smith College Museum of Art owns three Rodin sculptures. One, The Walking Man, is on permanent exhibition in the outdoor sculpture court. Man with a Broken Nose and Brother & Sister may be seen in the main gallery. The Museum is open Tuesday through Saturday from 11 to 4:30, Sunday from 2 to 4:30; it is closed on Monday.

EE to open treatment plant

Environmental engineers at UMass will hold an open house at their new waste treatment pilot plant Saturday afternoon, Oct. 19, rom 2 to 5.

The plant uses several advanced treatment processes to take wastewater from the town of Amherst and process it into effluent waters that are clean and sparkling.

It is a research and demonstration facility, the research being done on new sewage treatment processes and the demonstration showing how conventional treatment of sewage works.

The plant is located on University land next to the Amherst sewage treatment plant as the west edge of the UMass campus near the Mill River. In the past four years, the Massachusetts Division of Water Pollution and Control has granted a total of $300,000 to the project. UMass has donated the land for the site and helped defray costs of construction.

Both undergraduate and graduate students participate in research at the plant under the direction of a team of faculty and technicians headed by Dr. Francis A. DiGiano of the environmental engineering program, a branch of the Civil Engineering Department.

Some of the processes being tried at the plant are not in general use today but are expected to be common within ten years or so, according to Dr. Di Giano--phosphorus and nitrogent removal, for example, to eliminate the cause of overfeeding (eutrophication) in lakes and rivers.

All town officials, environmentalists, other interested persons and the general public are cordially invited. The plant can be reached by a road that runs north off Massachusetts Ave. near the Route 116 intersection.

New Haven gets slick shoreline

NEW HAVEN [AP] — The heaviest shoreline damage from Sunday's 102,000-gallon oil spill in New Haven harbor was along the industrial east shore in the area of oil storage tanks, a state spokesman said Monday.

Up to 1,000 gallons of heavy Nos. 4 and 6 oil beached the shore near when an Exxon-chartered tanker tied up after apparently striking bottom, according to Russell C. Dibble, chief field inspector of the state Department of Environmental Protection DEP.

Legal responsibility for the grounding has not been determined, a U.S. Coast Guard spokesman said.

Oil patches of between 50 and 100 gallons each also fouled six other areas, including beaches, stretching from the harbor mouth about two miles east of Branford's Indian Neck, Dibble said.

An oil slick measuring about one-half to three-quarters of a mile remained offshore in the harbor, he added.

"We just have to wait and see what direction it will take," he said.

Dibble said most of the oil outside the harbor would be cleaned up Monday by Exxon-hired crews. The remaining oil should be removed within a week, he added.

The spill was the largest on the Connecticut side of Long Island Sound since January 1971, when a tanker named Esso Gettysburg hit an unidentified object near the sit of Summit's grounding and spilled about 336,000 gallons of light No. 2 oil.

DEP and Coast Guard spokesmen said containment efforts Sunday began minutes after the ship was damaged.

Boston bar brawl in hands of JDCRD

BOSTON [AP] — The FBI referred its preliminary report Monday on a police incident at a South Boston tavern to the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division.

U.S. Rep. Joseph Moakley, D-Mass., said the FBI's field office in Boston expedited the report at the urging of FBI Director Clarence Kelley. Any further action in the case will be up to Asst. U.S. Atty. J. Stanley Pottinger, head of the Civil Rights Division.

Circumstances of the incident Saturday night remained unclear.

A police report said eight police cars responded to a call of an officer in trouble inside the bar. The call was false, and the police were met by "a barrage of bricks."

However, patrons of the tavern said police used excessive force and caused extensive damage and some injuries.

The FBI was asked to enter the case by South Boston politicians, who wrote a letter Sunday calling the incident an "unprovoked police attack."

College grads not to be trusted

By BOB McCARTNEY
Staff Correspondent

College-educated professionals, who dominate our society, are not trusted anymore, according to a Princeton University political science professor.

Speaking Saturday at the Copeland Colloquium on the Amherst College campus, Sheldon Wolin called for higher ethical standards among lawyers, statesmen, and other professionals.

"We live in a society dominated by professionals," Wolin said. "But nobody trusts these people anymore."

Wolin maintained that the Watergate scandal is responsible for much disenchantment with lawyers and politicians. But, he added, the rise of huge bureaucracies both in government and business has also encouraged college-educated professionals to act immorally.

"There were more precedents for most of former President Nixon's shenanigans than for most Supreme Court decisions," Wolin claimed. "Professionals today must try to climb the ladder by staying within the bureaucratic system."

Wolin's address was the third in the first session of this year's colloquium. The annual colloquium brings together various speakers to address a single topic. This year's series is focusing on "Ethics and the Professions". The next session will be held at the end of this month.

Funds to pay speakers comes from a gift by Morris A. Copeland and his wife. Copeland is a 1917 Amherst College graduate.

Campus Comments

By Jim Poulin

The Bluewall, people eat there and people drink there...boy do they drink there. The on campus club has the reputation of being the largest buyer of beer in New England. In the past some students have called for it to be closed, while others line up three across to get in and drink and boogy. Campus Comments was curious about how people felt about the crowd, the drunks and the noise.

The question. What are your feelings of the Bluewall-the atmosphere, the location, the state of repairs etc.

Bonny Gaudette, JQA-Southwest, Special Education, Freshperson from Lawrence.

I don't like the Blue Wall at all. I don't think its very friendly at all. I went there a lot last year and didn't like it. It's lousy (the condition). I just don't like it in comparison with other clubs. The prices aren't that bad. It's much too small for the UMass campus.

David Reynolds, MassCommunications Junior. MacKimmie-Southwest.

Personally I don't think that it's a good place for minority students. It's used mainly by white students. The entertainment there caters mainly to white students. Other than that, it does get sort of rowdy.

Eileen Sheehan, Sophomore

I haven't even been there this year. Well some people must like it. Some of my friend's seem to be there all the time. They live there, it seems. It seems that a few of the professors go there. In fact last year, some friends of mine had a history professor who used to meet them down there all the time. It's a good place for the students and the faculty to get together.

Tom Sampson, Natural Resources major, Senior.

I hardly ever go there... I don't go to bars that much. When I do, I tend to go off campus to a bar that has a band that I'm interested in and an atmosphere I enjoy more than the Bluewall. I've been there a couple of times this semester. It's like a cafeteria atmosphere, and I prefer a different kind of an atmosphere for just sitting around drinking.

Donna Querze J.Q.A. Southwest.

I don't even go there anymore. I'd go there every once in a while, but that place, it's really bogus. It's a good place to go to see people crowding together, but it's just too much. It's just too much all at once. It's good to sit outside and watch the people going in and out. You can only stay in there for so long.

George Twitchell, Graduate student, living off campus studying Regional Planning.

I haven't been down there yet. I was outside it one Saturday night and it seemed alright. I haven't gotten a TOC sticker yet.

Letters to the editor

No respect for Lazar

To the Editor:

Every now and then The Massachusetts Daily Collegian publishes rubbish that is odious and fulsome by any standard of decency.

Such an error in taste was published in the Monday, Sept. 30 issue, in Jerry Lazar's column. First came a sarcastic allusion to Richard Nixon's phlebitis. This was bad enough, but Nixon lately is a straw man whom everyone's been attacking, so perhaps Mr. Lazar can be excused for that.

The next remark was far worse. I quote: " 'And what does Betty Ford got [sic] that I don't got' [sic]?' he continued. To which his roommate just smiled."

Anyone who can make so light of such a dangerous and private an illness as Mrs. Ford's, who is especially vulnerable to gallows humor by accident of her social prominence, is a person for whom I have lost all respect. Such bad taste on The Collegian's and Mr. Lazar's part makes me ill and very inclined [perhaps unfairly] to disavow any cause or position which either represents. After all, I must consider the source of such support.

McGilvray disgusting and tasteless

To the Editor:

Normally I find myself able to ignore the lack of humor and intelligence in McGilvray's cartoons. However the cartoon that appeared in the MDC on October 4th had to be the most disgusting and tasteless I have ever seen.

Apparently this "cartoonist" was able to find "humor" in something as tragic as Mrs. Ford's masectomy. Doesn't he realize that Mrs. Ford is dying? Is there any humor in that? Breast cancer is a very serious disease that affects 9 out of 14 women in the United States, every 5 to 8 seconds. Only 60 per cent can expect to live 3 years and only 30 per cent will ever make it to 5 years after the cancer has been detected. These statistics are frightening enough, not to mention the physical pain and mental anguish the woman must endure. Many women are afraid of their husband's reactions; they foolishly feel that they are now not "complete women". There is also the possibility of never having the total use of their arms again if the underlying muscles have been removed.

The fact that Otto's friend admonishes him for being crude does not change the fact that McGilvray wrote [and the MDC printed] this sick cartoon. I'm sure there are many students on campus who have been personally involved with women who have suffered the loss of a breast. I hope that no loved one of Mr. McGilvray will ever have to go through this type of operation. How would he like to not only go through the suffering but the publicity as well? Put yourself in Mrs. Ford's position, McGilvray — could you have been as brave?

Ms. Davis overlooks facts

To the Editor:

I would like to air some of my own views about Angela Davis's idealized philosophy and fill in some facts that she seemed to have overlooked. In her address, Ms. Davis said something to the affect that, under the Tzars, the Asian peoples of Russian were subjugated by their colonial power. I would like to know if this is worse than the colonial power of the Soviet Union subjugating, most notably and violently, the peoples of Czechoslovakia and Hungary. Surely this is not the equality for all that Ms. Davis would have us believe of the Soviet Socialist system. Ms. Davis should read something other than the stuff the Soviet Socialist Party puts out; perhaps The Gulag Archipelago [by Alexander Solzhenitsyn], the words of a man who was persecuted for telling the truth, by her beloved Soviet Socialist system. I agree that our system doesn't shine but it gives you a little faith when two guys, Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward, toppled a whole administration because they could investigate and reveal their Watergate knowledge without fear of retaliation.

UMass: experience,service

To the Editor:

The UMass student video project was conceived by a group of students concerned with the lack of an effective video outlet on campus. Its purpose is to provide such an outlet for production and exhibition of student programming. Through the medium of video-tape, students can acquire the practical experience of shooting and editing programs, while, at the same time, serve the entire university community by providing creative, informative and educational programming [ie documentaries, news, lectures, concerts, sports, etc.].

The student video project will insure free and easy access to equipment, available for loan to members. Also, a workshop will teach students who are unfamiliar with the medium production techniques. Student productions will be aired on a closed circuit basis in the Campus Center. [Planning stages]

Active membership is open to all students, graduate and undergraduate. Anyone interested in learning the operation of video-tape or in getting access to equipment is encouraged to attend an open meeting on Wednesday, October 9th, at 8:00 in Room 911-915 of the Campus Center. Old WUMV or WTOY people are welcome.

WSYL and "primetime"

To the Editor:

In response to Dean Collota's letter last Friday on alleged politics in WSYL, I would like to add a few more facts that Dean failed to mention. These facts might have saved Mr. Collota some embarrassment if he had investigated further.

We do not have any "prime time" designation on any of our slots at WSYL. If there has been such a distinction, it is only from the DJ's themselves and not the staff. But if I can interpret Mr. Collota's meaning, I would say he is referring to the daily 7—10 pm, 10—1 am time slots. It is interesting to note that out of the fourteen so called "prime time" slots, eight are being occupied by first semester freshmen, with the remaining slots being filled by one new undergraduate DJ, four last semester DJ's and one last semester DJ voluntarily sharing his slot with a Head of Residence.

Due to our commitment to Affirmative Action, we have an ongoing policy of giving women in the Sylvan Area preference over men in the assignment of air time in an attempt to equalize the male/ female ratio on the staff. This was the only special consideration given Diane Murray, Head of Residence of Brown.

It is unfortunate that due to an overwhelming number of applicants many residents were assigned as alternates. And unless there is massive absenteeism among the regular staff, some alternates won't be utilized as substitutes and thus won't get a chance at doing a show. However, every effort will be made to guarantee every applicant some air time. We have already incorporated a special six hour time slot on Saturday to allow those alternates who didn't get a chance to substitute that week, a chance to do a show at least once every two weeks.

I suspect that if Mr. Collota had gotten what he perceives as "prime time", we would hardly be exchanging letters to the Editor.

Living and learning

The Indian summer is upon us. The browning bushels of trees marking the Valley are moving us ever onward. With a three day weekend coming up, many are planning their last "exodus" before the eternal "throat" sets in.

"Throat" is short of "cut-throat". It is a word that I heard when I was a freshman at Rutgers. A word used to symbolize the "plugger" the classmate who would go to the library and "book till twelve". The age of activism was coming to an end, but the "throat" had not yet come of age...again. In the spring, the Cambodian demonstrations would provide the last real gasp of activism, but even that soon passed on.

Perhaps we are entering the age of the "throat". The job market is tough, and many of us seem to be getting a tight feeling inside. A feeling of "where do we go from here". The conflict between the present and the future is not always easy to resolve. We are entering very uncertain times, when a history degree or a political science degree is good, only in as far as it qualifies you for a graduate or Law school.

People are studying more these days. A few are trying to pick up science or statistics courses, to play off both sides of the game. "I'm taking history for my head, and statistics for my pocketbook" was one friends explanation of his academic pattern, said only half in jest.

So while it is easier than ever to slip into the pattern of the "throat", to bust for "the grade", it is important to look even deeper into the situation.

Jobs are tight. No doubt they will get tighter. It is for this reason that we have to do what Dick Gregory, the comedian-turn-political sage once recommended, "learn how to live, ather than simply live to learn (how to make money)."

Bertrand Russell, in his book Conquest of Happiness once minimized the struggle to live, by saying that life wasn't all that complicated, and that people should try and just do the best they can and enjoy themselves.

Erick Fromm in several of his books at various times has said that we should go hard and pursue what we feel, whether it be goals or love, at 100 per cent. But that we should do it because we want to, and not because we have to.

The time has come to ask ourselves just why we are in school at all. If it is just to go up one more level in the social system, hell one day you may find yourself totally socialized...and 67 years old. The point is people have to come to grips with their own reality, and sense of hope.

I have been confronted with this conflict, and can count two dozen friends who have felt the same tension these past few weeks. The Law School Admission Tests are next week, and we have been socialized to believe that if we don't do well in this "biggy" we will never get a chance to hold Perry Mason's briefs.

Dave Hoffman, of the Project Ten Faculty has spent many hours discussing the entire concept of living learning with me over coffee. Hoffman, a firm believer that what you learn outside of the class is as important as what you learn within has helped me understand the benefits of individual growth through individual learning!

The point is; hell we're at College. We don't know where we will be five years from now. Without minimizing the importance of preparing yourself for a career, it is just as important to learn how to live in the present.

Get involved with now. If you're living in Butterfield or Pierpont, or half a dozen other dorms that have some sense of community, you're lucky - take advantage of it, and help work within it. If your dorm doesn't have any commaraderie past the keg that the section chips in for on Friday nights, help build one.

This place is gigantic. Whitmore looks like a castle under seige. You can get squeezed to death at the Blue Wall, (if you don't get stared to death by the "guards" on the way in). But search out the beauty. Go find some of the fine hiking trails, Get to really know some of your professors. And if you get a few moments...come on up and join the Collegian.

Chances are the time spent in the NOW will help you more than the extra hour in the "libes".....or just hanging around the room. There are people in this University worth knowing...you might be one of them. Seek each other out, and don't be afraid to try.

Enjoy the Pioneer Valley as the leaves turn brown. Living for now doesn't have to be a contradiction to living for the future. If you can coordinate them both together...you'll be doing alright.

Fred Weiss is a Collegian Commentator.

The radiator arrest

A hissing cadence, foreign to my ears was emanating from under the hood of my car. This was soon followed by an ascending vapor of white steam. A course in Logic 101 would tell me that something was wrong; a similar class in Mechanics 117 would inform me that it was my radiator. Having never taken either course I continued to drive on completely oblivious to what was happening. My foot weighed heavily on the accelerator pedal and I could swear a low, dismal voice radiating from the floor of the car said "Don't bother pushing any harder, I'm not going any faster..."

My superior intellect had by now deduced that repair was in order. I struggled through the hills and finally arrived at a small gas and service station just outside of Amherst.

A tobacco-chewing mechanic, with two teeth (one for candy, one for gum) stepped from his office and proceeded to open the hood of the car.

"Gaud!" he exclaimed. "Lookie that batt'ry. Gaud, that's gaudawful.. hey, Jake! Jake! Ya come hea an lookie that batt'ry, huh?"

For what all intend was his partner walked casually across the gravel wiping grease from under his nails. "Yeah?" he inquired and followed the other's finger down into the bowels of the vehicle. "Waah, fa Chrissake, mista... that's gutta be the baddest most worst radiat, ah batt'ry I evva seen!" A lengthy convention of all the station attendents ensued in which they all mumbled and looked across to me and never once at the car. I gave orders to repair whatever was necessary.

Minus thirty dollars and I was on my way through Amherst as twilight began to set in.

The lights began to flicker from bright to dim to total darkness. I decided that I must reach another gas station soon and inquire as to what was amiss

I came to a turn in the road and looked around. There was no other car in sight; I decided not to use the directional signals in fear of losing all power that the car possessed. I casually made the turn...

I pulled over and a state vehicle came up aside me. The door swung open in an official manner and he leaned over to my window.

The usual license and registration, were requested. He was about to speak when another police car came on the scene. "What's up Brad?" queried the other officer.

"Everything's fine Barry. Just gutta 10-14 here."

"10-14! You gutta rapist?"

"Rape! No, no 10-14 is failure to use directional signals at an intersection."

"No, no! That's 10-19. 10-14 is rape."

"Say, maybe this guy is that rapist we've been looking all over for, huh?" A battle of numbers and figures as to what I was guilty of followed. I scanned the buildings behind us and watched a black masked gentleman climb through a veiled window

More blue lights and another car marked local police pulled up. "Whassa problem, gents?"

"Gutta 10-14 hea" "No, no, a 10-19!"

"10-14? Breakin' 'n enterin'? or 10-19, armed robbery? This is a job for the local authorities. Let me handle it."

"This is a state case, pal. So buzz off. We gut him first!"

"Now hold on there buddy. You're in Amherst.."

"You're also in Massachusetts and this is a state case!"

A long black car pulled along side of us.

"10-14, huh?" began the newly arrived official. "Kidnapping... that's a federal offense. I'll handle things from here. Good work."

"Hang on there fella," claimed the statey, "But this is a state case, understand. Where'd you get kidnappin' from?"

A motorcycle cop arrived, and I was soon wanted for theft of a vehicle, kidnapping, rape, armed robbery, breaking and entering, bodily assault, and, oh yes, failure to use my directional signals. This was topped off with resisting arrest. As they continued arguing I casually slipped away from the scene and drove to the nearest gas station.

A mangy looking fellow attended me. "Gaud!" he exclaimed as he opened the hood. "Lookie that thar fan belt. Hey, Charlie. Lookie here!"

"Gauddamn! That fan belt sure needs caring for!" When they had finished and I was presented with the bill I queried them on the prices. "What's this, your 'phone number?"

"No, that's the bill price. A phone number only has seven digits! Now, it's thirty-nine-fifty for fixin' the thingamajig; and a forty even for the whosamawhatsee and, oh ya I had ta fill your tank, that was another eighty-three-forty-five..."

AMERICA'S SOLUTION FOR STARVATION

It's gone too far

The Amherst Fire Department had a rough weekend. Not only did they answer a false alarm early Saturday morning (around 1 a.m.), but while the truck was parked outside John Adams dorm, an axe worth $40 to $50 was stolen from it.

And then, the following morning, while answering an ambulance call near the SBA building around 11 a.m., a portable radio worth $800 was stolen from the vehicle.

The equipment, especially the radio is of no value to the person who stole it. It is, however, extremely important to the Fire Department, who must operate without it for a year because there is no money in the present budget to replace it.

The radio, as Capt. Edward Markert put it, "is a vital part of our function," a function which includes over 500 ambulance trips per year to the University.

Capt. Markert went on to explain that the equipment was uninsured for theft because, as he said, there was "no reason" to do so. Apparently, Capt. Markert had more faith in the student population than it deserved.

The stolen axe will find it's way into someone's camping gear. The radio will probably be sold as parts to some unsuspecting electronics dealer or to a radio freak who is happy to get parts at a discount. The thieves will realize a small profit. There is no need here to talk about how desperate people are for money...but the thefts of life saving publicly owned equipment over the weekend show that the end is no where in sight.

The hockey team-getting pucked over

Since 1954 UMass hockey teams have been forced to live like hermits. Technically they play all their games on the road because all their home games on paper are played at Orr Ring on the campus of Amherst College, approximately two miles away.

Hockey players at UMass have been forced over the years to become the toughest and most courageous athletes on campus. They live a life of adventure in trying to thumb rides to Orr Rink and then fight the frigidity of winter nights as they improvise rides back to Curry Hicks Cage where they dress-while the sweat threatens to turn to ice on their perspiring bodies. Orr rink has no showers.

It's a deplorable, pitiful situation and what's worse it is an effrontery to the pride of this state that the largest campus of the state university does not have its own rink after long years of squabbling and inactivity, among administrators.

Massachusetts has the best crop of high school hockey players in the country. A decent on-campus ice facility would ensure that the best of those players would come and play hockey here.

A rink at UMass-Amherst, could guarantee a national ranking for a UMass hockey team among the top ten in not more than two years. Without a doubt, within, three or four years the best hockey team in the country would not be at Denver U., or Minnesota but right on this campus.

With the interest in hockey in this area it is incredible that a hockey facility still has not materialized. Intramural teams would be able to play their hockey here instead of in Greenfield, while skaters could use the facility as well. In any event a rink on this campus would be busier than the Bluewall on a Satuday night.

While the Universities of Maine and Rhode Island have embarked on extensive hockey programs including the construction of 5,000 seat facilities, UMass-Amherst looks pretty bad for being the only ECAC Division One or two hockey teams not to have its own facilities for hockey.

The time has come for positive action to be taken in the direction of having a rink constructed on this campus. Construction begins in the spring at the Boston Campus of a hockey rink which should have been built here first a long time ago. If the administrators of this University truly believe they have the students' interests at heart then they must see to it that action be taken not a year from now, or five years from now but now, that will lead to the construction of a hockey rink on the Amherst campus. It has been too long in coming.

The opinions in this space represent those of a majority of the board of Editors.

It's all in the stars says the Astrology Society

President Ford's horoscope will be the main topic of discussion at tonight's general meeting of the Astrology Society.

Barry Lynes, who is having a book published in November on the U.S. Horoscope, will be among some of the Astrologers from the area who will join in on the interpretation of Ford's birthchart.

New people are always welcome as contributors or just spectators, the Society has said.

The meeting is in the Campus Center, rm. 163 at 8 p.m. Beginner Classes in Astrology are on Wednesday evenings at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center; watch notices for room number. The general public is always invited.

notes & quotes

Music at the museum...

Two members of the music faculty at UMass will present a recital at the Gardner Museum in Boston tonight at 8 p.m., open to the public free of charge.

Dorothy Ornest, soprano, and Walter Chesnut, trumpet, will perform works by Handel, Bach, Viviani and Scarlatti. Four songs with harpsichord by 16th century composers will also be included on the program.

Assisting the featured artists will be Julian Olevsky, violin, Ronald Steele, violin, Laura Campbell, French horn, Mildred Johnson, viola, Leopold Teraspulsky, cello, and Miriam Whaples, harpsichord.

Dorothy Ornest, an associate professor of voice, has been a soloist with the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, and the Detroit Symphony and has given many college recitals.

Walter Chesnut, a graduate of the University of Michigan, is assistant professor of trumpet and the director of the UMass-Amherst Brass Choir. He has been a member of seven symphony orchestras, including the Springfield Symphony, and is active as a soloist in the Five-College area.

He has served as a clinician at the Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire All-State music conferences, and, in 1970, toured Europe with the University of Massachusetts Chorale as a soloist and member of the Brass Trio.

... and later at Bowker

Rodney Gisick, a member of the voice faculty of the UMass Department of Music, will present a free recital Wednesday, October 9, at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

A baritone, Gisick's program will feature four songs with the composer assisting at the piano. Songs by Busoni, Billings, Foster, Grieg, Ives and others will also be performed.

Assisting on the program will be UMass music faculty members Peter Tanner, piano, and Joanne Tanner, piccolo.

Gisick has given recitals throughout the Midwest and New England and has performed with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra. He toured Germany with the U.S.O., entertaining servicemen abroad.

A native of Kansas, he received his Bachelor of Music degree from Bethany College in Lindsborg, Kansas, and his Master of Music degree from the New England Conservatory in Boston.

Before coming to UMass he taught at the Cambridge School in Western, Mass. and Our Lady of the Elms College in Chicopee, Mass.

10:15 p.m.: FOCUS — Ken Mosakowski moderates a live debate on continued nuclear power production in Western Mass. Part 2 of a 2 part series.

Dutch Elm conference Thursday

As part of the University of Massachusetts' Shade Tree Laboratories' "shade tree program" at Amherst and Waltham, the 29th ANNUAL DUTCH ELM DISEASE CONFERENCE will be held from 1:00 to 4:00 on Thursday afternoon at the Ray Koon Auditorium in the UMass Suburban Experiment Station, 240 Beaver Street, Waltham, Mass.

A Conference is sponsored by the University Cooperative Extension Service, in cooperation with the Massachusetts Forest & Park Association, and is open to the public without charge.

Discussion will include (1) current research on effectiveness of experimental chemicals against the disease-causing fungus inside the tree, (2) observations on use of certain insecticides to control the disease vectors (elm bark beetles), and (3) renewed research into the possibility of attracting and trapping of elm bark beetles.

Socialist raps gov't

By JUDY STUDLEY
Staff Correspondent

Maceo Dixon, the chairperson of the Socialist Workers 1974 Campaign Committee recently was involved in the dismantling of the Detroit police stress units, spoke here on "Police Terror in the Black community."

But he spent most of the speech attacking the U.S. government and offering Socialist alternatives to inflation.

Dixon, feels that neither the Democrats nor the Republicans can offer any solutions to the problem of inflation because, he said, both parties are working together only for the rich and not for the working class. The U.S. government can't destroy inflation because that would mean destroying itself, Dixon said.

He also noted that the Socialist Party wasn't invited to President Ford's economic summit meeting, despite the party's offer to attend.

Dixon attacked Henry Kissinger for his and the CIA's alleged involvement in the overthrow of the Allende government in Chile. In regards to the Nixon pardon, Nixon asked, "What about our Attica brothers?"

Offering alternatives, Dixon believes that all production should be turned over to the working people.

Dixon suggested cutting the work week to 30 hours while still being paid for 40 hours. This move would spread the work around. Jobs should be guaranteed for all youths upon graduation from high school or college. Preferential treatment should be given to blacks, Puerto Ricans and women, he said.

In the Detroit Police stress units, police officers acted as decoys disguising themselves as hippies and drunks, said Dixon. This, was producing criminals and entrapping blacks, according to him. Dixon offered as evidence the 21 blacks who were killed in the two years that the stress units existed.

Dixon outlined the four steps which were taken in Detroit to break the Civil Rights movement. This included the availability of drugs in the Detroit ghettos in 1967, beefing up of the Detroit police force, crushing black organizations like the Black Panthers, and when stress units were used to terrorize and dehumanize the blacks.

McDonald's® presents the Glass of '75.

Next time you feel the urge for a tall one at McDonald's, just ask and we'll wrap your large soda in the ultimate of status symbols. A genuine 100% pure plastic cup. Suitably inscribed with the U.Mass. Minuteman on one side. And those handsome golden arches on the other side. It's free for the asking with any large soda.

Imagine all the exciting uses you can find for this pint-sized beauty. Add a little dirt and go into organic farming. Use it as a new home for your outdated pop-top collection. Or stuff it with all those important little odds and ends you can never find. And if your cup runneth over, just start again with a new one. At the price, you can afford a whole collection.

So come down and spring for a large drink. And get all that status, gratis.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Tuesday, October 8

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) — Know a good thing when you see it. Otherwise, you will find that you've left the best behind for others to take advantage of.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Though this isn't the best of times for getting a new project off the ground, you might do well to take the first tentative steps in that direction.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Make improvements on old ways and means and you could well find yourself the recipient of unexpected gains by nightfall.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Act upon your own beliefs and principles. If you wait to receive directives from another with experience in the field, it may be too late.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Be tactful as you present new ideas to those in authority. Otherwise you may cause others to think that you're dissatisfied with them personally.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Take a chance on something new and different. If you insist on keeping to tried and true methods of operation you may miss out on considerable gain.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take advantage of another's offer to take over a part of your new responsibilities. You can help yourself and others to new profits.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Clothe your ideas in subtleties and finesse. You can present your plans early in the day — but only if you pave the way with smooth talk.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — The wise Gemini will not hesitate to combine business with pleasure. You will know instinctively when you've had enough of either!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Professional advancement should not be difficult to come by if you present yourself in a new and flattering light. Don't emphasize your toughness.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Put some oomph into your presentation of your product if you expect to make a coup. Don't allow another to overshadow you where salesmanship is concerned.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Artistic interests receive a boost today from a combination of near and distant advantages. Allow yourself the benefit of any doubt.

S.B.A. to hold conferences

Salesmanship, equal employment opportunity, sales management, and purchasing will be topics of four conferences here this month at the School of Business Administration.

"Principles of Professional Salesmanship" is scheduled for Wednesday through Friday, Oct. 9-11. Directing the sessions will be Max Sacks, president of Max Sacks, International, who has given sales training for IBM, Sylvania, Bekins Van & Storage Co., and others. He will offer "how-to-make-the-sale" solutions for various sales problems.

"How to Live with EEO" will be conducted Thursday and Friday, Oct. 17 and 18, with speakers including Arthur A. Fletcher, assistant secretary of labor for employment standards, from May 1969 to Sept. 1971.

Other speakers at the Equal Employment Opportunity conference will be Alfred W. and Ruth Blumrosen. Mr. Blumrosen is a law professor at Rutgers University School of Law. He has been first chief of conciliation and first chief of Federal-State Relations for the U.S. EEO Commission and in 1971-72 directed training programs for state and local officials.

Ms. Blumrosen is an associate professor in the Rutgers University Graduate School of Business. She has been consultant to the U.S. EEO Commission and was acting chief of the Office of Advice and Analysis in the Office of Compliance.

"Purchasing - Materials Management in a shortage-inflationary economy" will be Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 21 and 22. Speakers will be Wilbur B. England, Sebastian S. Kresge Professor of Marketing, and Henry B. Arthur, Moffett Professor of Agriculture and Business, both emeritus of Harvard. England helped develop the course in industrial procurement at Harvard. Arthur was economist and manager of commercial and economic research for Swift and Company for 21 years before going to Harvard.

"Sales Management: for the newly appointed district manager" will be Tuesday through Thursday, Oct. 29-31. Speakers will be Robert D. Weber, president of Developmental Resources, Inc.

Weber, who is also on the staff of the Georgia State University Business School, will offer solutions to problems of planning, appraisal, counselling, and motivation. Willett, who was a senior consultant with Kurt, Salmon Associates from 1967-73, will discuss why a sales management revolution has occurred and give advice on sales efforts.

The conferences are all offered by the UMass School of Business and the Division of Continuing Education. Further information may be obtained from Dr. Bertil Liander at the School of Business, or from the Division of Continuing Education, 921 Campus Center.

Olver to examine health service facilities

Senator John W. Olver, chairman of two special committees on mental health, will spend Thursday and Friday of this week visiting two area facilities and conducting a wide range of meetings of mental health services in the Connecticut Valley.

On Thursday, October 10 the Senator will visit Belchertown State School and meet with a regional mental retardation services planning group to discuss implementation of a federal funding program in the Connecticut Valley.

On Friday, October 11, the Senator will visit Northampton State Hospital and meet in Springfield with Department of Mental Health Commissioner William Goldman to discuss medical staffing problems at Belchertown and Noothampton.

Besides exploring medical staffing problems at the two institutions, the status of the medical services agreement between the Departments of Mental Health and Public Health will be examined; talks on the status of renovations and the use of capital outlay funds appropriated by the Legislature are also slated for Thursday.

This winter, a new law raising standards of physician competance for state service will go into effect. "In addition to the meeting with Commissioner Goldman on medical staffing problems" Senator Olver said "we hope that on Friday we will be able to outline new short range and long range strategies aimed at providing solutions to the medical staff problems now facing state mental health facilities."

Is there a doctor in the house?

Over 500 American college students will leave the country during the next year to study at medical schools in Europe, the Institute of International Medical Education has reported. These premedical students will join more than 4000 Americans now enrolled in medical schools abroad.

More Americans now are opting to study abroad than in recent years, spokesmen say. "Medical careers have become more desirable than ever before, and, at the same time, competition has stiffened for admission to the limited number of American medical schools."

Once admitted to a medical school, it is extremely difficult for any student to survive, according to the Institute. Moreover, regime is even more rigorous for the young American who must wind his way through the often complex bureaucratic process of applying to foreign medical schools, then must learn to read, write and speak the language of the country, and develop a knowledge of medical terminology.

One way of surmounting these obstacles is to enlist the aid of an experienced professional organization. The Institute of International Medical Education believes they are such an organization.

Provisionally chartered by the Regents of the University of the State of New York, the U.S. offices of the Institute are located at 222 East 19 St., New York. The Institute of International Medical Education not only assists qualified American students who wish to study medicine abroad, but also conducts a continuing medical education program, including master's programs in the administration of hospitals, nursing homes, ambulatory and health services.

Programs of interest to a U.S. pre-medical student consist of an intensive 12-week to 16-week language, culture and medical orientation course designed to enable the student to successfully meet the challenge of a new and different university and cultural environment, as well as assistance with the complex applications and procedures of European medical schools.

As a result of its programs with the Alliance for Franco-American Graduate Studies and the Italo-American Medical Education Foundation, the Institute has been able to help over 300 American men and women gain admission to medical schools in France and Italy.

"Increased governmental and private insurance programs are one of several reasons for the continuing shortage of physicians in the United States," they say. "With the limited enrollment in American medical schools, almost half the doctors employed by hospitals in this country are graduates of foreign medical colleges.".

The Institute of International Medical Education, a nonprofit organization, say they are helping to solve this problem and producing a closer collaboration between the American and European medical communities.

Eagleson moves for new series

Team WHA criticized

MOSCOW [AP] - If Alan Eagleson has his way, the next Team Canada-Russia hockey series will be played using the best Canadian hockey professionals, not just those from one league.

Eagleson, executive director of the National Hockey League Players Association, made a proposal Monday to Russian hockey officials for another series, with some games played perhaps as early as December.

Eagleson said the next Team Canada should include players from both the NHL and the World Hockey Association. He said the team that had been defeated by the Russians was an inferior product and it was doubtful whether five of them could make an all-star team chosen from North American pros.

Bobby Hull and Ralph Backstrom, who scored the Canadian goals in a 3-2 Russian victory Sunday, said the experience — particularly the four games in Russia — was frustrating but valuable.

The Soviet Union captured the series against a team of WHA stars with four victories, one loss and three ties.

The Canadians were unanimous in their praise of the Soviet team.

The Russian portion of the series was replete with incidents, both on and off the ice.

We're tired mentally," said center Andre Lacroix. "When you're supposed to be thinking about the game, you find you may be thinking about the fact the wives are unhappy at the treatment we got here."

In making his proposal to the Russians, Eagleson proposed that Toronto stage the first world cup of hockey in Jan., 1976, with Canada, Russia, Czechoslovakia, Sweden, the United States and Finland taking part.

Football is more than a game

By BILL EDESTEIN
Sports Staff

In an attempt to write an article on this past week's football game, this reporter came across just one obstacle: the game stunk. Now I'm not trying to take anything away from the University of Vermont, who dealt (and we didn't even get a chance to cut the deck) UMass a 25-14 defeat. Vermont and John Van Buren played good games, which is about all that can be said.

Being a fan is a game in itself. Although there are many different ways to play the game, I'll only touch upon four different approaches to the pastime; Vermont Fans, UMass Rowdies, UMass Super-Rowdies and Passive Fans (a conglomeration of both Minutemen and Catamount backers).

The Vermont fan brings a pennant which proclaims "Vermont Catamounts," and a pith helmet, the UMass Rowdy takes a bottle of his favorite beverage past the gates, the UMass Super-Rowdy brings two bottles of his favorite beverage past the gates (one to drink, the other to throw), and the Passive Fan brings a bottle of his favorite beverage and his favorite girl. (or her favorite guy as the case may be)

Each particular philosophy has its own particular goal and its own system of scoring (subject to the site of the game; home or away). For the Vermont Fan, the object of the game is to escape the UMass campus with his life. Every time he voices his opinion and doesn't get slugged, he scores one point.

Commentary

The UMass Rowdy tries to include as many expletives as he can in one sentence concerning the referee's heritage. He scores one half a point for each expletive and can receive an additional five point bonus for a sentence containing five or more expletives.

The UMass-Super Rowdy scores three points for each person around him that he alienates with his generally abusive conduct. His objective is, of course, to have as many people shy away from him as possible. He is awarded a 25 point bonus if he is bodily removed from the stadium.

It is an entirely different ballgame for the Passive Fan. The idea of the game is to become totally oblivious to the contest on the field. The Passive Fan's game isn't over when the football game ends. Scoring is, well...you know. There are, however, penalties in the Passive Philosphy; illegal use of hands, moving peck (an offensive foul), roughing the passer, and double dribble (a join foul).

Maybe after next week's game (of football) the fans won't be the only subject to write about...

The bumps and grinds of pool

By JAY LUPPOLD
Sports Staff

It's a great place to go between classes, or even before or after. Maybe even during.

It is the pool and billiards room in the bottom level of the Student Union building. You can't miss the place. If you can't see it while departing from the Hatch, then it's only a matter of seconds before your attention is drawn by the ringing and clanging of the pin ball machines. Then through the large windows you'll be apt to see people jumping around inside working up a sweat. They're at the ping pong tables on the near side.

To the left, the far side of the spacious "rec hall" are the tables. Eight pool tables and one billiard job.

This photo might have given the photographer a broken nose, but it also caught the look of concentration on the face of this pool shark in the Campus Center Rec Room.

As you walk in you can't help but feel that overcast of atmosphere that is always there when about 30-40 guys are in the same room, pushing their respective capacities to the fullest.

But before you can become a member of this pro-for-an-hour club you have to deal with Mary Margola. Mary sits behind the desk with the gargantuan cash register on top that towers over (her) by a foot.

She makes all the arrangements for the head to head clashes before your 1:25. And you can't beat the price- a dollar per hour for pool and billiards and only 50 cents for ping.

"We usually start to get busy right around 10:00; then the kids just keep coming in. We most always have waiting lists for all the tables", she said. "But," she added, "during the winter or bad weather it's even busier".

You can't help looking around while waiting. At the pool tables there are usually three or four players around each table. Most of the time only two are playing with the added duo on for advice.

Then you might hear the sound of a paddle sliding across a table. Ohh! The agony of defeat.

Then the billiard table. This is where you don't make much noise or speak above a whisper as one of the 60 minute Willie Mosconis is about to make a three banker. Anyone can play pool, but to know billiards, well, that's the notch above ordinary pool in most lounges.

If you go over and sit aside one of the occupied tables you'll hear voices saying things like "seven in the corner", two in the side-kiss off the six", and finally it's over and the black eight drops out of sight. The winner will look up at the clock to see if there is still time for another rack, then charge on with "you rack 'em and I'll crack 'em".

Over in the far corner by the ping pong tables are the football and bumper pool games. Whoever came up with these mind bogglers had to have it out for mankind. Who else would enjoy making money while forcing innocent students to pull out their already thinning scalp?

When asked about the absence of females about the premise Mary simply replied, "Well, we have a few girls come in once in awhile, but the interest just isn't there".

The annual tournament is under way this week and is as always, as it has been in the four years that Mary Margola has spent behind that big NCR, a fun time.

So now that you have finished your coffee take a stroll down to that regular place, and maybe shoot a couple racks.

Dodgers to start Rau

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Doug Rau, a 24-year-old lefthander from Texas A&M who got a starting job after Claude Osteen was traded to Houston for Jimmy Wynn last December, can pitch the Los Angeles Dodgers to their first National League Pennant in eight seasons Tuesday when he faces the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Rau, 13-11, is scheduled to go against righthander Bruce Kison, 9-8, in the third game of the best-of-five NL playoff series.

"We've still got one more to go," warns Walter Alston, the Dodgers' manager since 1954.

"Don't count us out," said Pirates' skipper Danny Murtaugh. "We've been back to the wall before and we've won three games in a row before."

"I don't think the Dodgers have ever played any better than we did in the first two games of this series," said Sutton. "Not as long as I've been with them, at least."

Added Messersmith, who followed Sutton's four-hitter with seven strong innings Sunday, "The culmination of professional baseball is the World Series and that's where we're going."

In two games, the Pirates, who had an 8-4 advantage against the Dodgers during the regular season, have collected just 12 hits.

"This series has shot hell out of everything I've been saying about the Pirates," said Joe Ferguson of the Dodgers. "I figured it would be tougher for us. They've been swinging at everything like they were down to their last two outs and they were two runs behind."

"We've had good pitching," agreed Pirates' Catcher Manny Sanguillen, "but we just haven't hit the ball right."

"This is a terrific club," said the Dodgers' Ron Cey, the hitting hero in Sunday's game. "Now we've only one game to go before we get where we want to be. The important thing is to get there."

Cey, a third baseman who drove in 97 runs during the regular season, had four hits, including a home run and two doubles, in the second contest of the series.

O's-A's to break tie

BALTIMORE [UPI] — It will be Jim Palmer — or just maybe Ross Grimsley — pitching for the Baltimore Orioles against Vida Blue of the Oakland A's Tuesday when the American League's Playoff Series resumes with game 3, after the teams had split the first two contests in Oakland.

Manager Earl Weaver, insisting "the breaks will decide the series," has named Palmer, the AL's 1973 Cy Young Award winner, to start, but Palmer revealed Monday that he might suggest to Weaver that Grimsley go after he (Palmer) warms up. Palmer has a pinched nerve in his right elbow which occasionally gives him trouble.

"If I don't feel right warming up, I'll tell Earl," said Palmer. "With Grimsley available it would be foolish for me to pitch if I'm not right. Grimsley could step right in."

Palmer, who spent 54 days on the disabled list this season, had only a 7-12 record, but Weaver says his ace is "pitching as well as he did in 1973." Palmer had a 22-9 record in 1973 and a shutout in the first game of the playoff series a year ago.

Grimsley, acquired from the Cincinnati Reds in a trade last winter, had an 18-13 record for the Orioles this season. He relieved Mike Cuellar in the ninth inning of the Orioles' opening game 6-3 win last Saturday and retired three straight batters.

The Orioles held what Weaver called "an informal, voluntary workout" Monday afternoon while awaiting the arrival of the world champion A's.

Palmer explained that his stuff is as sound as ever on days when the nerve in his right elbow does not become inflamed.

"When the nerve pinches it puts pressure on my forearm," he said. "Then, because I am so much of a wrist pitcher, I cannot throw my best stuff. I have to be aware of it. I don't have the same margin for error as I had in other years. I take heat treatments, and then cold treatments to help the circulation but there is no way to tell from day to day how it will be."

Palmer said he thought the A's were a better team this year in the playoffs than they were in 1973 because of the presence of Jim North in center field.

"He helps them offensively, defensively and with speed on the bases," Palmer said. "They are just a very good club, without doubt the toughest lineup in the American League to pitch against. They have pitching, hitting, defense and speed — they have so many ways to beat you."

Blue, a hard throwing lefthander, had a 2-0 record against the Orioles this season and was 17-15 against the league.

Harriers prep for "super-meet"

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

The UMass harriers will make the familiar trip to Van Cortlandt Park, Friday afternoon, to prepare for one of the biggest meets in Minuteman cross country history. The last time Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin and teammates travelled to Yonkers, New York, they surprised many opponents and captured third in the IC4A's.

The competition will be just as tough this Saturday, as the five-way meet includes defending IC4A champion Manhattan, ranked eighth in the nation and fifth-ranked William and Mary. Yankee Conference rival Connecticut and a dangerous Syracuse squad will also be competing against the Harriers, who showed signs of improvement in their tri-meet sweep over the weekend.

Robb Leary made the most notable advance, trimming more than a minute off his previous best time for the rugged UMass course. Leary was instrumental in last Saturday's sweep of NU and St. John's, moving into the fifth-man role for UMass.

Coach Ken O'Brien noted that John Scheer, Phil Broughton and Chris Farmer showed consistency in their early season performances and that Tom Maguire is in good physical condition, although not as sharp as last season. The first three meets took place in a seven day span and required a maximum effort, but the real test will be in New York on Saturday afternoon.

Pats Rucker out 3-weeks

BOSTON [AP] - New England Patriots wide receiver Reggie Rucker will miss three weeks of National Football League action because of a broken right wrist, the Patriots said Monday.

A spokesman said the wrist was apparently broken during Sunday's game against Baltimore. X-rays taken Monday confirmed the injury.

Basketball notice

All basketball candidates are requested to report to a meeting Thursday, October 10th in Room 251 Boyden Gymnasium at 4:00 p.m.

The rinkless rape

There are many things one can write about now during this time of the Great Sports Overlap. But, of immediate concern is a problem closer to home; one that many, in the end, affect the UMass community. Fellow colleague Rich Sevieri gave us the facts in Friday's sports section on the new hockey rink being built at UMass Boston. Sevieri mentions that seating capacity will be reduced from 2000 to 1000 but, that's one thousand more seats and one more risk than we (the real UMass) have at the present time. So, with these basic facts, what does everything mean from the standpoint of the hockey team, the student body on campus, and finally the politicians on Beacon Hill?

The Minuteman hockey team, under the direction of Jack Canniff, has had successful records in recent seasons. Last year, for example, the team went to the division two playoffs winning the first game over Boston St. at the Arena and finally being eliminated the next time out up at Burlington against a perenially fine power in the University of Vermont. Without making excuses, they could have done better. Unfortunately there has not been (and may not be for a while) any selling point of a product — the hockey program — to speak of. We, a state university, do not have a rink. So, there are very few out-of-staters skating for UMass. Taking absolutely nothing away from anyone currently on the team because they have played well as a unit, players from other geographical areas certainly could help. A look at any program from last year revealed the sad state of affairs. Everyone and his brother was from Massachusetts. However, Arlington's Kevin Connors and Framingham's Billy Harris are just two of the fine players who made contributions to the team. All these guys really deserve thanks for coming here, considering the many fine hockey programs in the Boston area. Actually, there has been one outstanding player who graduated the Amherst College rink from beyond Mass. borders - Ontario's Pat Keenan. And two goalies of recent past have kept the team in many a game. They also were next door neighbors in Southie, P.J. Flaherty and Chick Rheault.

As for UMass students on this campus, I wonder if some of them know that we do, in fact, have a hockey team. Some may have tried to find a way to Orr Rink, but only a few have succeeded. If you don't have a car, how do you get there? Take the case of the female hockey fan looking for transportation. She wants to see the game, but can't find a ride. (cars may have already been filled) She gets onto North Pleasant St. and sticks out her thumb. Somebody stops and picks her up - for this example the driver is male. Enough said. It's a dangerous situation that we all know the consequences of. She may never get to see a single face-off all night. All this can happen during non-peak hours for UMass busing while a number of their vehicles sit still in the yard behind the physical plant.

The number one politician on Beacon Hill has been yakking about Park Plaza for the last four years and now is fighting for his life to get re-elected. Those who aren't involved in campaigning of one sort or another are all sitting on their collective derrieres. Oh, Columbia Point is a beautiful place. It opned last January with ten new buildings and hope for more in the future.

Well, maybe teams playing at the Boston rink will get to shower in a spanking new facility. Last year after one game, I saw four Minutemen skaters riding on the back of a pick-up truck in uniform dreaming of a nice warm shower in Curry Hicks Cage. The bureaucrats who run this state don't realize that their boundaries stretch west of Route 128. Everything in Amherst dealing with UMass hockey has been negative so far.

Includes limited tax surcharge

Ford proposes anti-inflation measures

WASHINGTON [AP] — Warning that inflation can "destroy our country, our homes, our liberties," President Ford proposed yesterday a broad-ranging anti-inflation package that would combine selected tax cuts with selected tax increases, special help for the unemployed and new moves to conserve energy.

In a nationally broadcast address before a joint session of Congress, Ford unveiled recommendations that varied little from what had been expected.

As was widely reported in advance, Ford asked Congress to impose a temporary, one-year tax surcharge of 5 percent on corporations and middle and upper-income taxpayers.

The President also sought a liberalized, across-the-board investment tax credit of 10 per cent to encourage expansion of factories and businesses.

To help the jobless as the economy continues to slump — and living costs rise — Ford proposed the creation of a new Community Improvement Corps to provide public service jobs when unemployment exceeds 6 per cent nationally. The current rate is 5.8 per cent and is expected to rise.

Under the Ford plan, the one-year jobs program would automatically go into effect in local labor markets with high unemployment even if the national average remained below 6 per cent. Grants for jobs would be triggered when local rates exceeded 6.5 per cent.

The President, in addition, recommended an extra 13 weeks of special unemployment insurance benefits for those who have used up their credits and 26 weeks of benefits for those not now covered by a regular unemployment insurance program. These would be financed from Treasury revenues and not from taxes on employers.

Ford also specified that to be eligible for a public service job, an individual would first have to exhaust all unemployment benefits.

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon told newsmen the one-year surtax was expected to raise $4.7 billion - $2.6 billion from individuals and $2.1 billion from corporations.

Simon said the liberalized investment tax credit would bring corporations $2.7 billion a year in benefits so the impact of the surtax on them would be more than offset by what would amount to companion tax cuts.

The President produced no new plan to lower taxes for the poor but instead endorsed a tax revision bill

Boston requests U.S. aid

BOSTON [UPI] — Mayor Kevin H. White and black lawmakers pleaded for federal help to restore order yesterday after at least 30 persons were injured in disorders stemming from a court-ordered school busing plan. One cab driver was beaten into a state of shock.

At the same time, the NAACP called for beefed up local or state police or national guard protection for black students being bused to white schools. Gov. Francis W. Sargent met with his public safety secretary and guard officials to map plans for possible mobilization.

Police Commissioner Robert diGrazia clamped a ban on all liquor sales in the city's black Roxbury section where most of Tuesday's violence occurred. Similar bans had been imposed in white South Boston, site of most previous incidents.

The pleas for federal help, all made to U.S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity, came as violence erupted at English High School and a white taxicab driver was dragged from his car by a group of blacks near the Mission Hill Housing Project in Roxbury.

Campus Center refuses to pay student overtime

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

The Campus Center has violated the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act for at least the past three years by denying students time-and-a-half overtime pay rates.

The Fair Labor Standards Act dictates they should receive overtime pay for all hours worked in excess of 40 in one week. The Campus Center may have to retroactively pay students for overtime hours worked during the past two years.

The Campus Center has avoided this by only submitting up to 40 hours of work for each paycheck. That is the maximum number of hours the Financial Aide office will pay a student in any one work week in accordance with University policy.

Timothy Cox, Campus Center Personnel Director said this owed time is then added to the first week in which the student works under 40 hours. The student, however, is paid as if these were regular work hours and not overtime ones.

Cox said he didn't know how long this system has been used in the Campus Center, but it was there when he became Personnel Director three years ago.

"There may have been a misconception that students were exempt from this overtime pay rate," Gerald Scanlon, Dean of Student Employment told the Collegian.

Richard Howland, former Attorney for Students at UMass said he investigated the Campus Center policies at least two years ago. He recommended to the administrators then that the policy was illegal and liable to possible prosecution in criminal court for not paying overtime rates.

"If a student is not paid in a week for his overtime it is illegal and he can go to the District Court and ask for the overtime," Howland said.

He said Warren T. Grinnan, former Director of the Campus Center and Michael Egan, former Director of Campus Center Food Service, and Donald Witkowski who is still the Manager of the Campus Hotel, had agreed with him at that time.

Andrea Kemp

Howland said the situation concerning a waitress in the Hatch and a person in the Parking Garage was resolved amicably without court action, and as far as he knows the policy was stopped.

One new example of the University's violation of law is Andrea Kemp, a continuing Education student. She works about 40 hours each week as an Administrative Aide and Supervisor for the Campus Assistance Center.

Kemp sometimes has had to work overtime, either through a request of her Supervisor or because of her duties, she said. However, Kemp said she has not received pay for the overtime hours which she has worked since July 4.

Kemp told the Collegian that overtime work without overtime

Bluewall, Hatch and T.O.C. found in violation of state fire laws

By JOHN BUTLER
and DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporters

A Collegian investigative team has found some violations of the state's fire laws in the Bluewall, the Hatch, and the Top of the Campus (T.O.C.)

On Friday night, Sept. 13, the Collegian counted at least 200 patrons at the T.O.C.

When the reporters checked for an occupancy sign, which according to state law should be posted in a visible area, none was found.

John W. Corker, Director of the Campus Center, said he was aware of this violation, but that something was being done.

Further investigation showed no occupancy rating had been assigned by the state, and, in fact, the bar has yet to be checked for fire violations by Mass. officials.

The investigators found the state agency responsible for inspecting the T.O.C. is the Environmental Health and Safety Office. Their job, Robert P. Gleason, Director of Environmental Safety, said, is to make recommendations to the building's administrator if any violations are found.

When questioned why no rating had been assigned to the T.O.C., despite its three year existence, Gleason said, "Just by observation it seems to be alright."

The T.O.C. was also found to have curtains and carpets without a flame retardent.

Although state regulations do not set any specific level for flammability, a flame retardant is required.

Corker said the carpet rating for the T.O.C. will be reviewed.

On visits during two random weekend nights, the Hatch was found to be within its legal capacity of 1,000 persons.

The investigative team found at least 250 persons there on Friday, Sept. 13, and 300 persons on Friday, Sept. 20.

Like the T.O.C., the Hatch has no occupancy sign posted.

Unlike the T.O.C., the Hatch has no sprinkler system, although Corker says it's being looked into.

A new law will soon make sprinkler systems mandatory.

Also in violation of fire laws, there were no lit exit signs in the Hatch. Gleason blamed this on poor maintenance.

On visits during four random weekend nights, the Collegian counted an average of 600 patrons in the Bluewall. The campus "watering spot" has a legal capacity of 555 persons.

At least 550 persons were there on Friday, Sept. 13; 600 on Saturday, Sept. 14; 600 on Friday, Sept. 20; and 650 on Friday, Oct. 4.

Tony Tartaglia, a supervisor of the Campus Center bars, said if the Bluewall did not exceed its legal capacity by a few persons, students waiting to get in "would be discontented."

Regarding the overcrowded conditions of the Bluewall, a bouncer said, "It's almost impossible to keep track with people running in and out to the bathrooms all the time."

Another bouncer said, "They make enough money to turn people away."

Although the Bluewall has three lit exit signs, two of them aren't visible to the majority of patrons because the exits are at right angles to the center of the room.

Gleason said a recommendation has already been made by his office to move the signs into view.

According to Corker, a new Bluewall is being planned, along with a review of the carpet ratings, and additional exit signs are being planned.

Peace Corps and VISTA to seek volunteers

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

Representatives from the Peace Corps and VISTA will be visiting UMass on October 22, 23, and 24 to distribute information and recruit students as volunteers for these programs.

A table will be set up in the Campus Center Concourse from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. and interviews will be given at the student development center in Berkshire House.

In addition, a slide show and discussion of Peace Corps and VISTA will be held Tuesday Oct. 22 in room 803 C.C. at 7:30 p.m.

Seniors and graduate students are eligible to apply for the Peace Corps and Vista, representative Susan Kerstein told the Collegian.

"We try to encourage students to apply as another alternative," she said. Interested students should apply early, since applications take three months to process. Programs are strictly volunteer, and no binding obligation is created by applying.

The Peace Corps has initiated a new program this year for students who will graduate after the fall semester. These students can skip the application process and be given an immediate assignment in Latin America to begin when they graduate in January.

Both the Peace Corps and VISTA are sponsored by ACTION, an umbrella organization of federally sponsored volunteer programs. ACTION also sponsors University Year for ACTION, which enables students to receive academic credit for service in low-income communities.

Peace Corps is a two-year program which provides aid to about 65 underdeveloped nations around the world. Mary Beaton, representative and former Peace Corps volunteer called the program "a good cultural exchange."

"I think we're good ambassadors," she said.

VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America) is a one year program, providing aid to underprivileged communities in the U.S. VISTA is social work oriented, and volunteers mainly help low-income people become more aware of their rights and options as community members. Kerstein labeled VISTA as "a catalyst for community improvement."

Although acceptance into either program has become rather difficult, students with a B.A. or B.S. degree have a good chance of getting in. ACTION recruiters are looking for people with usable skills and training, as well as previous volunteer experience such as the Outreach program at UMass.

Kerstein and Beaton said that UMass "has the best student response in New England" to the ACTION recruitment campaigns held every semester. They feel this is because UMass students are volunteer oriented.

Students who think they are interested in joining the Peace Corps or VISTA are asked to come to the meeting on Tuesday night or drop by the C.C. concourse during the day Oct. 22 thru 24.

Stockbridge College attempts to establish its own identity

By BOB PAQUETTE
Staff Reporter

In 1863, Amherst became the homeground for Massachusetts Agricultural College--Mass Aggie.

Over the years, the name changed and the college split into its two present forms—UMass, and Stockbridge College. Everyone knows about UMass but what about Stockbridge. "People don't realize that we are a separate entity," said Gloria Kane, editor of the Stockbridge yearbook. "Being next to UMass is like being next to a sleeping elephant."

With a Student Senate of sixty members, and a budget of almost $30,000 this year, Stockbridge has been steadily increasing in size.

The College itself consists of about 600 students, which means that only about 350 are accepted each year into the two-year program. This produces a marked contrast in enrollment when compared to UMass.

"You're not the number anymore," said Scott Parkin, president of the student senate. "You can talk to our Dean. Go try that with President Wood."

"Stockbribge has student body unity. UMass really has no unity," according to Emanuel Argiros, president of STOSO, the Stockbridge Student Service Organization. "This is one of the reasons why people don't understand the backbone of Stockbridge."

Scott Parkin is quick to recognize the importance of UMass however. "If it was just us out here, we'd be nothing."

The student leaders of Stockbridge are interested in getting more students to become aware of just what they're doing. The College holds five functions during the year including a fall and spring picnic, a Halloween party, a Christmas party and a Spring progress banquet.

The Student Senate is working on getting a person to work on the food service board, they have a representative to the UMass senate, and a committee to raise more money by showing movies and other projects to help build onto their budget which may run out by the end of the year.

The Stockbridge Student Senate will be holding their elections tonight at 8 p.m.

Two lawsuits naming Dr. Ariel postponed

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
Staff Reporter

No date has been set in Hampshire District Court in Northampton for two lawsuits each naming Dr. Gideon Ariel as among the defendants. The opening dates of the two trials have been delayed due to the arrival and processing of "fresh evidence", according to Dr. Benjamin Ricci, the plaintiff in a libel suit against Ariel, a UMass exercise science professor.

Representing Ricci in the court action against Ariel is Beryl Cohen, the attorney for Friends of Belchertown in past litigation.

Ariel is the defendent in a civil action suit filed by fellow exercise science professor, Dr. Stanley Plagenhoef. Plagenhoef is requesting stock privileges and back pay for work he did as Director of Research in their jointly owned company, Computer Biomechanical Analysis.

A third lawsuit has been filed in District Court challenging the appointment of Dr. Ariel to the exercise science department. A recent recipient of a doctorate from UMass, Dr. Elizabeth Ebacher, names as defendants: Chancellor Randolph Bromery, Vice Chancellor Robert Gluckstern, Dean David Bishoff of Exercise Science, Dr. Campney of Exercise Science and Dr. Arbib of Computer and Information Science.

Inflation ups beer price to 40¢ at Bluewall, Hatch

By MICHAEL J. MASSI
Staff Reporter

The price of a cup of beer at the Blue Wall and the Hatch Bar has been increased this semester to 40 cents.

According to Jeff Taggart of the Board of Governors, the cost of beer to the University has increased by $4 a keg, or 35 percent, from an average price of $16.50 per keg in 1973 to about $21.50 this year. Plastic cups have increased by 100 per cent.

"The Food Services wanted us to approve a 10 cent increase in the price of beer, making it 45 cents a glass," said Taggart, who is also Chairman of the Services Committee. The Board voted that in half, to 5 cents, figuring that in increase in business at the bars would compensate for the cut.

Compared to other area bars, the campus bars offer a much better price, say the Governors. John Hays, Chairman of the Building Committee, says "the area bars charge between 45 and 50 cents for a 10 oz. glass," while we offer a 12 oz. glass for 40 cents." Also used as an example was the fact that last semester's pitchers were 64 ounces, whereas the new plastic pitchers used this semester are 80 oz.

Phil Amico, Director of Food Services, said "Beer should cost (the students) 45 cents to enable us to maintain the same food cost percentage as we had last year."

Since the various committees have to work within a certain budget, it was inevitable that the price of beer would go up.

The 10 cent increase requested by the Food Committee was an estimate by them to cover the costs incurred by the higher beer prices.

As for employee income at the bars, the general feeling among workers appears to be that they are not getting enough money. One complaint about the absence of a substantial pay increase is that the Board is reprimanding the employees for not working hard enough, a feeling quickly dispelled by the Board.

"Anyone who was promised a raise last semester will get one this semester," said Jim McGowan, Chairman of the Finance Committee. The reason some jobs have been reduced in the amount of pay is that the Campus Center is now working on an 'equal-pay for equal-work' scale.

Said Amico, "We re-evaluated all the student jobs this summer, and decided to establish equity on a campus-wide basis. This means that equal jobs will get equal pay."

He stressed that employees who were promised raises have now received those raises. In addition, there was a general 10 cent pay hike; and anyone newly hired this semester will begin at the newly-appointed pay rate, which in some instances will be considerably lower than second- and earlier-semester workers.

The current pay scales for Top of the Campus bartenders is $2.75, for Blue Wall-Hatch bartenders $2.25-$2.30, for bouncers $2.50, and for bar managers, $3.00.

As for cuts in pay, it was emphatically stated by both Amico and the Board of Governors that no one received a cut in pay.

As a result of the increases in most prices, the Campus Center fee had to be raised to $64 this semester, which, according to John Hays, is regrettable but fair.

"What do you do about price increases?" he asks. "Do you add them to student fees, knowing some people will not use the facilities, or do you take it from those who do use it?"

A student Employee Committee is being established by the Board to review complaints and receive feedback from the affected employees, it was learned. This should eliminate some of the common misunderstandings that develop between the upper echelons of the management and the common workers below, organizers say. One of the members will be a voting Chairman on the Board of Governors.

Campus Center denies students time-and-a-half for overtime

pay and immediate payment for the hours is true in all departments in the Campus Center — Hotel, Food Service, Building Operations (under which she comes) and Retail Services.

University policy requires students to sign a statement on their initial time card saying they are not authorized to work in excess of eight hours in any day or 40 hours in any week.

Linda Witt, Secretary at the Boston Wage and Hour Division Regional Office for the Labor Department said, "Whether you signed something that said you're not authorized to work over 40 hours a week or not, if you worked it you should be paid for it in overtime."

She said, "If an employer suffers or permits an employee to work he must pay that employee for the hours worked."

Since the Collegian began its investigation six days ago, action has already begun concerning these policies. In the Campus Center, Cox said, "Some of the staff have started to review previous records to see how good or bad we have done."

The Collegian was denied access to the time-owed time cards due to a directive sent down from John Corker, Director of the Campus Center, that no one is to see them.

In Whitmore, Robert Gartska, Assistant Director of Personnel for the University told the Collegian that the departments of Student Personnel, Financial Aide, and Personnel Payroll for the University will begin an investigation.

"The situation should be investigated immediately. If it is determined that this woman is owed money, she will be paid as soon as possible," Gartska said.

Gartska said the investigating groups will make a recommendation to Corker to authorize payment immediately if it's so determined.

In regard to retroactive pay for anyone who feels they were illegally denied overtime pay rates, Scanlon said, "Anyone who thinks they have the right can petition for redress and have their case heard."

An unnamed source at the Boston Regional Office of the Wage and Hour Division said while the Fair Labor Standards Act has had coverage for University employment since 1967, it calls for a two year Statute of Limitations and students owed overtime pay prior to October 1972 will not be able to obtain it.

Corker told the Collegian he couldn't give a figure of how much money is owed students in overtime pay at this time.

"We only maintain student time cards for one and one-half years. To be honest, there's no way we can accurately go back. What we can do is check the records that we do have. The University will allow us to do this under the present circumstances," he said.

What we're going to have to do is cut back on shifts to make sure this doesn't happen again," Corker said. "What this will mean is that we will be hiring more students to do the same jobs and work smaller shifts."

"I don't think there was, on the part of the staff, any intent or knowledge of violating the law," Corker said.

Gartska said, "I can't imagine it going on for three years without someone asking some questions and I'm amazed at the Campus Center or any department head for asking someone to work over the 40 hours and not compensate them.

"I was aware it was wrong at least morally if not legally," Cox said. "I mentioned it to my superiors and others in the University administration."

Kemp said that students probably haven't spoken up against the policies before because of the tight job market. Speaking out might jeopardize their jobs, she said.

University may offer weekend board soon

By JIM KASSNER
Staff Reporter

Because of "considerable student request", the UMass Food Service Department may offer an optional weekend board plan, beginning perhaps as early as January.

Marie Cappadona, Assistant Director of University Food Services, said week-end meals "are a real need to the student, a need we want to satisfy."

Cappadona noted that a previcus week-end meal plan used years ago, had to be abolished because of lack of student support. However, with the recent rise in food prices, students may again revert to the dining commons rather than watching their weekly food bill grow.

The week-end meal plan would consist of a lunch-brunch (11:00-1:30), and dinner (4:30-6:30), Saturdays and Sundays. Because most students would probably not be willing to wake up to go to an early breakfast on a Saturday or Sunday morning, breakfast and lunch would be combined into a brunch. This would consist of a standard dining commons lunch with one of the selections being scrambled eggs, sausages, etc. The dinner menu would be similar to a conventional Monday-Friday menu. These meals would be available at Berkshire Commons in Southwest, and at Franklin Commons. If student response was high, other commons may be used, depending on staff conditions, etc.

The 14 meal plan (two meals a day-seven days a week) would cost $426.45, approximately $118 more than the current 10 meal plan. The price of a 19 meal plan (3 meals Mon.-Fri.—2 meals Saturday and Sunday) would also increase proportionately to $463.45.

The Food Service Department, seeking student response, is planning to distribute questionnaires at the dining commons' on Wednesday night. These questionnaires will be available in the dinner lines.

Cautions against dramatic results

Kissinger begins Mideast peace tour today

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Secretary cf State Henry A. Kissinger arrives in Cairo today for another Mideast tour in search of peace between the Arabs and Israelis — and lower oil prices.

In advance of his departure at midnight yesterday, Kissinger cautioned against expectations that his weeklong mission would produce any dramatic results or announcements, and that his would not be the final round of talks concerning the Middle East situation.

"The primary purpose is to give concreteness to the negotiating process, and, perhaps to agree on some timing," he told a Monday news conference.

He is to arrive in Cairo this evening and confer with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat until Friday morning. Thereafter he will visit Syria, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Israel, Algeria and Morocco before returning to Washington Oct. 15.

Security surrounding the Kissinger visit and itinerary is tight. He has said he does not expect to engage in any shuttle diplomacy as on previous trips, when he made frequent middle-of-the-night flights between Cairo and Jerusalem and Damascus and Jerusalem while negotiating troop disengagement agreements.

The exact timing of Kissinger's visits to the oil-rich desert kingdom of Saudi Arabia was not revealed prior to Kissinger's departure on grounds the appointment with King Faisal was not final.

Throughout the Middle East trip the Palestinian problem will be a constant issue, but Kissinger has said he will not meet any Palestinian leaders on this visit. That does not rule out the possibility some official with Kissinger's party will not meet Palestinian leaders, however.

Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, is understood to have arranged his current visit to Cairo so it overlaps with that of Kissinger. But Kissinger said: "There is no possibility I will meet Arafat or any other Palestinian leaders while I am in the Middle East."

Arab officials long have insisted that lasting peace in the Middle East is impossible without a solution to the problem of the Palestinians, who were uprooted and left homeless by creation of the state of Israel in 1947.

Oil matters are certain to be mixed with peace efforts during Kissinger's meeting with Saudi Arabian King Faisal, although Kissinger insists the two issues are being negotiated separately

Ford and Polish chief Gierek discuss economics and detente

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Warning that world stability is thraatened by economic problems, President Ford conferred at length yesterday on energy, trade and detente problems with Polish leader Edward Gierek, the highest ranking Communist chief he has yet met.

Ford and Gierek, U.S. and Polish diplomatic sources disclosed, are expected to meet again today to sign two main statements - one on political relations between the United States and Poland and another on economic relations between the two countries.

Following the one-and-a-half hour meeting in Ford's Oval Office, Gierek lunched with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger at the State Department and then witnessed the signed of six U.S.-Polish agreements.

The agreements, which were negotiated well in advance, were signed by high U.S. and Polish officials and cover cooperation in science and technology, coal, research, health, the environment, and agriculture.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger signed an agreement to avoid double taxation of U.S. nationals in Poland and Polish nationals in the United States as well as the accord on funding joint scientific and technological projects.

Gierek received a 21-gun salute and full military honors on his arrival at the South Lawn of the White House in the mild indian-summer weather which Polish deplomats said reminded them of home. Ford set a somber tone for his talks with Gierek by warning that "the development of peoples on a global basis is actually threatened" by the world's inflation and economic ills.

At one point, Ford said that Gierek, a 61-year-old former coal miner, could make a special contribution because of his "lifetime of expertise."

For his part, Gierek stressed that a relaxation of tensions between the Socialist and Western countries was a process that should be "universal and irreversible."

"It is being acknowledged, with satisfaction that it is you, Mr. President, steering U.S. foreign policy in this direction of detente," Gierek said.

House panel approves $500 tax exemption

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Seeking to bolster the ailing housing industry, the House Ways and Means Committee cleared yesterday legislation to exempt the first $500 of savings account interest from taxation.

The action sparked heated debate about whether it would primarily help well-to-do individuals, and whether it actually would accomplish its stated purpose of helping the home-building housing industry.

The Treasury Department strongly opposed the bill, as did the AFL-CIO and committee liberals. Rep. Herman T. Schneebeli, R-Pa., ranking committee Republican, said following the 15-6 vote that President Ford would have no similar recommendation in his inflation-fighting plan.

Egypt minister sees peace discussions soon

By United Press International

Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmi predicted yesterday on the eve of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's Middle East tour that the long-awaited Geneva peace conference with Israel "is coming shortly."

Fahmi had just returned to Cairo from the United States, where he addressed the United Nations General Assembly and conferred with President Ford and Kissinger.

"I did not feel any pessimism during my meetings with Dr. Kissinger," Fahmi told newsmem at Cairo airport. "There is no need for pessimism even though the Middle East crisis is a complicated one built up over more than 26 years."

He said, "The Geneva conference is absolutely necessary and it is coming shortly. We shall go to Geneva when we are ready.

"If efforts are properly mobilized," Fahmi said, "a just solution can be achieved. We cannot expect, however, that it can come quickly or automatically."

In Israel, a military spokesman said an army patrol was shot at from across the Lebanese frontier in the area of Zarit at about midnight. "The fire was returned and there were no sacualties," he said.

In London, Western diplomatic analysts said the Soviet Union, though it continues to make huge arms shipments to the Arab countries, fears another Arab-Israeli war would ruin the current detente with the United States.

The analysts said another Middle East war could well force the Soviets and the Americans into direct confrontation - something the Soviets are anxious to avoid.

At the same time, the Soviets are delivering, sophisticated weapons to Syria, notably the Mig23 jet fighter, with the professed hope of keeping the Syrians from sliding into the American camp as Egypt, in the Soviet view, has done.

These weapons "are intended for defense purposes," one Communist diplomat insisted, and as a means of keeping pressure on Israel to conclude a peace agreement the Arabs can live with.

This makes the Soviet balancing act a delicate one indeed, since Syria and Egypt went to war with Israel a year ago against Soviet urgings not to.

Richardson may seek Kennedy's seat

DES MOINES, Iowa [UPI] — Former Attorney General Elliot Richardson yesterday said he is considering challenging Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts for his senate seat in 1976.

Richardson also hinted he would consider seeking the GOP presidential nomination in 1976, despite the likelihood that President Gerald Ford would seek a full term.

Speaking at a news conference before a speech at the Iowa Bankers Association, Richardson said he was "looking for something to do."

Asked if he planned to get back into politics, Richardson said: "There is the possibility of running for the Massachusetts senate seat in 1976. Kennedy's seat will be up then."

In answer to a reporter's question Richardson said he also "would be interested in the presidential nomination."

Nobel prize to Sato, MacBride

Peace prize awarded to 2 former ministers

OSLO [UPI] — The Nobel Peace Prize for 1974 was awarded yesterday to former Japanese Prime Minister Eisaku Sato and former Irish Foreign Minister Sean MacBride for their contributions to "peace in our time."

The Norwegian Nobel committee announced the award without advance notice and amid general expectation the prize would not be given this year.

The announcement was read by Mrs. Aase Lionaess, chairman of the committee which is made up of members of the Norwegian parliament.

It said both Sato, 74, and MacBride, 70, have "each in their own way, contributed to peace. Their efforts were central in contributing to peace in our time."

The two winners will share the $123,000 prize at ceremonies in Oslo Dec. 10, the anniversary of Alfred Nobel's death.

The citation regarding Sato, whose term of office as premier from 1964 to 1972, is the longest in Japan's history, said he was "the main exponent of a reconciliation policy that contributed to a stabilization of conditions in the Pacific area.

"He has consequently kept his promise that Japan should not get nuclear weapons of her own during his time as Prime Minister and he signed a non-proliferation agreement."

MacBride's citation said he was awarded the prize "due to many years of efforts to build up and protect human rights all over the world. The struggle against injustice which simultaneously is a work for peace has characterized his strong engagement in a number of areas."

It said MacBride, foreign minister from 1948 to 1951 and later head of Amnesty International, the London-based non-governmental organization helping political prisoners all over the world, has worked with the aim that "human rights shall become part of fulfilling international conventions."

Strong earthquake hits Caribbean isles

SAN JUAN, P.R. [UPI] — A strong earthquake yesterday rocked Caribbean vacation islands from Puerto Rico to Guadaloupe. Reports indicated that the island of Antigua was hardest-hit.

The U.S. Geodetic Observatory in San Juan said the quake registered 7, on the open-end Richter scale, the strongest reported in the West Indies for several years. It said the quake, which hit at 5:52 a.m. (EDT), apparently was centered between St. Kitts and Guadeloupe, in the Leeward Islands about 300 miles east of Puerto Rico.

The tremor was felt throughout Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands, but no damage or casualties were reported. Antigua lies about midway between St. Kitts and Guadeloupe in the Leeward Island chain.

Four persons were reported injured on Antigua but there were no immediate reports of casualties elsewhere.

The historic old St. John's cathedral and several government buildings were among property severly damaged.

Two grain companies confused on exports

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Top officials of two companies involved in the aborted grain sale to Russia disagreed yesterday on what they were told at the White House about ground rules for further exports to Communist and oil-producing nations.

Edward Cook, president of Cook Industries, testified to the Senate Permanent Investigations Subcommittee that his firm dropped a sale of wheat and soybean oii to Iran because he was advised in effect "that export controls are in place."

But Barnard Steinweg, executive vice president of Continental Grain Co. who was present at the Saturday White House meeting, told the panel he recalled no such statement, and that his firm subsequently sold 160,000 tons of wheat to the Iranians.

Steinweg said that as he understood the instructions, any big grain sale to any nation would be subject to government approval, with Russia, China and the oil-producing countries to be given equal treatment.

And Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz, another witness in subcommittee hearings on the cancellation of the sale of 3.4 million tons of wheat and corn to Russia, said Cook had "misunderstood" discussions on export policy.

Butz said the ban was meant to remain in effect only during the weekend while department officials formulated a new export reporting policy to prevent overdrawing on domestic supplies. The Agriculture Department put the new rules into effect yesterday.

Assistant Secretary of State Thomas Enders testified later that Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, on his trip to Moscow later this week, will make it clear to Soviet leaders just how much U.S. grain they can expect to buy under the new regulations.

JCS hits 200m limit

WASHINGTON [AP] — The U.S. military yesterday opposed legislation to establish a 200-mile fishery jurisdiction off U.S. coasts as inviting retaliation detrimental to U.S. security interests.

Gen. George S. Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said some nations will claim 200-mile sovereignty barring aircraft overflight and submarine passage.

The U.S. naval mission depends on maximum mobility and "cannot be dependent on the sufferance of other nations," Brown told the Senate Armed Services Committee.

The bill, sponsored by coastal fishing interests to counteract overfishing by vessels of Russia, Japan and other nations, has been approved by the Senate Commerce Committee and disapproved by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. It was sent to the Armed Services Committee at administration request for appraisal of military implications.

Ford talk delayed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford's testimony to a congressional committee was postponed yesterday because the judge presiding in the Watergate coverup case could not guarantee he could sequester a jury by tomorrow.

Chairman William L. Hungate, D-Mo. read a brief one-sentence statement to reporters announcing the postponement of Ford's appearance before his House Judiciary subcommittee until Oct. 17. He said the White House agreed to the postponement.

Hungate said the week's delay in Ford's appearnace to answer questions about his pardon for former president Nixon would "allow ample time for the selection and sequestration of the jury."

Meanwhile jury selection in the week-old Watergate cover-up trial continued in secret yesterday.

N.H. refinery needed

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — Oil interests were ready to contribute money to the Leonard for Governor campaign if the New Hampshire Democrat would publicly support an oil refinery in the state, a Leonard spokesman said yesterday.

Robert Philbrick said at a news conference that a Leonard worker was approached by Peter Booras, a former representative for Aristotle Onassis' Olympic Refineries and currently an officer of the recently incorporated Yankee Refineries.

Philbrick said the intermediary is "a respected businessman... a professional man and volunteer for Dick Leonard." He said this person told him he was approached by Booras twice and asked to arrange a secret meeting between Booras and Leonard.

Ford proposes tax, energy measures

now pending in the House Ways and Means Committee that he said would give the poor $1.6 billion of tax relief.

In the energy area, Ford fixed a goal of reducing imports of foreign oil by one million barrels a day by the end of 1975. This would be accomplished by increasing domestic energy production and by conserving oil.

To develop "a single national energy policy and program," Ford created a National Energy Board headed by Secretary of the Interior Rogers C.B. Morton.

Ford was greeted with a full minute's applause from senators and House members after he entered the nearly-filled House chamber for the address.

One of the President's major proposals would set a 1980 target for "eliminating oil-fired plants from the nation's base-loaded electrical capacity" by converting to coal and uranium.

A fact sheet said the conversion would be accomplished voluntarily or the President would seek legislation to make it happen.

While rejecting proposals that he ration gasoline or increase the tax on gas, Ford said:

"I will meet with top management of the automobile industry to assure — either by agreement or by law — a firm program aimed at achieving a 40 per cent increase in gasoline mileage within a four-year development deadline."

Racial unrest continues in the Boston High Schools as busing to desegregate the schools. Here one policeman has a student in an arm lock as a member of the tactical squad rushes in with a swinging club.

Mayor White and NAACP request Federal help in Boston violence

The driver, Morris Brass, 51, of Brockton was reported in a "state of shock" at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital with multiple internal injuries, two compound leg fractures and spinal injuries.

The beating of Brass appeared to be in retaliation against the beating of a black man who was pulled from his car in South Boston by whites Monday and hit with sticks.

As violence continued during the fourth week of a court ordered plan to integrate Boston's public schools by busing, these developments took place in rapid order:

—White called for at least 125 U.S. marshals to be assigned to racially troubled South Boston to prevent "an explosive confrontation throughout the city."

—Five black legislators, members of the Massachusetts Black Caucus, urged the government to send "at least a division" of federal troops to protect children and implement the court ordered plan to integrate Boston's public schools by busing.

—The NAACP, which filed the suit that led to the desegregation order, called on White to get additional law enforcement officers from cities and towns throughout Massachusetts and the state police. And, if that did not "restore and maintain order", to have the governor call in the National Guard.

Building of supertanker port likely, although opposed in N.E.

WASHINGTON [AP] — Backers of legislation permitting construction of offshore supertanker ports predict easy passage by the Senate.

"I think once we get past these relatively minor jurisdictional problems it will sail through the Senate," said Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La.

Johnston, one of the bill's chief sponsors, expects the Senate to act this week on the bill. The issue has been before Congress for at least three years.

The House passed its own superport bill several months ago. Unless the House accepts differences between its bill and the Senate measure, a conference committee will be required to draft compromise legislation.

Time, however is short. Congress begins a month-long election recess Friday, leaving only six more weeks for legislative action this year.

All pending legislation will die with the passing of the 93rd Congress at the end of the year, including both House and Senate superport bills unless Congress moves quickly.

The legislation is of prime importance to Louisiana and Texas, both of which have proposals for superports off their coasts.

The superports have been proposed by oil companies because most U.S. ports are too shallow for the mammoth supertankers now being used to transport oil.

The superports, or deepwater terminals, would be buoy-like platforms anchored up to 30 miles offshore. Tankers tied up alongside would have their cargo pumped ashore through pipelines buried beneath the ocean's floor.

Opposition to the ports has come mainly from environmentalists and states along the North Atlantic coast.

The environmentalists have objected on grounds that a supertanker accident at sea could result in extensive environmental damage from spilled crude oil.

The Northeastern states say they do not want their coasts marred by onshore development that must accompany the superports.

Superport backers, however, have maintained that it is safer to unload oil at sea, away from the congestion of crowded ports. The coastal development, they have said, can be regulated by the states.

Investigating for economic alternatives

By BOB FOSTER

It is said that during the crumbling of the Roman Empire, the emperor provided his citizens with bread and circuses in order to keep their minds from the decaying nature of their society. But the technique of providing diversions from reality failed then as it does now. A diversion has always been a half-truth that sooner or later dissolves under the pressures of reality. Thus, Roman bread and circuses just fed the fires of decadence that later engulfed the entire civilization.

Such is the case in America today. A few Americans banquet while millions starve in the ghettos of the cities and the slums of Appalachia. Thus, economically, we might describe ourselves as deluded by a theory of societal affluence, confused by a reality that does not match the academician's model. And our President, in the mold of the ancient Roman emperor, presents us with an economic circus, a bigtop filled by famous faces with famous ideas and infamous failures.

They were all there; the Galbraith's and Samuelson's and even a more recent addition, Mr. Greenspan in the exalted position of chief governmental soothsayer. Yet, everyone knows that you can randomly select any two economists and never get a similar answer to the same question. Thus, by bringing together eight-hundred of them, one will more than likely receive at least sixteen-hundred answers to the question, "How do we cure the ills of our economy?" Even the experts are not sure within their own minds about the nature of our problems. It logically follows that if the experts are confused, then the laymen lack any understanding at all. Thus, with the experts confused and the laymen lacking even basic comprehension, the American economy is in a shambles and no one knows what to do about it.

The circus-like atmosphere shall continue beyond the days of the summit. Soon, Mr. Ford shall announce a formula guaranteed to fight the evils of inflation and recession. And yet, one wonders how truly effective these shots of economic penicillin will be. The modern economic woes resemble none of our past ailments. But, in true masochistic style, we inject the same "miracle drugs" of fifty years ago into our cancerous economic body. How much longer can we treat our fractured economic limbs with wooden splints when what we need are radically new techniques?

While the spotlights roamed in the Washington bigtop, a smaller, less grandiose carnival was taking place. It was no ordinary carnival though. It might have been likened to the "freak show" of the economic academics' world. A collection of sincere radicals held a counter-summit to express their views. They lacked the "prestige" of their counterparts in Washington. Indeed, "notoriety" more accurately describes their reputation. "Infamy" might be even a better word. Yet, sincerity was a key element of their platform. And further, they proposed far more substantial economic steps than their Galbraithian colleagues. But few people pay attention to "freak shows" when the world's greatest clowns are in town. And so, the counter-summit drifted into oblivion while millions watched the spotlight performers in Washington.

UMass is having an economic summit of sorts Thursday, Friday and Saturday this week. Yet, it does not seem to resemble the Washington circus or the counter-"freak show". It is a socialist teach-in bringing some of the best advocates of this doctrine onto campus. Though you and I may not agree with all that is said (for it seems that some forms of socialism contain basic philosophical flaws), it is important that you inform yourself of the alternatives to the economic summit of last Friday and Saturday. Do not be swayed by the magnificence of the Galbraithian pipe or the thickness of the Samuelson text. Instead, consider the alternatives. With predictions of a developing depression that may leave us with only pennies in our pockets, a consideration of alternatives is only a slight request. And maybe, just maybe, you might learn that our economy doesn't always work like your Samuelson bible told you it does!

Letters to the editor

Many volunteer opportunities available

To the Editor:

As a UMie Alumni and occasional recipient of a copy of the Collegian, I feel a need to answer a recent letter to the editor written by Ms. Maureen Drouin. I am sorry to read that Ms. Drouin was unhappy due to her attempt at becoming a "counseling volunteer". From her letter she seems quite enthused at the prospect of helping someone. It seems obvious also from this letter that she does not have an adequate understanding of counseling and this is very possibly why she has not been accepted to volunteer as a counselor. In my work, we use volunteers and interns. I've spent many hours interviewing people with good intentions but little knowledge. Last semester our agency interviewed over 16 Outreach applicants, three were accepted and, only two of the three actually were able to participate, one eliminating themselves for personal reasons. Many of those interviewed had little practical knowledge or skill in the counseling area. Of those acceptcd, they all had varying degrees of participation in volunteer programs where they learned to communicate, establish rapport, and make friends with people quite different than themselves. This is done by playing cards, rapping, sports functions, etc.

I certainly don't want to discourage volunteers but a "counselor" must come about through a series of experiences: one is not a "counselor" overnight. Most social agencies see people with some deeply entrenched problems which aren't solved overnight. Counselors who can help these people should ideally have a good background in forming a helping relationahip. I feel the basis to this background is a step by step procession of helping relationships formed while a person has been able to give of themselves to needy people.

I do suggest that the Outreach volunteer and intern counselors should have warned Ms. Drouin that with limited experience she may be turned down. I believe that if a student wants to volunteer as a counselor for a social agency or program they should start early in their college life to acquire certain skills and experience. Take some of the University courses offered in "Counseling", get a job at a summer camp, volunteer for Belchertown, Westfield, and Northampton volunteer programs. Most of all, don't lose faith in yourself and keep trying.

RSB demands student rights

To the Editor:

In 1972, a state referendum was passed, giving 18 year olds the rights of majority. Congruent with its foot-dragging tradition, the University still has not recognized this right.

We, as students of UMass say it is our right as legal adults to have the choice to live and eat where we desire. The University says or implies that it is a privilege for us to be here, and that therefore we should abide by any rules and regulations they put forward, whether they be for our benefit, or for their own profit. We say that education is a right for all people, and that receiving it does not subject us to an infringement upon our rights as legal adults. Forced utilization of Dining Commons services hits Third World and poorer white students the hardest, as it's a well known fact that one can eat just as well, more cheaply off of the meal ticket. For the above reasons we in the Revolutionary Student Brigade are circulating a petition demanding that the UMass administration stop forcing students to live in dorms and purchase meal tickets. While we recognize that many students will still utilize these facilities, no one should be forced to use them.

The Revolutionary Student Brigade will have a table with petitions to carry around and get your friends and people in your dorm to sign. The more support we have the stronger our fight will be!

The Revolutionary Student Brigade

Collegian musically mute

To the Editor:

I was surprised to see that Mike Kostek missed the most important errors in the caption under Prof. Shepp's picture on the front page of the 10-2-1974 Collegian in his letter to the editor recently.

Mr. Shepp IS a jazz pianist, Mike. One, however would probably overstate by saying he is a 'famed' jazz pianist [as the Collegian did]. It is noteworthy that Mr. Shepp has been seriously playing piano longer than probably any writer on the Collegian staff has been seriously writing!

This brings me to another point which Mike was willing to concede but I am not. Mr. Shepp does not 'pound' on the piano; he plays it. I'm not trying to play a trivial word game here, this use of the verb to pound is highly insulting to any musician, even a percussionist. I'm bothered that such insensitivity exists in a vehicle [the Collegian*] which is supposed to enlighten. Mr. Shepp plays the piano with as much conviction as he does his saxophones for which, incidently, he is world famous.*

. Mike, I think your intentions were good and I think you'll agree that the University is NOT a cultural wasteland as you suggested, but instead, we are just not aware of all its potentials.

Perhaps we all should start looking deeper, beyond our own frames of reference. What you see is what you get.

David Gage

Thanks

To the Editor:

I wish to extend my greatest appreciation to Joe Beals, Martha Esquivel, David Klein, Keith Gustartis, Paul Sliwa, and Karen Mangan, and to congratulate them on the fine job the have done for the Commuter Assembly. Without doubt, the Commuter Assembly Executive Council has never run as well as it has this spring and fall semesters.

In the past the C.A.E.C. has done little, and even the usefullness of having a C.A.E.C. was in question as it came very near to dissolving during last years intercession. The question of usefullness is a moot point now as we prepare to mail our third House Mouse newsletter, set into action a colloquia program for commuters, and to realize the tremendous success of the off-campus housing office and the car-pool system. I would like to thank you all for making the Commuter Assembly a viable and meaningful organization through your own effort.

Killing the campus cold

Yes, it's autumn now. There are two things that convince me that summer is truly gone. The first is that the leaves change colors. The second is that I catch my first common cold.

In a story in the Boston Globe, I learned that I am not alone. Every year several weeks after school begins, there is a rise in the number of people that suffer with the symptoms of the cold. It seems that students come to school and bring with them lots of germs which everybody exchanges like baseball cards.

"I'll trade you one cough and sore throat for your stuffy nose and ear ache."

I suspect that many of the residents on my floor are sick, as the toilet paper is quickly disappearing from the store room. Another clue is the ceaseless chorus of coughs I hear as I walk down the hall. Periodically, I throw in a few of my own.

I find sickness in Mahar very frustrating. The voice goes on and on sounding as if it were at the other end of a tunnel, as I suppress urges to cough. If I have a coughing fit here, it'll take me five minutes to climb out of this row and go get a drink of water. It's apparent that other students are confronting this same problem, as my notes are frequently broken by blanks caused by numerous coughs.

"Excuse me - did you catch what he said there? NO?" Oh, well - I'll get the student senate lecture notes.

I enter the infirmary and sign in. For symptoms, I write common cold bad cough. I patiently wait my turn, listening to the symptoms around me. Every few minutes, a name is called, and a student rises and walks to the nurse at the desk next to me.

"Would you like to make an appointment? It will be at least 11 before you see a doctor. No? In that case, take this over to clinic and see doctor."

"Christine Dillard."

Slowly I rise to my feet and alk to the desk. "I really don't have to see anybody. I just need some cough syrup, and maybe some antihistamine."

"I'm afraid we can't just give you a prescription. You have to see somebody. You know, you can buy syrup from the pharmacy," the helpful nurse explained.

Being broke, I take my folder to clinic 3 and see a nurse practitioner. From there, I hunt for the pharmacy which has moved since I was here last Friday. In minutes, I'm leaving the infirmary with my very own supply of Glyceryl Guiaiacolate DM expectorant and cough suppressant and dimetapp antihistamine.

As I wander back to S.W., I think to myself that there has to be some way to defeat the common cold. Since the common cold is any one of many different viruses, I've read that innoculations such as those used for the flu, are not feasible. It's a shame - I hate shots, but I like colds even less. There is another possibility which really hasn't been tried in this country. Remember those masks made famous by doctors Kildare and Casey? (Does Dr. Welby wear them?) The masks are supposed to cut down on the spreading of germs in surgery. If everybody wore them, perhaps we could cut down on the spreading of germs in everyday life. In winter, they would also be nice for keeping one's nose warm on subzero mornings.

Meanwhile, I'm back in my room. My friend just called and said he isn't coming over after all because he's sick. That's fine with me, as it's time for me to take my medication, which usually puts me to sleep. Until then, I'm starting my weekly shopping list; first, Vitamin C. Next, 1 box of Kleenex, followed by thermometer and cough drops. What else do I need?

The businesses of the neon corridor, Route 9 between Amherst and Northampton are insensitive to the students of UMass in every way except in the tactics they use to get us to spend our money at their establishments.

The most recent display of this ignorance was an advertisement by the multi-national hamburger dynasty (over 14 billion undigested), McDonald's. The ad appeared October 8.

Headlined "McDonald's presents the Glass of '75". It was an announcement that the local McDonald's was giving away "A genuine 100 per cent pure plastic cup. Suitable inscribed with the UMass Minuteman on one side. And those handsome golden arches on the other side." It's free.

It is not free because whether or not one pays for it directly, the cost of it is absorbed in food prices..or perhaps in soft drink prices which have risen in price to the point that they should be avoided for health and wallet.

There is a greater cost in the giving of plastic cups. Plastic cups are made from fossil fuels, petroleum, a commodity that there is a limited supply of. A great irony in the McDonald's ad is when in their phony fad chasing way say "Add a little dirt and go into organic gardening." Brilliant. Organic gardening may need become a way of life because right now fertilizers are made from fossil fuels too. Until an efficient new fertilizer using some other base is developed it makes more sense to use the fossil fuels for food growing than for some tasteless Madison Avenue hype designed to get people to spend their money on food of dubious nutritional value.

Fossil fuels are also used to generate electricity. The recent and ongoing battle to stop nuclear power in the area is helped in a tiny way by every wasteful use of petroleum products such as the McDonald's insult is manufactured from.

The killer line of the McDonald's ad is "And get all that status, gratis." Status is not a genuine plastic cup with those "handsone" golden arches on it. Those golden arches are hideous...and McDonald's is a classic example of the wastefulness of American culture. Everything purchased at McDonalds is wrapped in paper. Some varieties of their gastronomic failures are wrapped in paper

The killer line of the McDonald's ad is "And get all that status, gratis." Status is not a genuine plastic cup with those "handsome" golden arches on it. Those golden arches are hideous...and McDonald's is a classic example of the garish wastefulness of American culture. Everything purchased at McDonalds is wrapped in paper. Some varieties of their gastronomic failures are wrapped in paper, put in a box and then put in a bag...as if the dinner was traveling to Canada to eat it. But they are only going to a table ten feet away, and before they eat they throw away the paper, the box and the bag!

Maybe it would be better to throw away the food and recycle the paper.

It is unfair of course to single out McDonald's although they are the prime example of the "business is the American way" school of thought which is taken as they express it is a lie. Business that is allowed to grow, uglify and waste land such as the agricultural land of Route 9 is bad. The merchants who operate those businesses have shown no social or ecological commitment. Their commitment is to get every dollar possible from the collective UMass wallet and spend it on themselves, to make their businesses make more money...and on and on until the Million Dollar Mile is a part of the tinselized megalopolis that many of us from the sprawling eastern part of the state hoped to avoid by coming to UMass.

The merchants of Route 9 owe this University a portion of the profits they have made at the expense of open space, traffic jams and offensive illuminated signs as well as the constant barrage of insulting advertisements and come-ons such as McDonald's plastic status symbol. Furthermore they owe the town of Amherst a share of those profits for turning it's downtown into a passageway to the Emerald City of their shopping paradises.

What Hadley's barons of Route nine can do for the town of Amherst is help the town pay for a roadway system that makes Route 9 passable at all times.

As far as UMass is concerned the merchants of Route 9 owe us a scholarship fund created on their behalf and to be given in their name as show of faith for education and the students pursuing it here. There are a large number of businesses between Amherst and Hadley on Route 9. A one hundred dollar a year commitment from everyone of them is a reasonable request, enough so that we can demand it.

It won't cure the aesthetic disaster that Route 9 is already, but it will show the students here that business is not all what you take, but what you can give too.

A letter to Southie

a South Boston Point of View...

Monday, Oct. 7, 1974

Dear Mother,

Everything is going well up here — I would hope things are as well at home, but apparently they are not. I read in the Herald-American today that a barroom in Southie was attacked by the Tactical Police Force and torn apart to the extent of $15,000 worth of damage — plus a few cracked heads. I can see that things are starting to happen, the violence is spreading. From what I gather from the newspaper reports, the situation is not so simple as I thought it would be. It is no longer a matter of will we or won't we bus (if it was ever that simple) but how much the government can step on us and get away with it.

I read one report from the bartender of Whitney's who said he received a call at 5 p.m. Saturday afternoon informing him that the bar would be raided that night. The Police on the other hand report that they sent their squad down only after they received a call of "Officer in Trouble" at 8:22 p.m. Interesting that one observer — victim in the bar at the time of the incident said that the Police charged in at 8:10 p.m. — a full 12 minutes before the call was even received! (Later reports from other witnesses confirmed this).

The local political unit of Hicks, Bulger and Flaherty want an investigation of the matter, and with good reason. As they stated; either DiGrazia (who says only that a call was received at 8:24 p.m. citing Officer in trouble) has lost control of the situation, — or he ordered it, — or at least agreed to it, — and now is lying. Of course, the TPF is a separate, special unit anyway, but God knows what will happen if they just start taking it upon themselves to "rectify" whatever they consider the problems to be. I was encouraged to hear of the large demonstration at Police Headquarters the next day, Sunday. It shows people are sticking together, which they must. I was also glad to see the aforementioned political unit of Hicks, Bulger and Flaherty come right out and hop on the case.

I do not think the people of South Boston will take this lying down. As we have already seen — they've demonstrated at Police Headquarters. Good luck to them. Their bull-headedness may be their biggest asset now — if it doesn't get them killed first.

Incidentally, I'm sure this will add to the controversy of whether this whole busing issue is racial or anti-governmental. While you and I may understand that the people of South Boston do not particularly care for the government at this point and that it is their nature to deny anything forced upon them — I am afraid that most outsiders view South Bostonians as racist misfits with a propensity for violence. Seeing what I see, there are times when I think I might agree about the violence part of it, — but I'm beginning to wonder whether the people of South Boston are among the few who have the fortitude to resist an overpowering government.

Most of the racist remarks I have heard in South Boston stem from people who are either:

1. suffering from chesty adolescence (despite their chronological age)
2. uninformed
3. just plain soft.

On the other hand, those people for whom I have some respect — those with half a mind or more, — key on the governmental aspect of the whole thing; i.e. the constant presence of police, the Gestapo tactics; (as the Rabbitt Inn affair certainly was); and the issue of who really has control of the children. Fortunately I have found the latter to be in the majority.

Also — do not forget that both the Nazi Party and the Klu Klux Klansmen (if you can call them men) had to be escorted out of South Boston with something resembling fear of their lives. What they were looking for, wasn't in South Boston.

Granted racism exists in South Boston. It exists everywhere. We are all raised in it to an extent that we are seldom fully aware of. But there are other elements of which we must also be aware. South Bostonians are taught to fight for what they believe in, and not to let anyone step on them just because they have bigger shoes, or are a little more powerful — as certainly the United States Government is.

I do not like to see the image of South Boston tarnished the way it has been. Granted, it is not the shiniest place in the world, but it is home to some people, and is definitely not the black hole others make it out to be. Keep in mind:

There are 38,000 people in South Boston. Several thousand have demonstrated peacefully. A few hundred of the younger ones have gotten a little violent — too violent. Rocks should not be thrown at school buses full of young children, nor should Black men be beaten in the street. These things are wrong and will never be right. The majority of South Bostonians deplore this aspect of the battle — and express it to those who engage in such. But there are those who will insist on doing these things and there is little else that can be done about it. The best we can do is to keep it in perspective, — and recognize that it is the minority who are engaged in these activities.

I do not know how long trouble will continue in South Boston. I do know one thing — the people do not want it. They wish only to have some control over their community, their lives, and the lives of their children. Apparently, today that's not as easy as it sounds.

Well, that's about as well as I can say it Ma, — I'll be home Friday to play a little hockey.

Love, Paul

Portugal empire fall hurts South Africa

By PHIL NEWSOM
UPI Foreign News Analyst

The collapse of Portugal's African empire has created new problems for the Republic of South Africa and deppened its people's sense of isolation.

It arises from South Africa's determined adherence to apartheid - separation of the races - and from the fact that, with the approaching independence of the former Portuguese provinces of Mozambique and Angola, the country for the first time finds itself eyeball to eyeball with populations dedicated to its destruction.

And it was this also that lent new dramatic value to the rejection by the U.N. General Assembly of the South African delegation's credentials and its call to the Security Council to "review the relationship" between the United Nations and South Africa.

Neither action can have a practical result. The General Assembly has been rejecting South African credentials regularly since 1970. Only the Security Council is authorized to reject or expel a U.N. member, and the United States or Britain could be considered certain to veto any such action.

In South Africa, Prime Minister John Vorster's proapartheid National party came to power in 1949 and in elections last spring increased its hold on parliament. But the elections also showed an impressive growth of opposition despite increasingly repressive measures which the government claims are necessary to maintain national tranquility.

Up until the April coup which overthrew Portugal's sternly right wing government, the South African Republic had been protected by a wall of buffer states- some of its own creation - against the rising voices of black African nationalism.

But the wall is crumbling. On the north and east, Mozambique soon will be totally independent. With white supremacist Rhodesia in between, next is the black rule state of Botswana, long regarded as a South African satellite but showing increasing signs of independence. Then comes Southwest Africa, ruled by South Africa under a League of Nations and U.N. mandate since the end of World War I and expected to gain at least some semblance of self rule within a couple of years.

Except for the 150 mile border with Rhodesia, it leaves South Africa surrounded.

As South Africa has found itself increasingly alone, Prime Minister Vorster has found it necessary to declare anew the country's determination to protect itself both from enemies from without and from residents among South Africa's black population of some 16 million, outnumbering whites by about four to one.

One result is South Africa's soaring defense budget. U.S. investment in South Africa is neither encouraged nor discouraged by Washington and is said to total about $1 billion.

Many south Africans feel the outsider's picture of their country is exaggerated. They point to a gradually easing of apartheid restrictions in sports and the increasing importance of the black man in South African economics as indications of change.

Cuban health improves since '59, doctor says

CHICAGO [AP] - The socialist revolution in Cuba has resulted in universal high quality medical care for the Cuban people, says an American physician just back from a month's visit there.

Dr. Quentin Young said health care has had a high priority in Cuba since the revolution in 1959 and is considered a social right, available to everybody free. He said Cubans "have gone a long way toward conquering that which was conquerable."

Young was one of a group of 16 U.S. medical personnel who visited Cuba under sponsorship of the U.S.-Cuban Health Exchange. They plan to report on their trip at a meeting of the American Public Health Association in New Orleans at the end of the month.

Young heads the Department of Medicine at Cook County Hospital and is a founder and past president of the Medical Committee for Human Rights. He said Cuba was left medically impoverished when 60 per cent of its 7,000 doctors left following the revolution and the medical school lost 85 per cent of its faculty.

But he said the emphasis on helath care led to a crash program for replacements. And while there is still a shortage of nurses, there are now 8,000 doctors-half of them women-and better distribution ss that Havana has fewer doctors and some smaller cities have more.

Young credited block organizations with helping to improve health care and said the committees have created "an enormous health education system," which the United States might emulate.

Young reported infant mortality down to 27.8 per 1,000 live births from an estimated 65 per 1,000 in 1959. He also reported total immunization against polio, a reduced diptheria rate, no malaria and no tetanus except among the elderly.

Student approval needed to release health records

By BARBARA ESTABROOK
UMass Infirmary, Health Education

What goes "on your health record" and who has access to it? Can someone find out that you had VD--or a pregnancy test? Will future employers find out about consultations with Mental Health? Can your mother find out if you get contraceptives?

The University Health Services strictly guards the confidentiality of student health records. These records contain each student's medical history and physical examination report (required before your initial registration at the university) and information from visits to the Health Services. What is recorded is of vital importance to the health professionals who help care for you, as diagnosis and method of treatment may depend on factors of medical history, general physical condition, previous illness, use of certain medications, etc. Some of this information is obviously highly confidential, and there is much concern about its accessibility.

Requests for release of information must be approved by the student, usually in writing on a special form. The student's approval must be informed consent--he or she will know who has requested information, and what facts have been sought. Only materials pertinent to the matter in question are released, not the entire record. Records of visits to the Mental Health Division of University Health services are kept separate from the Health Center records, and these too will only be released after you make a request in writing.

When a student is an inpatient, the information that he or she has been admitted to the Health Center and a statement of medical condition (such as good, satisfactory, critical) may be released without approval unless the student requests that this not be done.

Applications for insurance policies, graduate and professional schools, and some jobs sometimes require health information. Again, before release such requests must be authorized in writing by the student, and in such cases a fee is paid for the transmittal of information. If it will satisfy the needs of the application, a "Certificate of Good Health" can be issued.

The fear of public knowledge about your health care or problems should not be a barrier to seeking any services you need. Any questions about the confidentiality policy should be directed to the Health Education Division of the University Health Services.

Center created here to assist communities with redevelopment

A Center for the Community Renewal Studies (CCRS), with Raymond A. Werbe as director, has been established at the Institute for Man and Environment at UMass with funding from the State Department of Community Affairs (DCA).

A major task of the new center will be to help communities in such areas as understanding the redevelopment process prior to application to the DCA, in site examination and design review, with guidance on political processes, community relations and the selection of professional help, with reviews of fiscal feasibility and in other aspects of development.

Another important task will be to stimulate research within the University on those topics and problems which are encountered while working with communities. Areas with potential for further research include citizen participation in the redevelopment process, the determination of users' preferences, the investigation of cost-benefit ratios and the impact of the redevelopment process on all aspects of the community.

Werbe, a graduate of Wayne State University, was for many years a consultant on environmental factors to state and federal governments and to industry. He has been associated with the Institute for Man and Environment at UMass for the past year and before that was director of the UMass office of Environmental Concerns.

The CCRS grows out of the Boltwood Walk Advisory Committee, in the town of Amherst, which permitted faculty and students to assist the Amherst Health Advisory Council in the programs and plans for a new community health center. The success of this project in making available academic expertise to a local community was observed by legislators and state officials and led to the establishment by the University of CCRS.

It will make available those same resources to communities throughout the Commonwealth in the redevelopment process. All requests for such assistance must, however, come through the DCA.

German conscientious objectors could be model for U.S. amnesty

BONN, Germany [AP] - West German conscientious objectors care for the ill and handicapped, work in ambulances and rescue services and protect the environment in a project that could serve as a model for President Ford's amnesty program.

"Most West Germans believe that as long as there is a draft, there must be equality of service for all young men," said Manfred Harrer of the West German Labor Ministry, which administers the conscientious objector program initiated 18 years ago. "America may have something to learn from our experiences."

Ford has offered amnesty to draft evaders and deserters from the Vietnam war era in return for an oath of allegiance to the United States and for working up to two years in public services such as national health or safety.

About 30,000 West German youths will avoid the draft this year by establishing their status as conscientious objectors. To substitute for military service, they will be assigned by the Bonn government to 16 months of civilian service duties, compared with 15 months served by military recruits.

Their starting pay is about $2 a day plus meals. Many will have to finance their own living quarters. Otherwise, they receive the same welfare benefits as army recruits.

Like the Ford proposal, the West German civilian service program has provoked controversy. There is grumbling from conscientious objectors about low pay and being forced to serve one month longer than soldiers in menial, make-work assignments.

There was a dramatic upsurge of COs in West Germany during the late 1960s, attributed partly to the American war in Vietnam. In 1967, 5,963 West Germans applied for conscientious objector exemptions, but by 1972 applicants neared 34,000.

"The Vietnam war certainly played a role in the increase, but it's also been modish among young people to discount military solutions and proclaim: 'Better red than dead,'' Harrer said. "Another factor is the German past. Because of this, many want nothing to do with the military."

Mexico bans 'violent' U.S. television shows

MEXICO CITY [AP] - The government recently banned 20 American programs from Mexican television because they are considered too violent.

The prohibited shows include: "Kung Fu," "The FBI," "Ironside," "Mannix," "Mod Squad," "Dragnet," "The Untouchables," "The World of Jason King," "The Baron," and "Nichols."

Also "The Fugitive," "Desert "Streets of San Francisco," "O'Hara Secret Agent," "Rescue," "Amos Burke," "Longstreet," "Police Trilogy" and "The Sergeant."

The Interior Ministry said the programs could not be shown as of Sept. 30.

"Safeguards established to help heads of families protect their children from certain programs have failed," an official said. "We want to keep the children from watching programs of such negative influence."

Mexican President Luis Echeverria, in his Sept. 1 State of the Union message spoke of "the influence of violent television and movies on the development of our youth."

"Mod Minister" runs

MIAMI [UPI] - Arthur Blessitt, the so-called "Mod Minister of Sunset Strip," announced yesterday he would campaign for president of the United States to provide American voters "with an alternative".

Blessitt, a 33-year-old ordained minister, said he will campaign as a candidate in Florida's 1976 presidential preference primary.

Kent State film to be shown here

In the Spring of 1970 then President Richard Nixon sent troups into Cambodia. This action touched off a series of demonstrations on the nation's campuses. At Kent State University the National Guard was called out and in the events that followed four unarmed students were killed.

This Thursday, the Student Organizing Project will sponsor a free showing of Confrontation at Kent State, a film outlining the events surrounding the killing of the four students. The film will be shown in the Campus Center Concourse on a continuous basis from 12:00 noon until 3:00 p.m.

Amherst tutoring jobs available

Opportunities are presently available in the Companion Tutor Program, working with elementary and junior high school students through the Amherst Community Resource Center.

The program involves a two semester commitment to spend time weekly (one contact per week) with a child on a recreational basis and tutoring the child whenever appropriate.

For further information, contact Jan Klausner, 253-2591 or 256-6424, or Cynthia Parent 253-2591 or 549-6421.

Collegian has jobs

The Collegian is looking for two students who qualify for work-study. One student must be available to work between noon and 4 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays while the second student should be able to work about three hours each afternoon from Monday through Friday. The jobs are both clerical and minimum typing skills are required.

SW offers talks on homosexuality

The Community Resource Center in Southwest will offer workshops, informal question and answer sessions, and movies for groups on campus who are interested in the issues of Lesbianism and Homosexuality.

Nancy Schroeder, the coordinator of the program, is a doctoral student in the School of Education, and has been working with heads of residence and counselors in Southwest to explore the myths, fears, and prejudices that prevent the heterosexual community from accepting and appreciating the Lesbian and Homosexual communities on campus and in the area.

Anyone interested in arranging a workshop involving any aspect of heterosexuality and Lesbianism-Homosexuality can contact the Resource Center at 545-2618.

No advance notice needed for LSAT s

Beginning with the October 12 administration of Law School Admissions Test, it will be possible to walk in and register to take the test on the date it is given. This opportunity will depend on the number of booklets available but those administering the test estimate that this may be as many as 40 places.

It will be necessary to have a completed registration form and a check or money order for all fees plus a $10.00 service charge.

Further information can be obtained form John Brigham, Pre-Law advisor in CASIAC. The phone number is 545-1404.

Mt. Holyoke starts theater season

The Mount Holyoke College's theatre department will open its fall season with a three-act comedy entitled "George Washington Slept Here," written by George Kaufman and Moss Hart, leading playwrights of the 1930's and '40's. The performance will take place on October 25-27, October 31, and November 1-3 at the Laboratory Theatre.

The lead character, Newton Fuller, will be played by Allen Bonde, associate professor of music, with Ellen Kennedy, a student at Mount Holyoke, playing the part of Annabelle.

Ticket information is available by calling 538-2406.

Workshop planned on professions

A workshop on the "helping professions" is being planned by CASIAC's pre-graduate adviser, Pat Rector. A panel of faculty will talk and answer questions from students from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Tuesday, October 15 in Room 174-176 of the Campus Center.

Students wishing additional help with their plans for graduate school will be able to schedule appointments at that time with the pre-graduate adviser.

Faculty with specialities in psychology, social work, school guidance, public health, human relations, and probation counseling will discuss those professions, job prospects, the differences among these speciality areas, and qualifications.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Wednesday, October 9

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Business and professional partnerships are favored at this time. Don't make any decisions that should be joint ones on your own.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — The joy to be gained from attention to matters of importance to the situation on the home front is immeasurable. Know that you are lucky to be involved.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Half the battle for success is won if you are able to see an opportunity before the competition. Keep eyes and ears wide open!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Any new financial benefits should be appreciated by loved ones today. Don't keep to yourself any news which might make another happy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — An excellent day for profit-making — but only if you are wise enough to take advantage of a situation that may look quite unpromising.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Take care not to put too much faith in appearances. Just when all seems in order where advancement is concerned, trouble may erupt from beneath the surface.

ARIES March 21-April 19) — Turn your full attention to the needs of younger family members. You may be able to assist where others have only been able to sympathize.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Push plans forward where they involve improvements on the home front. Don't hesitate to consult an expert on a question of finances.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — This is a day for forwarding your own interests, even if you have to change your plans to do so. Others may be disappointed — but not for long.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — With push you can get ahead today. Make your morning hours more productive than usual; keep others from interrupting you early in the day.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Advance your career today — though you may have to take a temporary loss in order to do so. Take care that you don't misplace your trust.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Employment matters may be more complex than they appear to be during morning hours.Take the advice of one who is an expert in personal relationships.

USELESS COURSE TAKEN TO COURT. A University of Bridgeport coed is suing the University for breech of contract because she "learned absolutely nothing" in a Secondary Education course titled "Materials and Methods of Teaching." Labeling the course "an insult to her intelligence", the coed claims education courses as a whole are "easy A's" and that many of them can be "lumped together into one course."

The page one story in The Scribe says the coed is demanding a tuition refund, damages incurred while taking the course such as wages lost and transportation costs, and waiver of the course as an education requirement.

She received an "A" for the course, by the way.

RICH JESSAMY IS CORNERED by two Vermont linebackers after yet another successful rush through "the Pit" on his way to a hundred yard rushing day. The sophomore proved slippery Saturday, but so did the ball. He lost two fumbles. Guard Russ Cooke (61) is sprawled in foreground.

UVM's Bateman on YanCon all-stars

AMHERST — Vermont quarterback Bob Bateman, Connecticut defensive back Marty Bird, and Maine quarterback Jack Cosgrove have been selected as the Yankee Conference offensive, defensive and rookie players of the week following outstanding performances last Saturday.

Bateman, a 6'6" junior from Darien, Connecticut, rallied his teammates from a 14 point deficit as he completed 21 of 32 passes for 255 yards and three touchdowns as the Catamounts upset heavily favored Massachusetts 25-14 to knock the Minutemen out of first place in the conference standings.

Bird, a 5'10" junior from Simsbury, Connecticut, intercepted three second half passes deep in UConn territory and returned them 56 yards to set the stage for the Husky's rally which resulted in a 41-24 win over New Hampshire.

Cosgrove, a 6'1 sophomore from Sharon, Mass., gained 80 yards in 22 carries while scoring one touchdown and tossed an eight yard scoring pass as Maine upended Rhode Island 29-19 for its first victory of the year.

Getting practice

SAN JUAN, P.R. [UPI] - Frank Robinson, recently named player-manager of the Cleveland Indians, will return this year as manager of the winter league Santurce Crabbers, the president of the club, Hiram Cuevas, announced Tuesday.

Buckeyes, Crimson Tide top grid poll

NEW YORK [UPI] — The top 10 has been like an accident waiting to happen for most of its members this season, but not for Ohio State and Alabama.

But, then, Ohio State and Alabama are not ordinary members, rather more like founding fathers.

And, as has been the case since the preseason, the Buckeyes and the Crimson Tide are running 1-2 today in the latest United Press International Board of Coaches' top 20 ratings.

With identical 4-0 records, the Buckeyes collected 32 of 35 first-place votes with Alabama capturing two of the remaining three.

Michigan, which also has avoided the plethora of upsets this season, received the last first-place ballot and was again third this week.

Nebraska, 3-1, replaced Texas A&M in the fourth spot after the Aggies were upended Saturday by Kansas 28-10.

Meanwhile, a pair of undefeated Southeastern Conference teams continued to climb steadily in the rankings. Florida moved from eighth to fifth and Auburn advanced from ninth to sixth.

Texas Tech remained seventh with a hard-earned victory over Oklahoma State and Notre Dame fell two notches to eighth. Southern California and North Carolina State each moved up one position with victories to close out the top 10.

Wisconsin, which mauled previously-ranked Missouri last week and faces Ohio State Saturday, heads the second 10, followed by undefeated Arizona.

Seven days in sport

VM win: Bateman and robbin'

By STEVE SARACENO
Sports Staff

When September gives way to October and the leaves change color and drop, 'tis the signal the time has come for the annual Fall Classic. Ah, yes, the women's junior varsity field hockey home opener, won by UMass, 2-0. In the week's other big events...

The UMass gridders were shocked by Vermont, 25-14, and people are still trying to figure out how that skinny guy did it...

The Patriots won again, edging the Colts, 42-3...

And the playoff participants in baseball were determined, followed by the start of the two best-of-five series...

FOOTBALL — Why did UMass look like Minutemen (pronounced: My-noot-men) against Vermont? Some unbalanced observers say it was the work of gremlins, but less-crazy fans blame Catamount quarterback Bob Bateman (no gnome at 6'6), who threw for 252 yards. UMass didn't help things by trying to roll the ball downfield...

"Who can stop the Patriot juggernaut?" That's the question being repeated everywhere — at bus stops, over lunch at the DC, in classes, on Mars. The Pats point total of 42 was their highest total in seven years, and they're still unbeaten, untied, and unreal...

In an equally important event Sunday, The Collegian football team tied the Student Senate, 14-14, on a Saraceno to Rich Sevieri bomb in the waning moments. Sirens sounded, church bells rang, and many wept openly. It was a moral victory...

Monday night football returned to its exciting ways, but Joe Willie White Shoes couldn't quite pull a "Bateman" over Miami, losing 21-17...

BASEBALL — Baltimore beat New York by two games in the East, and then toppled Oakland in the first playoff tilt. They lost the second, 5-0, perhaps because they were uncontrolably laughing after A's designated track man Herb Washington slid into second and nearly died...really, cows have made better slides than that...

The Pirates concluded they were "destiny's darlings" after a passed ball on a third strike allowed them to eventually clinch the NL East. They promptly lost two straight to the Dodgers in the playoffs...

Frank Robinson was named player-manager of Cleveland as the Red Sox finished their slate, losing two-out-of-three to the Indians...

The finale sparked talk of turning points in the Sox demise — staffer Glenn Poster deduced it came in August because the Sox shelved their ridiculous red-panelled hats. But, most probably the pivotal point came earlier, when the caps were not given, as Bill Lee quipped, "little white propellers on top"...

CAMPUS MISCELLANEOUS — The varsity stickers also triumphed on Fall Classic day, 4-0...The cross country team won three (including the first victory over Harvard in 22 years), but were outrun by Providence College at Franklin Park...And the soccermen lost their home opener but rebounded vs. WPI, 4-zip...

PRO MISCELLANEOUS — Team Canada finished their series with the USSR at 1-4-3, but not before a bloody sixth game brawl nearly ended up in having The Bomb dropped. Under Soviet rules, the two who start a fight are given five-minute misconducts, and the third man in is handed directly to the KGB...

Expanded NHL underway tonight

[AP] — The National Hockey League, expanded to 18 teams with the addition of the Kansas City Scouts and Washington Capitals, begins its six-month march Wednesday night toward 12 playoff berths.

With more teams, more games, new divisions and a revised playoff format, which eventually will eliminate only one-third of the teams from post-season competition, one player said, "It's like playing an 80-game exhibition schedule."

Nonetheless, the games that count in the standings begin with the Scouts traveling to Toronto to face the Maple Leafs and the Capitals at the New York Rangers. In other games, it will be the New York Islanders vs. the Montreal Canadiens, the Atlanta Flames vs. the Vancouver Canucks, the Pittsburgh Penguins vs. the Minnesota North Stars, the Chicago Black Hawks vs. the Detroit Red Wings and the St. Louis Blues vs. California Golden Seals.

Women stickers victors, 4-1

By LINDA MACKLER

Elaine Senosk, Kathy O'Neil, and Joanne Lorrey provided the offense, while Jean Kentfield carried the defense as the undefeated UMass women's field hockey team beat the previously undefeated Mt. Holyoke team 4-1.

In their first real challenge, on Tuesday afternoon in Northampton, the UMass team maintained an intelligent and strong passing offense forcing the Mt. Holyoke defense.

The score does not adequately reflect the toughness of the players' task because the two teams were evenly matched. UMass made only twenty shots at the goal at Mt. Holyoke's eighteeen. The victory was mainly due to the superb playing of goalie Jean Kentfield.

"Jean did an outstanding job," Coach Albert said of her goalie's first test. "She made an unbelievable ten difficult clears."

Aiding her at defense were Joanne Smith and Sheila Higgins. Sitting out the first two games of the season because of a bruised right thigh, Sheila returned to the line-up and as a sweeper and played superior hockey.

The team once again defined the cliche, "team effort," as the eleven members simply outlasted and outplayed the four member nucleus of Mt. Holyoke.

"We don't have either a weak position or a particularly strong one," Coach Albert claimed. "We just have a good team, while Mt. Holyoke relies on four strong players."

They were a clearly superior team, dominating the statistics twenty-five shots on goal to Mt. Holyoke's three.

Karen Johnson played a nice defensive game as the offense neatly passed the ball among three separate scorers - Betty Dalba, Nancy Ryder, and Cheryl Meliones. Mt. Holyoke's scorer was Becky Brumber.

Cheryl, like the rest of the players on both teams, was ecstatic over the victories and picked up enormous confidence for the big game on Saturday at Springfield College.

"We played a great game," she said. "There was good passing and good teamwork. This was just a warm-up for our big test. We have a good team, good spirit, and a good coach."

Springfield, who always has a good team and who is always UMass' strongest emotional rival will traditionally be tough to beat. They have an astro turf field and the advantage of having played on it. If UMass can quickly adjust and if both teams are in top form, Saturday's game promises to provide the challenge.

Orioles' Don Baylor is out stealing in yesterday's American League playoff game won by A's Dick Green want to make sure that umpire Marty Springstead makes the correct call.

Stargell, Kison lead Bucs past sloppy Dodgers; 7-0

LOS ANGELES [UPI] Strongman Willie Stragell hit a three-run homer and Richie Hebner followed with a two-run blast in the opening inning and the Pittsburgh Pirates averated a sweep in the National League playoffs by beating the erratic Los Angeles Dodgers 7-0 Tuesday.

Reed-thin righthander Bruce Kison and 34-year-old reliever Ramon Hernandez shut out the Dodgers on four hits, two of them singles by Bill Russell off the Pittsburgh starter, and the Dodgers committed a playoff record five errors.

Checked on a dozen singles in 3-0 and 5-2 losses at home Saturday and Sunday, the Pirates came back out bombing against Southpaw Doug Rau and tagged four Dodgers pitchers for 10 hits.

Stargell homered off Rau, a 13-game winner during the regular season, with one out in the first and Richie Stennett aboard on a single to right and Al Oliver on a walk.

One out later, Dodger first baseman Steve Garvey, the MVP in the All-Star game this season, threw wide to Rau covering first base on Bob Robertson's ground ball for the first Los Angeles error of the day.

Hebner, who had only one hit in six at-bats in the first two playoff games, then slammed a 2-2 Rau pitch into the same rightfield pavilion that Stargell found.

For the mighty Stargell, the only man to hit a ball out of Dodger stadium in its 13-year history, it was his first home run in postseason play--four championship playoff series and one world series.

Giving Manager Danny Murtaugh a big victory on his 57th birthday, the Pirates got superlative clutch pitching from the 24-year-old Kison, who went 6-2-3 innings. Kison was lifted when the Dodgers loaded the bases on a pair of walks, his fifth and sixth of the game, and Russell's single to center.

But Hernandez, who issued an eighth-inning single to pinch-hitter Tom Paciorek and a pinch double by Rick Auerbach with two out in the ninth, got pinch-hitter Manny Mota out on a line drive to second baseman Stennett.

The Dodgers didn't get a ball out of the infield off Kison until Joe Ferguson led off the fifth with a fly ball that sent Stargell back to just in front of the warning track.

Los Angeles committed its five errors in the first five innings, but only the first one, by Garvey in the opening inning, was costly.

The Pirates scored twice off Knuckleballer Charlie Hough in the third inning on four singles with Hebner's single to right scoring Stargell from second base and Mario Mendoza's ground ball hit to shortstop bringing in Richie Zisk from third.

Hough allowed Stennett to reach first base when he overthrew Garvey with one out in the second and Stennett's grounder to lead off the fourth went through second baseman Davey Lopes' legs for the third Dodger miscue of the game.

In the fifth, Los Angeles' Joe Ferguson got an error on catcher's interference with Hebner at bat and then Al Downing, the third Dodger pitcher, threw a comebacker from Mendoza over Garvey's head to put runners at second and third. But Kison grounded out to short to end the inning.

Kison, who spent most of 1973 with the Pirates' triple a farm club at Charleston, W. Va., recovering from arm problems, now has pitched 19 2-3 innings in playoff and world series games and has given up no earned runs and just six hits.

The Pasco, Wash., stringbean gained national acclaim in the first world series night game ever played when he pitched 6 1-3 innings in relief and picked up the victory against Baltimore in the fourth series game in 1971.

High hopes for UM netmen

By GLENN POSTER

A new assistant coach, new faces on the courts, and vast improvement from returning players all have combined to give this new edition of the UMass tennis team reason for optimism. The goal, of course, is to recapture the Yankee Conference championship next spring, a position Coach Steve Kosakowski's players had held the three previous years and five of seven until last season when Vermont took the title away.

The new assistant is former player Ted Donahue. Ted used to be the number one singles player and teamed with Don Douglas in doubles to become the number one pair two years ago in that category for the conference (a year the two of them lost only one match as a team). As a singles player, Douglas twice went to the finals of the YanCon tourney. He played two years for Kosakowski, sitting out 1974 because of bad ankles. Ted is a veteran having served on a submarine. And now, as a grad student, he is trying to do two jobs at once. Coach Kosakowski and his new number two man feel they are going to work well with one another.

The team has played two practice matches against North Adamas and Springfield College, winning both by 8-1 scores. As for the players on the team, a good starting point would be to speak of the returnees from last year.

Right now Kevin Garahan, only a sophomore, will probably be the number one singles player come next spring. Dave Abramoff, also a sophomore, is in the words of his coach, "going to be hard to keep out of a starting position." Abramoff has only played the game of tennis for two years. Chris Post, who last year had one rally lasting the duration of 118 balls-is also one of the most improved. Barnaby Kalan is also looking good so far. Gary Ney, a senior, returns after sitting out last season and Kos claims that, "if he gets into shape, he should be right up there." Two more players are not with the team right at the moment because of other athletic commitments. Jon Archer is playing hockey. And Mike Phillip, who was on a student exchange in London last year, will return as a senior in the spring after playing rugby.

Among the new faces are Peter Hinchey a transfer from Boston College. Hinchey was in the service, attended UMass last year, but was ineligible to play. Mark Barron comes from a place called Amherst High School and the coach feels that, "he has great potential and could play both ways, possibly number one doubles."

Other newcomers are a brother combination of John and Charley Beals who may play as a doubles tandem. And, so nobody gets left out the rest of the players are Steve Heyl, Peter Schwartz, Wayne Chatteron, Chris Chingros, Mark Knox, John Rawinski, Kevin Sullivan, and Arthur Cloutier. (Back from last year but for all intents and purposes a newcomer)

Everyone, from Coach Kosakowski on down the line, has high hopps for this team right now. The showing in practice thus far has justified the optimism.

A's win, 1-0

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Vida Blue fired an overpowering two-hitter and Sal Bando homered in the fourth inning Tuesday to lead the Oakland A's to a 1-0 victory over the Baltimore Orioles and to within one triumph of their third straight American League pennant.

The A's can clinch their third flag in a row by winning either the fourth for fifth games of the playoffs scheduled Wednesday and Thursday in Baltimore.

Blue, the sometimes fitful fireballer who was winless in seven previous post-season appearances, pitched a magnificent game, striking out seven and not permitting a Baltimore baserunner to reach second. The hits off him were singles by Bobby Grich and Don Baylor in the fourth and seventh innings, respectively, and the only other Orioles who reached first were safe on errors by second baseman Dick Green.

Green's second error provided the hometown crowd of 32,060 with its biggest thrill of the day. I came with two out in the bottom of the ninth and brought the dangerous Grich to the plate. Blue seemed agitated for a few moments but then got Grich to hit into a force play at second to end the game.

Bando, the A's captain who insists Oakland is one of the most underrated teams in baseball history, gave Blue the only run of the game when he rifled a 350-foot shot into the left field bleachers off Jim Palmer with one out in the fourth.

Palmer, who feared that he might have to pass up today's starting assignment, if he was bothered by a pinched nerve in his right elbow, did not have his usual stuff but pitched a splendid game. He mixed curves and changeups with his fast ball and aside from Bando's homer allowed only three singles.

Blue, who had an 0-4 mark in previous playoff and world series competition, said he threw 99 per cent fast balls. Andy Etchebarren came closest to giving the Orioles a run when he chased center fielder Jim North to the warning track for his towering fly with two out in the eighth.

Blue struck out Tommy Davis to end the third inning after Grich's singles and retired Earl Williams and Etchebarren after Brooks Robinson was safe on Green's first error in the Fifth. Baylor was out stealing after his single in the seventh — the only other Baltimore base runner until Green's second error in the ninth.

The A's will have Jim Hunter, whom they call their "Money Man," pitching for them in Wednesday's fourth game. The Orioles will counter with Mike Cuellar, 6-3 winner over Hunter in the first game of the series.

Mirthful mutterings

It's a good thing Mack Herron got messed up on drugs up in Canada or he'd never be a New England Patriot today.

I bet that Coach Jack Leaman is sleeping better these nights now that Jim Town, the hope of the UMass basketball team's future, has been beaten out of the punting job for the football team by John Ramboli.

Hey, did you realize that Yaz finished batting over .300. One percentage point over, to be exact.

Alright, here's one for all you sports trivia addicts. Ready? Name anyone who is on the UMass swim team. Gotcha, didn't I?

Anyone remember the gymnastics team?

Twenty years from now, Steve Swisher could be the answer to a good sports trivia question after that costly passed ball and wild throw that helped Pittsburgh win the NL East. Move over, Mickey Owens.

There is absolutely no truth to the rumor that the Red Sox will be moved to the South Pacific and be renamed the Manila Folders. Is there, Mr. Yawkey?

Illie Nastase, what a name. Speaking of names, dig the one the Patriots placekicker has.

The Red Sox aren't all that bad. They'll be right up there next year. All they need is a lefthanded relief pitcher, a righthanded relief pitcher, a backup catcher, righthanded power hitter, lefthanded power hitter, two more starting pitchers...

Now try to name the members of the UMass wrestling team, tennis team, soccer team, cross country, hockey, lacrosse, baseball, track, gymnastics...

Come to think of it the Red Sox could use some bench strength too.

Did you read that Chris Evert and Jimmy Connors have put off their wedding because of their busy tennis schedules. You have to set up priorities, I guess.

Imagine playing for the San Diego Padres of the California Angels or the Chicago Cubs or the Detroit Tigers or the Atlanta Falcons or the Baltimore Colts or the Houston Oilers or the California Golden Seals or the Vancouver Canucks or the Key West Cubs (the Key West Cubs?) or the...

Speaking of the California Angels, Dick Williams really turned them around, didn't he. Just think, the Yankees wanted Williams instead of Manager of the Year candidate Bill Virdon.

Try these trades on for size. I think they'd help the Red Sox immensely. Rick Wise and Bernie Carbo for Reggie Smith; or how about Reggie Cleveland, Diego Segui and Terry Hughes for Lynn McGlothen, Mike Garman and John Curtis; or Tommy Harper for George Scott; or maybe Danny Cater and Mario Guerrero for Sparky Lyle; or Dick McAuliffe for Ben Oglivie; or possibly the Red Sox could get a pitcher from the National League like maybe Jim Lonborg or Ken Brett; or maybe...

You know the St. Louis Spirits of the ABA could be one of the best teams in basketball next year. They will have Marvin Barnes, Billy Cunningham (depending on a court decision), Maurice Lucas (from Marquette), and Don Chaney.

How come the Red Sox never got anyone from the Giants for Russ Gibson?

Upton Bell has purchased the wrong WFL team. He bought the N.Y. Stars and moved them to Charlotte. He should have bought the Philadelphia team. Maybe he could have moved them to Upton, Mass., then they'd be called the... I can't say it.

You know if the N.Y. Nets keep on getting players like Dr. J and Dr. A, maybe they should call themselves the N.Y. Vets.

The UMass soccer team has added two new teams to their 1974 schedule, the Keene State Owls and the Westfield State Owls. After losing to Keene State 4-0, I wonder if it was a "wise" move adding the Owls. Oh, whooo gives a hoot.

But rent control could reduce

Bondholders take 60% of dorm fees

By JOHN PEPI
Staff Reporter

First in a series on the politics and financing of University dormitories and dining commons

"I believe in free enterprise, but I believe in rent control too," said Charles Hampton, financial manager of the Residential Life Board, recently in an interview. The interview was part of an investigation being conducted by the Housing Education and Action Group of the Student Organizing Project.

"Despite Hampton's philosophy of free enterprise and rent control," says project member Jerry Polinski, "students living in dormitories are paying close to $200 monthly for one double occupancy room."

"An incredible 60 per cent of this dormitory fee goes to corporate investment cartels, whose membership includes the Chase Manhattan Bank, Merrill Lynch Palmer Fenner & Smith, Morgan Guaranty and Trust Company, and the First National Bank of Boston. These enormous financial institutions purchased the state bonds issued to finance dorm and dining commons construction," she said.

Hampton delineated the procedure by which the dorms were financed, saying: "When the administration and Board of Trustees determined that there was a need for new housing and dining facilities, they sought approval of the state legislature. The legislature authorized the UMass Building Authority to float a series of bonds in the money market. Revenue from the sale of these bonds is used to pay off construction debts."

Bonds issued in April, 1971 to pay the debt on Projects 8, 9 and 10 of Southwest, on Sylvan, and on North Village Apartments, amounted to $27,075,000. According to Hampton, these bonds are likely to yield over $40 million in interest to their owners.

Matt Burns, of the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee, said, "This arrangement belies the lipservice paid to rent control We cannot leave these matters up to the alleged goodwill of the administration or state legislature. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts ranks eleventh in per capita income, but only 49th in per capita higher education expenditures."

"What is particularly disturbing is that those students who can find jobs are paid between $1.60 and $2.50 an hour, only to shell out big bucks to dorm and dining commons investors who are among the top 1.6 per cent of wealth

Stu-senate approves 3 issues

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate last night, voted unanimously on three issues: an amendment to give investigating committees authority to subpoena University administrators, to accept affirmative action as senate policy and to endorse a hearing on the residence halls system.

According to the amendment, investigating committees of the senate on such issues as food and rent and fees will have the power of subpoena "over any university department which directly or indirectly affects a student life and-or education. This includes power of subpoena over persons and documents."

Rick Savini, president of the S.G.A. explained the amendment. "The Senate intends to hold open hearings on problems of students. The investigating committees need to have the ability to call administrators to speak before the committees."

If subpoenas are unanswered, the amendment will give the committees the power to request the subpoenas to be printed in the Collegian, announced on WMUA and posted as public announcements.

"It will force the administrators to come to meetings and testify. There are enough areas of problems, we don't want to have problems with the authority since they work for students," Savini said.

The affirmative action policy adopted by the Senate will require student organization to include more women and Third World people if found they are underutilized. The Senate must examine policies of the organization. This policy is geared to eliminate discriminatory conditions.

Savini said of the affirmative action issue that, "it is high time that the Senate cleaned house on its own action before asking the administration to clean their house."

The affirmative action issue was tabled for the next four weeks and will be voted on as three separate motions. Next week, the Senate will vote to amend it to the by-laws and then to the constitution.

The hearing on the residence system endorsed by the Senate, will discuss problems of students having to live in residence hall until they are 21. The bill's sponsor, Matt Burns wants to recruit as many students as possible. But he wants Student Senate endorsement "to let students know it is more than one or two people's action." Burns said the issue is important "in light of the new age of majority."

Ford economy speech draws mixed reactions at UMass

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

Random interviews on campus yesterday revealed mixed reactions to President Gerald Ford's proposed anti-inflation program.

To combat inflation President Ford has proposed a five per cent income tax surcharge for families with an income of $15,000 or more and for single individuals with an income of $7500 or more. Also, the president has proposed a plan for helping the unemployed by providing public service jobs.

When asked about the surcharge tax one Bookstore employee said, "The president is picking on the middle class".

Another university employee said, "I pay an awful lot of taxes now and I'm going to be paying more if this goes through".

A barber in the campus center said he would be more in favor of a graduated surcharge tax in which people earning $15,000 would pay three per cent and gradually it would increase to 10 per cent for those earning $25,000.

A 20 year-old environmental design major from South Hadley said "I think Ford is trying to do something. I think the suggestion of community projects, like the civil conservation corps after World War Two is a good idea."

However, a business major from Greenfield said, "No matter what program Ford suggests, they'll only be as good as the people implementing them," adding, "I'd like to have seen some sort of income supplement, in dollars not services for low-income people. A program like the Food Stamp Program is a good step, there should have had more in this nature."

Students to get overtime

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

"We are going to pay overtime to everyone we owe money to. From this time on there will be no more overtime," Timothy Cox, Campus Center Personnel Director said yesterday.

As reported in yesterday's Collegian, the Campus Center has violated the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act for at least the past three years by denying students time-and-a-half overtime pay rates.

In that article Gerald Scanlon, Dean of Student Employment said, "Anyone who thinks they have the right can petition for redress and have their case heard."

Cox said one student has already come to his office asking to have his case reviewed, since the article was printed.

"We will tell anyone who comes in that all of the records will be reviewed - not just by request only. We will review all the records that we have," he said.

Cox said that the records he has in his office now date back to July 1, 1973, but that he doesn't know offhand how far back the other records they have go.

Cox said from what the Campus Center administrators are saying, "I don't see any way now that a student will work overtime."

"If a student is in the middle of something and they can't find someone to relieve that person, they will just stop working and close down. There just will not be any overtime worked," he said.

Cox said Campus Center Director John Corker is in contact with the Personnel and Payment offices to find a way to pay the students they still owe

Faculty Senate elects Nat Clark Vice-Chairman

By DONNA A. DIODATI
Staff Reporter

Nat Clark, a UMass student from Sharon, Mass., was recently elected Vice-Chairperson of the Faculty Senate Academic Matters Council.

Clark, a biochemistry major, was elected to the one-year term at the council's first meeting of the semester, last Thursday.

Clark explained the council is made up of 20 faculty members elected by the Faculty Senate, and four students appointed by the Chairperson of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee. Clark was appointed last semester.

Looking to the future, Clark said he hopes that the council could bring back to UMass "high quality education," in view of the freeze on the number of enrolled students. He said he favors a return to "traditional academics," with respect for the faculty and acknowledgment of students' superior academic performances becoming commonplace.

"The university exists to educate people... (under my plan) the majority of UMass students (who don't know why they're here), would leave. Those (students) here then would want to be, and would work to stay here...," Clark said.

He added that UMass students who are academically oriented are now in the minority, and their rights are being overlooked. As an example, he said that the Housing Office usually doesn't grant exemptions from on-campus living to students who claim they can't study in their dorms.

"All students are different," Clark said, "but they are students first, and should be allowed to work at it."

Clark, 21, is a member of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee; the Health Advisory Board and the Health Council of the University Health Services; and is a Collegian columnist.

Don Luce, journalist, to speak on Vietnam

Don Luce, an expert on Indochina, will be the kick-off speaker in the United Christian Foundation's "First Amendment" series, beginning at 12:15 p.m. today in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. Interested persons are invited to bring a bag lunch and join in informal discussion.

Luce is the journalist who is credited with having discovered the infamous "tiger cages" on Con Son Island in 1970. Prior to that he had been Director for six years of International Voluntary Services, from which position he resigned in protest against U.S. policies in Vietnam. Since then he has traveled extensively in all parts of that country, including a 3-week visit last spring to the areas controlled by the Provisional Revolutionary Government.

Luce's topic will be: "Vietnam: Still America's War". The half-hour talk will be followed by a period of questions, answers and dialogue.

The United Christian Foundation (UCF) is an ecumenical Protestant campus ministry located on the third floor of Hampshire House, with programs in the areas of counseling, peace and justice and Faith Exploration courses. "First Amendment" is a series of Thursday noon forums dealing with issues of concern to the campus community.

Linnig explains Christian Science

Christian Science Organization will present a talk by Roy Linnig tonight at 7 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. The talk which is open to the campus community, is titled: "Commitment: a Christian Science approach."

Mr. Linnig will discuss how Christian Scientists seek to deal effectively on an individual basis with problems facing the human community, whether at the global or the local level.

After the lecture, the audience will have an opportunity to ask questions relating to aspects of Christian Science.

In 1953, Linnig left a career in business to become a full-time practitioner of Christian Science. Since becoming a member of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship ten years later, he has spoken to audiences in many countries about Christian Science.

Other activities of Christian Science Organization include weekly meetings held Tuesdays at 6:15 p.m. These meetings, which are always open to visitors, include readings relating to a topic of current interest, and experiences shared by people who have used Christian Science to heal disease or solve problems.

The Organization also has a table in the Campus Center each Tuesday during the day, and there will be a table today at which more information about tonight's talk may be obtained.

holders in the country. This latter group of super-rich individuals and corporations own nearly 100 per cent of these tax-exempt state bonds," he said.

Regarding the financing of dorms and dining commons construction, Residential Life Director Ken Dean said, "Those decisions were made a number of years ago and no matter how much input you or I or anybody has, it's already been done. That's the capitalistic system."

Hampton added, "It's all very competitive."

Dean was questioned about a statement in the department's reorganization proposal which cited "rapidly escalating legal pressure by students for self-determination of accommodations." He offered his assurances that "if students took it to court, it may or may not be successful, but regardless of what happens in the Residence Halls, the bonds are going to be paid, even if it comes from higher tuition."

The Housing Education-Action Group, part of the Student Organizing Project operating out of Student Union Room 428A, is currently examining other aspects of the dormitory and food service financial structure.

The article also reported Richard Howland, former Attorney for Students at UMass had investigated the Campus Center policies at least two years ago.

He said Warren T. Grinnan, former Director of the Campus Center and Michael Egan, former Director of Campus Center Food Service, and Donald Witkowski who is still Accomodations Manager of the Campus Center (covering the Hotel, Garage and Scheduling) had been told the policy was illegal at that time.

Witkowski told the Collegian yesterday he doesn't remember the incident and was sure he had not been involved with any conversations along those lines.

Witkowski said he called Howland after seeing the article and said "We can't either one of us recall meeting about that."

Howland had talked to Grinnan and said he'd take care of the matter, Witkowski claimed.

Howland said yesterday, "I don't remember whether or not Donald Witkowski was involved. As he said, in those days, Grinnan would have solved it."

Howland said he has trouble remembering exactly who he talked to and Witkowski wouldn't have had anything to do with the decision process then.

Witkowski said a directive should have come down at that point stopping the policy. "I don't know what happened up there. I was never involved in it," he said.

Teaching conference disappointing

Lack of student participation bothers Evans

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

"I was rather surprised that a conference devoted to university teaching has so much unrelieved lecturing," said Lionel Evens, a delegate from London's City University to this weekend's International Conference for the Improvement of University Teaching.

"There should have been a more varied method of presentation and more active participation," said Evens who is the head of the Center for Educational Technology at City University.

Other delegates to the three day conference complained that the conference did not live up to what the fliers said, and that accommodations and planning were poor.

Although impressed by the "Warm, human, friendly feeling" of the conference, Evens said, "I find that everyone is still talking about teaching. Far too little people are talking about the learner."

"No students spoke at the conference. This would be unheard of in the United Kingdom," said Evens, who also teaches one undergrad course in communications, and one graduate course in metallurgy.

Student input in England is channeled through the National Union of Students. Evens said that students are involved in the planning of courses, how they are conducted and their evaluation.

Evens described the Center for Education Technology as an organization within the university for developing the university teaching method, training the faculty in teaching and other aspects of the job, and providing all media sources necessary for use in the job.

"Our last teaching conference was held in June and over 95 per cent of the universities in Britain were represented," Evens said. "An invitation was sent to every vice-chancellor, which is the equivalent of an American university president, to nominate two members of his university to go to the conference."

The conference was conducted on three themes:

-Objectives in training of university teachers
-Content of the teacher training courses
-Methods used in training teachers

"Three keynote addresses were given," Evens explained, "and then the conference broke up into small working groups where people who had a particular interest in something gave papers.

"Conference don't to anything," Evens said. "They enable people to get together and talk, and they may inspire or encourage people to do something, but it's people that do things."

Manning addresses SW seminar

Democratic Congressional candidate Thomas Manning will bring his campaign to the UMass campus tonight.

Following the opening of Democratic headquarters in Northampton at 7:30 P.M., the 42-year-old Pittsfield attorney will speak in Pierpont House lounge to students enrolled in Project 10's Political Campaigns Seminar.

Seminar instructor Kenneth Mosakowski invited Manning to address the group as part of a gesture of Democratic Party unity. Manning defeated Mosakowski for the Democratic nomination for U.S. Congress in last September's primary election.

Later in the evening, Manning will address the regular monthly meeting of the Amherst Democratic Town Committee in the Board Room of Amherst Town Hall.

The public is invited to attend.

Discussion of French education aired

"Tout En Francais" will presend a round table today disucssion concerning the reforms in the French educational system instituted under the Minister of Education Edgar Faure, who took office after the revolt of 1968.

The discussion was originally taped last May following the elections in France, and those taking part were M. and Mme. Jean Pivasset, two native French educators who were in Amherst last year, as well as Professors Braude and Carre of the French-Italian Department. Pivasset was an exchange professor, and Mme. Pivasset is a teacher at a French Lycee.

In addition to examining the reforms in French education and the causes of the revolt, the Pivassets discussed American schools with Professors Braude & Carre. They expressed praise for the American elementary schools, but were critical of the cost of higher education in this country. This program may be heard at the regular time for "TOUT EN FRANCAIS", 6:30 over WFCR-FM (88.5). "TOUT EN FRANCAIS" is broadcast each Tuesday and Thursday, same time, same station.

Disagrees with Boston busing order

Ford defends proposed income tax surcharge

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford defended his proposed income tax surcharge yesterday as costing middle-income Americans only pennies a day, and predicted it would help bring a "meaningful reduction" in the rate of inflation by early next year.

Responding to criticism from both Democrats and Republicans in Congress that his request for a one-year, 5 per cent surtax was too harsh and inequitable, Ford told a news conference the carefully considered proposal would affect only 28 per cent of all individual taxpayers and would not cut significantly into their buying power.

Nor, he said, would it be extended beyond the calendar year 1975. If Congress approves his legislative program, unveiled Tuesday at a joint session of the House and Senate, and if Americans cooperate voluntarily, his anti-inflation proposals "will work," he said.

On other subjects, the President:

—Deplored the violence in Boston over court-ordered busing, said he disagreed with the court's decision, but added it was of "maximum importance" for Boston citizens to obey the law. He said he had received no request for federal intervention.

—Indicated he would not ask Congress to restore drastically reduced funds in his request for $850,000 in transition expenses for former President Richard M. Nixon. He said he would not agree that the House reduction to $200,000 was "stingy and punitive," but would reserve judgment until the final bill reaches his desk.

—Disagreed with Treasury Secretary William E. Simon's testimony earlier Wednesday opposing eventual elimination of the oil depletion allowance as contained in a tax reform bill before the House Ways and Means Committee. Ford said he favored a phase-out of the controversial tax write-off for oil companies.

Judge orders police

BOSTON [AP] — A federal judge yesterday ordered Mayor Kevin H. White to call in police from surrounding towns and state to quell disturbances resulting from integration in Boston schools.

If that does not work, U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. said White should ask the governor to call up the National Guard. But he declined to call in U.S. marshals.

White had asked Garrity to call in at least 125 U.S. marshals.

Senate cuts funds

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Defying President Ford's veto threat, the Senate yesterday voted to ban military assistance to Turkey.

By 62 to 16, the Senate approved and sent to the White House legislation which would bar U.S. arms aid to Turkey until Ford reports "substantial progress" has been made toward a settlement on Cyprus.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield promptly offered a joint resolution which would prevent the legislation from taking effect until Dec. 15.

Kissinger arrives

CAIRO [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry Kissinger arrived yesterday in Egypt seeking progress toward peace in the Middle East and lower oil prices for the rest of the world.

"President Ford is committed to continuing the efforts the United States has made for peace in the Middle East", Kissinger said on arriving in Cairo after an overnight flight from Washington. "I'll talk to my friends here in a spirit of making constructive progress."

Hostages released

SANTO DOMINCO [UPI] — Seven hostages held for 13 days in the Venezuelan consulate were freed last night by their guerrilla captors who left immediately for Las Americas Airport to be flown to asylum in Panama.

The hostages, several, them shouting and sobbing, were greeted by family and friends outside the building.

Cuba to release

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Cuban government said yesterday it would release four American prisoners, including a woman, as a "goodwill gesture" to two U.S. senators who visited Havana 10 days ago.

A Cuban Foreign Office statement, relayed through the Czech Embassy here, stressed that the move was not to be construed as a friendly gesture to the U.S. government-only to the senators themselves.

The action followed a visit to Cuba by Sens. Clairborne Pell, D-R.I., and Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., and came amid growing indications the United States is ready to reassess its attitude toward the Communist government in Cuba.

The trials of being a foreigner in your own land

By LENARD CROWDOG
Spiritual Leader

Trina Bad Heart Bull is a 14 year old Oglala Sioux from Pine Ridge Reservation, South Dakota. Although Trina is only in junior high school, she has full responsibility for her younger sisters and brother, April, Julie and Jami. Trina also cares for Henry, her 17 year old brother; her brother Vincent, 20, is perpetually in and out of jails in western South Dakota on minor charges. Trina's mother, Sarah, is in the South Dakota penitentiary, serving a 1-5 year sentence.

Sarah Bad Heart Bull is the mother of eight children, and separated from her husband. She and her children have lived on welfare because Sarah can't get a job which would support them: when Sarah was 14 years old she had to drop out of school because her mother died, leaving Sarah with the responsibility of caring for her seven younger brothers and sisters. When I first met Sarah, she and five of her children were living in a room in a motel virtually destroyed by the Rapid City flood. It had one double bed, a bathroom and no kitchen facilities. Sarah, like many Indian people in the area, was trying to get into the government low income housing but had been waiting over a year without response. As a legal worker with the Wounded Knee Legal Defense-Offense Committee, I met Sarah because we were representing her in a case in which she faced criminal charges.

Two years ago, Sarah's oldest son, Wesley, 21, was stabbed to death by a white man. Sarah and others, including American Indian Movement (AIM) members, went to Custer on February 6, 1973, to protest the lenient way in which Wesley's murderer was being treated. (He was charged with second degree manslaughter although Trina and three other people witnessed the stabbing). Wesley's murder was not the first time that a white person received minor charges or none at all for the murder of an Indian, and therefore 300 Indian people went to protest the dual system of justice. A fight broke out between heavily armed state and local police and the Indian protestors, resulting in personal injuries, a Chamber of Commerce building being burned, a courthouse being set fire, and two police cars being trashed, as well as 22 Indian people being indicted, including Sarah herself. Sarah, who was refused entrance to a meeting with the State's Attorney, was indicted for riot where arson was committed, and given higher bond and faced more time in prison, than the murderer of her son.

Eleven months later, when Sarah's second son was 21, he was shot to death by a white man with a high powered gun. Trina called me up to ask me to tell Henry, who was in a training school, and Vincent, who was in the penitentiary, that their second brother had been murdered: her mother could not afford the phone call. Because of the pressure put on officials by AIM, a man presently awaits trial for first degree murder for this case.

Although William Janklow, the prosecutor of the "Custer cases" as Sarah's and the others are called, told me that he thought perhaps Sarah had suffered enough by the murder of her two sons, the State evidently decided to punish her further on April 22, with two friends, Bob High Eagle & Ken Dahl, who had gone with her to Custer, Sarah started trial in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, because even the prosecution and the judge agreed that it was impossible for them to receive a fair trial near Custer. The trial was a mockery of the system of justice. Judge Bottum jailed Ramon Roubideaux, Indian attorney when he announced that he could not proceed with trial because it would deny his clients their Constitutional rights. As a result, Indian defendants and spectators refused to stand for the Judge and were attacked in the courtroom by 25 riot-equipped Tactical Squad police. The trial was then moved to the Civil Defense building where no spectators were allowed and the defendants and legal workers were thoroughly searched before court.

After such a sham of the legal system, it is not surprising that 12 white middle-class people would convict Sarah, Bob and Ken. Nor is it surprising that Judge Bottum would sentence Sarah to 1-5 years in a penitentiary, and Bob and Ken to 5-7. He then refused to grant the defendants a bond pending appeal, citing no good reasons at all, and gave Sarah only 24 hours in which to find adequate care and housing for her six living children. The defense has appealed to a federal judge to get Sarah, Bob and Ken out of prison because of the very strong grounds for appeal.

In the meantime however, while the murderer of her son is walking free (he was acquited after the protest), Sarah Bad Heart Bull is in prison and her children are trying desperately to survive. The Wounded Knee Legal Defense has done everything in its power to help the Bad Heart Bull children: A guardian for the children was found so that they would not have to be split up into separate foster homes. This was the decision of Sarah and her children who feel that it is most important that they stay together. They are strong beautiful kids, but need support. A special fund has been set up for their needs and money should be sent to BAD HEART BULLS c-o Wounded Knee Legal Defense, P.O. Box 80931, Lincoln, Neb. 68501. The Bad Heart Bull story is not a unique one, it is only one instance of the tragedy that Indian people suffer in this country. If you would be interested in supporting the struggle of Indian people, please contact me at 5-2531.

Gail Sullivan has worked with the Wounded Knee Legal Defense-Offense Committee for a year.

Letters to the editor

Asian American identity

To the Editor:

The Asian-American is having an identity crisis--not that we do not know who we are, but the university community doesn't know that Americans of Asian descent exist.

I am not writing to complain, but to say this lack of knowledge has a bad effect on the Asian-American Student Association. Last May, we did get to be a RSO group, but only after we explained how Asian-Americans could not have their needs met by joining FOREIGN Asian groups like the Chinese Student Association or the Japan-America Club. We do join the foreign Asian groups behind the scenes for campus cultural events, but our problems are our own--those of an unknown minority in the United States.

On Sept. 26, I went to the Student Senate Office to check on the possibility of funding for the AASA, but no one on the finance committee was in. However, the guy I asked about the committee suggested the International Programs Office as an alternative source of funding. Only we are not an international group and our interests are not international. We have enough problems trying to tell the community who and what we are!!!

To the Editor:

We [myself and the Salt staff] couldn't agree more, and your letter makes yet another point for us in that public correction of such blunders is important. And speaking of ... ahem, blunders we would also like to point out that our original letter accused the Collegian staff and not the entire university of being the abovementioned wasteland; our letter was subjected to mutation of an editorial nature.

An obvious need for gun control

To the Editor:

It was pleasing to see the letter from Steven Sacks upbraiding you for your misleading headline about a "gunhaters" meeting, rather than a gun control debate.

I feel you should also be sharply reprehended for the "cartoon" placed immediately below the initial gun control article, which depicts some kind of older generation-pinball-racket-hood blasting blood-spattering holes through a poor student with what appears to be a handgun. This kind of suggestive media manipulation is certainly misleading and prejudicial...more than that, it is deplorable for any kind of "newspaper", even the Collegian. I'm surprised Steven Sacks objected only to the headline, if he is truly interested in clearing up apparent prejudice.

Getting into SGA

To the Editor:

Shall I get involved in Student Government? Student government is changing, questions concerning affirmative action, student rights, etc, are being asked and will be dealt with. People in the student government now are in a kind of turmoil in trying to meet the needs of all students on the campus especially looking at those subtle problems surrounding a renewal and more solid commitment to stop being part of the oppressing system which surrounds all of us. Then, when a person working very hard with her-himself to create an inner change, as well as change within the total "system", finds that people in the community appear no longer concerned it is, to say the least, disheartening.

The student government does crave new blood, it will demand every ounce of blood a person is willing to give. Getting involved means a real commitment to setting the tone for a different kind of community where people can have the chance to really be free. With the power of $992,000. behind student government; energy, ideas and a commitment to change are necessary to be effective.

Student government is also trying to revamp old mechanisms and create new mechanisms for more new student control over their own lives. So it is a challenge to both the persons physical and moral spirit to be a part of setting these new directions. Everyone in the student government is a student and in that, there is a tie between us all. Asking the question again, should I get involved in student government, the only possible answer is "YES".

No sachal

In Yiddish it's called sachal. I can't give you its verbatum definition because the word loses a lot in the translation. But if you put your finger to your temple, somewhere in the void between your ears lies your sachal. And there's very little sachal around here.

In other words, a lot of things around here don't make any sense. (Neither will this but read on, it's good for a chuckle.)

For instance, at 11:30 in the morning, the gates to that infamous Wall of Blue open. At that time all you have to do is walk in, grab a table, and head for the bar. Very simple. But at 2:15 in the afternoon things change. You just can't waltz in any longer. You have to identify yourself. You have to show your Top of the Campus Card, which is no big deal, but it doesn't make any sense. At lunch we can get as bombed as we want. But after that 1:25 class finally gets over, we can't even get a beer. What happens at 2:15? Do we all turn into pumpkins? The person with the Cinderella complex who reasoned that one loses their identity that was once held earlier in the day, had very little sachal.

Or check cashing around here. For one thin dime you can cash up to $25 worth of checks in the Student Union. But for free you can cash a check for as much as $100 in the Bursar's office in Whitmore. Maybe the person who figured that one out had such little sachal that he-she-it thought that if anyone had as much as $100 in checks then they deserve it cashed for free. Besides, what teller would want to go through the hassle of handing over $99.90? Still, what applies to one place should apply to another.

The person(s) who designed some of the architectual edifices that sporadically sprout from the ground around here definitely had no sachal at all.

To the person(s) who force men and women to live in dormitories to the point to where they are so overcrowded that some students have to live in the Campus Center Hotel, what little sachal you must have, you probably sit on.

And to the person(s) who designed the Food Ecology Program in the Dining Commons. If you had any sachal at all you would have planned meals that were edible enough to be eaten and not to be thrown out.

And what about the little cubby holes in the Campus Center Store? So there'll be "no question of ownership" we're supposed to leave all of our valuables before purchasing anything from the store. The individual who was so paranoid that the store was going to get ripped off, neglected to realize that the students, too, may get ripped off. So where's that person's sachal?

Now some of you may ask, so what if UMass has no sachal? It's only preparing us for the outside world.

And anyone who takes me seriously has no fucking sachal at all.

Joyce Kosofsky is a Collegian Columnist

Time to earn a degree

For many years the word at UMass has been growth. We planned our courses depending on growth; we designed our new programs with growth in mind; we hired new faculty with growth as a basic assumption. Last week President Wood echoed the feelings of this year in announcing that the period of growth had ended.

We now face a severe challenge in the coming years. We must define and execute our goals with no-growth as a primary assumption. We have to decide what there is at UMass in the way of programs that is worth supporting and what in the age of belt-tightening must go.

The time is now to begin the process of maximizing our potential and trying to remain a fine university.

At the root of a high quality university is a high regard for academic excellence. This implies a recognition of many of our outstanding faculty. Chancellor Bromery by his Chancellor's Lecture Series is sounding an inspirational beginning to this process. It also includes a recognition of many of our outstanding students. We must not only provide for them an atmosphere which is condusive to academic and personal development but must also make the environment such that those that are not serious of purpose in regard to their being here will not last.

In this age of constraint we must begin to define once more what this university is here for, deciding simply what are not acceptable types of behavior in an academic institution and committing the Dean's office to dealing with those who engage in such behaviors. We deal here with a wide variety of students but an interest in academic pursuits must be common to all of us. We must build a dedicated faculty and student body by eliminating those who do not belong here.

Explicit as well in Wood's message was the fact that the no-growth situation will most effect "traditional academic" programs by design. More development is needed, he feels, for non-traditional programs. I disagree.

Traditional programs form the core of any great university. It is with the influx of poor quality, non-traditional programs that this university will die. The mandate as I see it is for a return to traditional course work which leads to a degree which is both earned and valuable. It is with non-traditional programs that the average cum has soared while the academic quality of our students has declined.

There exists a current quest for relevancy. For most of us, the relevancy of our college years is what that experience will get us later. Whether President Wood likes it or not we are judged on traditional values of ability to communicate in both written and oral form and to perform given mental functions with facility. The demands are for competance not absolute happiness for every student.

An end must finally come to the flirtation we have had with experimental programs. We must concentrate our efforts in high quality programs. Traditional programs must not be sacrificed. We are commissioned as a university to educate not to entertain. This is an acadėmic institution not a playground.

America reverting to prejudice

By ANTHONY BARNES

What has happened in the wake of Watergate? Are we progressing? Or are we reverting back to where we were 10 years ago?

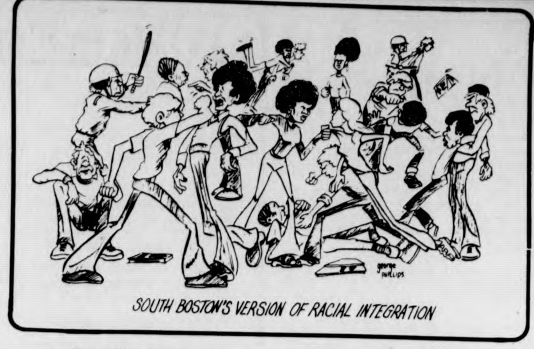
It is with some sadness that the events of the last few weeks had to be so viciously impaled into all of our systems. It seemed as though we were trying, in our consciencious minds to forget racism and all of it's destructive and deadly proteges. It seemed that in the watergate affair, the rich, the poor, the Black, the white, the liberal, the conservative, the left-wing and the right-wing all had a common denominator in which to vent our angered frustration for a time. But for know, humbled and humiliated by the culmination of their many treacherous forays, the main figures in the scandal are gone, destined to vanish into obscure humiliation.

But now that familiar kind of sadness that only racism can bring has returned once again from it's solitude. This racism has returned in a form that at one time was a welcomed and familiar sight to us all. Busing. Yes busing has presented itself as the newest outlet for the venting of racist frustrations.

Times were in the past that the sight of the bright yellow school bus loaded withchildren on their way to or from school brought smiles and waves from occasional passers by. It filled the air with peacefulness, a sense of tranquility. Now these buses, filled with children of a different persuasion bring things like bricks, bottles, the tactical police, the Ku Klux Klan, the American Nazi Party, demonstrations, boycotts, injuries, arrests and perhaps federal troops.

It is a fact, that with the Watergate affair having reached it's logical conclusion, American society has once more returned to it's traditional forms of behavior. And once again it is at the expense of Black people.

Anthony Barnes is a Collegian Commentator.



SOUTH BOSTON'S VERSION OF RACIAL INTEGRATION

A letter to Southie

By SHERWOOD THOMPSON

"Organized violence is as American as Apple Pie."

The illegal discrimination and violent mob attacks upon innocent Black children, as carried out by the White community aggressors in South Boston, is a very common and popular form of dialect, which is practiced by American bigots.

Due to their unreasonable and violent tactics which cause pain and human suffering to come to Black children, Men and Women, it has become immediately important to call to battle, (in the most intelligent way), the forces in the Black community, in order to ensure and to protect the lives, liberty and educational rights of Boston's Black school children.

This call for unity can be considered a means of communicating (in an understandable way), with the opposing forces. This need to communicate with the residents of South Boston is obviously necessary, due to the misunderstanding and assumptions that are derived by their actions and attitudes as displayed in their savage, uncivilized and brutal acts of violence.

It is imperative as Black people, that we understand and recognize the language of the oppressor. By understanding the language spoken by residents of South Boston, then and only then will the Black community be able to speak the same language, in order to reach a meaningful understanding alone with a fair exchange of intentions.

As Black people, we should defend ourselves against the continuous violence that is waged against us. The government has proven inefficient and biased when dealing with confrontation among the races. The institutional organizations that act as social service groups, can only exercise limited retaliation, due to the fears of budget cuts and personal reputations. This mean, that as Black people, we must totally determine our own destiny, safety and well being. No one will do this for us.

To regain our prestigious birth rights - to gain our self-respect and to gain the respect of others, we must stand tall, remain brave and always be ready to defend our right to liberty and our freedom of movement. If we let one incident (such as the occurences in South Boston), prevent us from receiving our equal share in life, then our inevitable freedom will surely be threatened.

The actions of South Boston residents have been one of intimidation and brutal violence.

Education as defined in this country, is a right of all and not the privilege of a select few. Therefore, a call to protest, against discrimination and brutal violence is extended to every Man, and Woman, who feel that human rights must be protected. We can't remain idle, while these racist and blood thirsty mobsters commit acts of illegal discrimination against Black and Third World people.

Sherwood Thompson is Black Affairs Editor of the Collegian.

Editorial Points.....

So Chancellor Bromery has decided to sponsor his own lecture series. Not surprising, he probably couldn't find a decent lecture among courses students have to take either.

Of course the Chancellor has long been aware of the quality of faculty oratory. He's been to Faculty Senate meetings.

Isn't it great to know that President Ford is going to stop inflation?

It makes one wonder if anyone has ever considered stopping over consumption. They seem to have found the answer to that in the Dining Commons, at least.

Police states are evil wherever they exist, but one has to wonder where the people of South Boston were four years ago when it was only hippies and blacks getting their heads busted.

Maybe it's just that some people think a free country is where the proper people are oppressed and decent citizens are allowed to take sniper shots at the Boston Globe.

American definition of a car that combines size, economy, and price: Too big on the outside, too small on the inside, gets 17.4 miles per gallon on the highway with Martha Mitchell driving, and costs $4,200 and your firstborn.

And of course the mileage test was fixed.

Complaint of the week, overheard from Collegian Sports staff: "I'm not sitting in the press box at the next football game, we only got one free roast beef sandwich last time." Ain't it a tough life?

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Thursday, October 10

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A good day for furthering inventions or improvements on earlier inventions. There may be some new technical knowledge for you to learn.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — There is much to be said for a change in lifestyle but this may not be the day to say it. Wait for a more auspicious time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Nothing ventured, nothing gained — but this is not the day to prove it. You would be wise to keep plans for yourself for the time being.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Don't wait to begin to put new ideas into production. If you do, you may pass the time when the greatest gain is to be made.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — There should be little risk involved in changes made today, even though they may involve basic areas of your lifestyle. Consult a close friend.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — This is a good time to begin to make plans for change on the home front. Take no action, however, until plans have been approved.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Special events may interfere with your plans for the day. Even so, you will probably be able to attain your goals—by dint of special pleading.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Protect your personal interests from those changes which time has wrought upon your business interests. Friendships must be guarded.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — An opportunity to increase your money-making powers may appear greater than it is. Take care not to be taken in by what turn out to be exaggerations.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Begin at once to bring your affairs in line with your financial powers. If you ignore your budget too often, you are bound for trouble.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — An evening social event may seem out of place when you consider the day as a whole. Take things one at a time, however, and enjoy each to the full.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — This is a good time for executing plans for a mild reformation on the home front. Children may cause you more than usual concern toward evening.

Team Canada's rooms bugged

TORONTO [UPI] - Team Canada Goaltender Gerry Cheevers says several Canadian players had their hotel rooms bugged in Moscow during the Russia-Canada eight-game hockey series.

Some of our players found bugs in their rooms, and I don't mean cockroaches that were in practically every room in our hotel," Cheevers was quoted as saying Wednesday by the Toronto star.

"The Russians bugged some of the rooms with listening devices, probably to find out our strategy and how we should play them."

Cheevers flew here ahead of his teammates and immediately took off for Cleveland to be with his wife, whose father died during the series. His teammates were to arrive later Wednesday afternoon aboard a charter flight at Toronto International Airport.

Cheevers said he discovered a small transmitter in the dresser drawer of his room.

The Canadians decided to hold a strategy meeting in a room on the 16th floor of the Russija Hotel. Coach Bill Harris noted during the meeting the Russians were playing wide and there were opportunities for the Canadians to attack down the middle.

Cheevers said when the Canadians skated out for the game, there was suddenly a Russian player guarding the middle territory.

Moses Malone shines in Stars' exhibition

By DAVE CLEMENS
Associated Press Writer

SALT LAKE CITY [AP] - Moses Malone, the 19-year-old high school basketball star turned pro, looks as extensive in talent and size as he is expensive.

That's the word from his coach and teammates on the Utah Stars of the American Basketball Association. The Stars signed Malone in August to a contract variously reported at $1 million to $3 million, snatching the Petersburg, Va., product from the University of Maryland.

In the Stars' first four pre-season games, the baby-faced, 6-foot-11 Malone is off to a good start as only the second player ever drafted out of high school by the pros.

Malone scored 74 points and pulled in 51 rebounds in the four games, both club highs.

Bigtime hockey in Yancon

Could you imagine Chuck Fairbanks and Dan Devine giving up their coaching and front office positions with the Patriots and the Packers so that they could accept coaching jobs at Maine and URI? Well the hockey equivalent of such bizzare moves could come about.

Jack Kelly, 3 time New England coach of the year and currently general manager of the N.E. Whalers, is rumored on his way to Orono after this season. Maine plans to construct a 5000 seat arena and award it's first athletic scholarships, 10 to the hockey program.

At Kingston, URI athletic director Maurice Zarchen has expressed an interest in Ned Harkness, as the man he wants for URI's first head hockey coach. Harkness was the architect of national championship hockey teams at RPI and Cornell before a brief tenure as coach and general manager of the Detroit Red Wings.

URI will begin construction on a $3.5 million, 5000 seat facility in March. They plan to field a Division II team in 75-76, then move as quickly as possible into Division I. Rhode Island, Massachusetts and the eastern canadian provinces will be their chief recruiting territories.

Maine and Rhode Island are following the example of our Yancon cousins, New Hampshire and Vermont. Both UNH and Vermont built moderately priced arenas in 1965, and began recruiting Massachusetts and Canadian-bred hockey players. New Hampshire was ranked No. 2 in the country last year. Vermont was a Division I powerhouse, and participated in the first NIT hockey tournament in Minnesota.

Well what about those potent Yancon standard bearers, UConn and UMass. In the last 15 years 12 Keany Trophies, emblematic of conference supremacy in all athletics, have been theirs. How did they miss the boat in this shift to a "big time" approach to a sport by one of the most conservative conferences in the country.

UMass and UConn struggled with the three northern conference schools to ease restrictions on scholarships, recruiting, and level of competition throughout the 60's. Both schools threatened to withdraw from the conference. The northern conference schools let up on their demands in 1968. Each school was allowed to seek it's own level of competition. UConn and UMass put their money into football programs. Vermont and New Hampshire put their's into hockey, the only money making sport unhampered by conference commitments, schedule and restrictions.

Any collegiate coach will tell you that the key word in recruiting is "facility." UConn has a semi-enclosed rink that ensures loose fitting jocks on cold winter nights. UMass continues to make great strides in their hockey operation. Hockey Coach Jack Canniff's recruiting job has been made easier in the last 8 years.

"We were honest with the kids we were recruiting," said ex-coach Steve Kosakowski after retiring in 1967. "We told them we use an outdoor rink, you have to bum a ride to get there, and shovel the ice between periods."

Amherst College threw a canvas over the top of Orr Rink, and the players no longer have to shovel the ice between periods.

The athletic department has had a hockey facility planned since 1961. So you can bet one of these days there's going to be one Hell of a facility around here.

Forget the fact that Massachusetts high schools will turn out more potential collegiate hockey players than any other state except Minnesota. Never mind the $13,000 rental fee that goes to the coffers of Amherst College each year. So the state is building a $10 million athletic complex at the Harbor Campus, and a hockey forum right across the expressway at the old "Dump Bowl" site.

Dave Bartley, speaker of the House, has been 99.9 per cent behind us for 3 years now, and one of these days......

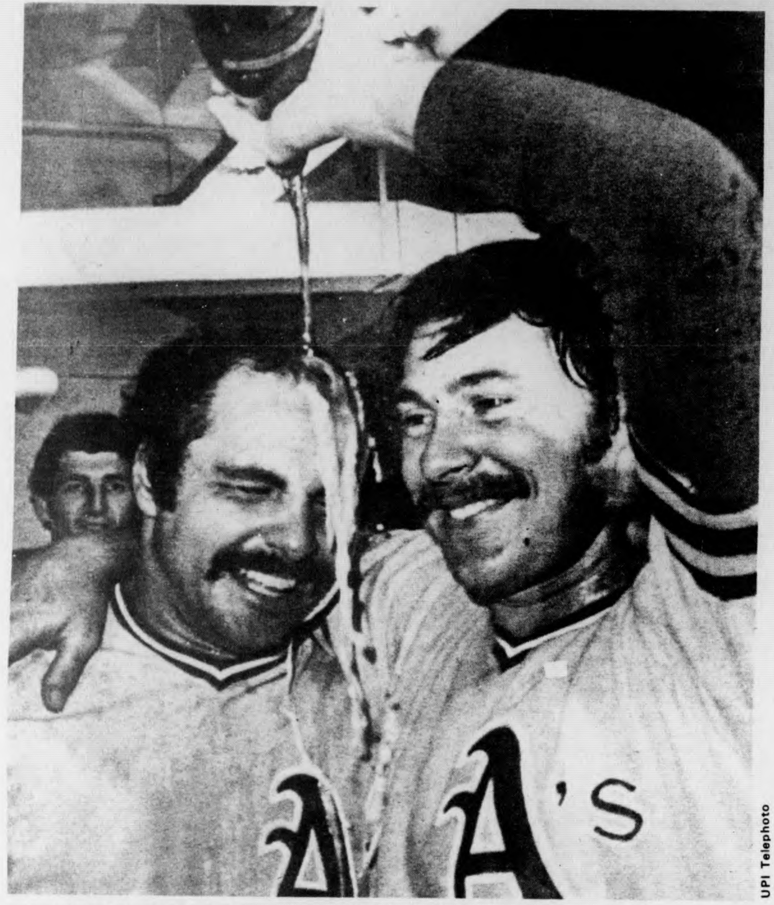
LA-A's: West Coast Series



UPI Telephoto

Gene Tenace of the Oakland A's applies hair restorer to teammate Sal Bando (L). A's edged Orioles 2-1, yesterday, to take the series 3-1 and move on to the World Series against L.A. It could be a hair raising experience.

Oakland wins, 2-1; 3rd flag in row

BALTIMORE [UPI] — The Oakland A's were presented with their third consecutive American League pennant as a "gift" Wednesday when they made only one hit but beat the Baltimore Orioles, 2-1, in the flag-clinching fourth game of the playoffs.

The A's Santa Claus in a Baltimore uniform was pitcher Mike Cuellar who was wild high, low, inside and outside from the start of the game, walked a record nine batters without allowing a hit in 4 2-3 innings and handed Oakland its first run by walking four consecutive batters in the fifth inning.

The A's, meanwhile, continued to make a mockery of Baltimore bats as Jim Hunter and Rollie Fingers combined in a five-hitter. Hunter shut out the Orioles for seven innings, extending the Orioles' streak of consecutive scoreless innings to 29. Fingers made it 30 in a row in the eighth before yielding a run in Baltimore's last-ditch ninth-inning rally.

The A's scored their second run of the game on their only hit — a double high off the left field bleachers by Reggie Jackson in the seventh inning.

But it was Cuellar's wildness which was the decisive factor in the game and sent the A's on their way to a possible third consecutive world championship.

Cuellar, who beat the A's in the first game of this series, couldn't control his stuff from his earliest pitches. He walked Bando, Jackson and Joe Rudi with two out in the first inning before retiring Gene Tenace on a foul pop. He walked another batter in both the second and third innings and then came apart in the crucial fifth.

The season was over for the Orioles and the A's had little matters like a pennant-winning party and a third straight world series in their future.

Dodgers trounce Bucs, 12-1; first pennant since '66

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Steve Garvey lashed a pair of two-run homers and righthander Don Sutton pitched a three-hitter for eight innings for his 11th straight win Wednesday to give the pennant-starved Los Angeles Dodgers their first National League title in eight seasons with a 12-1 romp over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Beaten 7-0 by the Pirates Tuesday, the Dodgers won the NL best-of-five playoff series three games to one to join the Oakland A's in the World Series, which opens here Saturday and Sunday.

Garvey, a premier candidate for the National League MVP award, gave the Dodgers a 3-0 lead by hitting a 3-1 Jerry Reuss pitch to the opposite field on a line drive over the right centerfield wall in the third inning.

With Sutton almost unhittable on the mound, the Dodger first baseman provided Los Angeles with an insurmountable 5-0 lead in the fifth by slamming a Ken Brett fastball into the leftfield corner stands.

The Dodgers, who last appeared in the World Series in 1966, got their second superlative performance in the series from Sutton, a 29-year-old health food addict who shut out the Pirates 3-0 on four singles at Pittsburgh Saturday.

When he came to bat in the sixth and seventh innings, Sutton got standing ovations from the Dodger Stadium throng of 54,424. In the seventh, Sutton responded with an RBI single that put the Dodgers in front, 9-1.

Sutton, who was tagged by Willie Stargell for a seventh-inning home run, now has won 15 out of 16 decisions since July 25, eight days after the Dodgers lost 13-game winner Tommy John with an elbow injury.

The Dodgers' ace $114,000 righthander pitched the Dodgers' NL west - clinching pennant at Houston Oct. 1.

Jim Wynn, who hit 32 homers and drove in 108 runs during the regular season, doubled in Davey Lopes, who walked and stole second, with one out in the first inning for the Dodgers' first run.

Garvey, who also had a pair of singles for four hits in five trips and scored four runs, homered off Reuss with two out in the third.

Cowens breaks foot, out 8 weeks

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Celtics learned Tuesday they will have to play the first 7-8 weeks of their NBA title defense without center Dave Cowens.

Cowens, a fifth year pro from Florida State, fractured a bone in his right foot Tuesday night in the third period of an exhibition game against the Milwaukee Bucks at New York.

Team physician Dr. Thomas Silva, said the 6-10 Cowens suffered "an undisplaced fracture of the matatarsal bone" behind the big toe. "He should be able to play by the end of November," said Dr. Silva after examining Cowens with two specialists.

Cowens, playing his first exhibition game since bruising the arch of the same foot 11 days earlier, suffered the injury while pivoting in order to cover Milwaukee's Cornell Warner.

"I should only have played a little I guess," said Cowens after leaving the game. "I had put a lot of pressure on it before that but something happened when I pushed off it real hard."

Dr. Silva placed Cowens in a support bandage and said the center should use crutches for two weeks.

Cowens' rival in the 1974 NBA playoffs, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, also will mill the opening portion of the season. The biggest buck received a scratch on the eye and then broke his hand on a basket support last week in an exhibition game against Boston. He still is in the hospital.

Cowens loss spells new life for fourth year pro Jim Ard, a former ABA player. Ard was to be cut before the Oct. 18 opener against the Buffalo Braves at Boston Garden, but he will remain with the team.

Conversations with...

What follows is a hypothetical anecdote of a sort, relating a very real dilemma that exists right here. It is a story in its abridged form about a conversation between a visitor to our city and one of our own beloved Minutemen.

Minuteman: Well, here we are. This is UMass.

Visitor: Very nice place you have here. Say, what is that tall building over there?

MM: Which one are you talking about? As you can see there are so many tall buildings here some airlines are rerouting their flights.

V: I mean that one over there, the one that looks like a giant...well you know the one I mean. That one there, the big brown one.

MM: Oh, that one. That's our new library, nice isn't it.

V: Not bad, not bad. Wow, what are those two space age looking ones over there. They look straight out of War of the Worlds.

MM: Those are the graduate research towers, pretty nice structures huh?

V: Yes, quite nice. What is that one over there, my god it looks like the designer or the builder or both were high on drugs when they did that?

MM: That's our brand new Fine Arts Center. It isn't even open yet, but they're planning on it to be open probably next semester.

V: God, that is a strange looking building. Say, what are those five tall buildings off in the distance down there.

MM: Oh, those are our presidential towers. That whole complex down there is a residential area that is one of the most densely populated for its size in the world.

V: Very impressive, hey let me guess what that one over there is. It looks like a fortress of some kind, maybe a place to go in case of nuclear attack?

MM: No, no, actually that is the "Cage" and although the name sounds like a fortress, it really is where our teams play various sports such as basketball, track, gymnastics, and wrestling.

V: No kidding? It sure doesn't look it.

MM: Well, it has a very fine atmosphere inside. I mean you really can get into the dust and the cold in the winter after awhile.

V: So, where are the rest of the athletic facilities?

MM: Well, there is Boyden gymnasium down there with a pool, a lot of basketball courts, offices, weight rooms and locker rooms. And there is the complex on the other side of campus called WOPE or NOPE or something like that which has a lot of the same but is smaller.

V: Oh, I see. But is seems that something is missing but I can't think of what. Let me see...oh yes, what about a rink, you know, ice skating facilities and the like.

MM: Well, they are a few miles down that main street over there. You see we don't have our own facility so Amherst College is nice enough to let us use theirs.

V: Yes, that is very nice of them, but it sure is strange that a school of this size doesn't have its own facility of the type that I've seen at many other places that are smaller than this place. You know the type of places I mean that can accomodate a lot of the sports you mentioned and also conferences, concerts, lectures, and theatre productions.

MM: You know that I feel the same exact way as you. It is very strange that a place of this size, stature, and prestige doesn't have a place like that. I've heard that there have been plans brewing for a long time but it seems that nothing has come of it.

V: Well I guess it is up to the people that pay for this place to decide that. If the people want something bad enought that is within reasonable boundaries of financial and physical realism I should thing that they would be able to get it. Don't you?

MM: It sure seems that way.

V: I thought that that was how things worked at a place of this type.

MM: I did too, but after this conversation now I am not so sure.

Angela: Three views

Definitions of Freedom

by Frederic C. Weiss

At the 2:30 press conference in the Suffolk Room, we were told that Angela Davis was about to arrive. Photographers were set in position, ready for the continuous "buzz" that only a room full of photographers snapping shots madly can provide.

When Angela Davis walked into the room, her presence seemed to catch most of us by surprise. Smiling, she sat down at the head of the table and said with what seemed to be a real sense of warmth, "shall we begin?"

I had been reading about her since my high school days, and was looking forward to hear her speak, and ask her a few questions. I remembered the picture of Angela smiling outside the courthouse after her acquital in California a few years back. I remembered the long arguments over dinner at my best friend's house, arguing whether she was guilty or innocent; countering their charges of her "obvious guilt", with what I felt was her right for a fair trial. While I was never conciously hoping that she would be innocent, for some reason when she was found to be innocent, I was quite pleased.

All these memories converged within three seconds, as Davis walked into the room, and then I realized that she was not a memory, but a reality. As she spoke I was impressed by her cool; by her sense of poise within the environment that she was set. As she began to speak on the needs for socialism and the fight against racism, I found myself jotting down notes at a furious pace. In her slow forceful delivery, there was an aura that her words were important, and I was reacting to her intensity, by trying to get it all down on paper.

But when it was over, when the press conference, and the main speech, and the post-speech reception had ended, I left feeling disappointed, disillusioned, and a bit angry inside. I felt as if the people who listened to Angela Davis had been had. Her speech was full of distortion, misrepresentation and innuendo. Another night, another time, it could have been Joe McCarthy. Her presentation had all the characteristics of a demagogue: energy and charisma, mixed with insinuation and misrepresentation. Angela Davis is probably a very intelligent person: You don't go through Brandeis with honors, and teach Philosophy with Marcuse at UCLA without a lot of smarts. But from Davis' presentation, you'd have to guess that Davis was either very naive, or knowingly misleading the audience. Too many of her statements were contradictory for there to be any other possibility.

This story is not a knock on socialism. There are quite a few things in the socialist program that could prove to be a definite improvement over what we now have in this country. Yet how could Angela Davis put down this country for its "monopolistic capitalism" and oppressive system of justice, and then say that the Soviet Union is an example of a great "Socialist nation"

Angela: Honesty or innuendo?

Socialism is more than just having the government take over the mode of production. But Davis could never come to any real conclusion on just what socialism was. When she mentioned the merits of the Soviet Union, she spent fifteen minutes describing how woman's liberation has thrived there. However, there was not a single word mentioned about Solzhenitsyn. Not a word about the Stalin purges.

Praising the merits of socialism, Davis spoke of free health care, full employment, and free child care centers. However after the evening reception following her speech, when asked about why she didn't mention countries like Sweden and Denmark, she responded, "They're not socialist countries. The government doesn't control the modes of production."

Too often, Angela Davis used "facts" to back up her arguments that just weren't true. Inflation is a real problem these days. To assert, however that it is simply a product of the capitalist society boarders on absurdity. Davis said that she spent fifty dollars on food for one week, and she "doesn't even eat meat". She condemned the rising prices throughout the western nations. What Davis didn't add, but probably knew, is that the Soviet Union is plagued by an inflation problem every bit as bad as that of the United States.

In Monday's New York Times, there was a front page story explaining the inflation problem within the Soviet Union. If Davis feels that her fifty dollar a week food budget is outrageous (and if it is that high for two people, she must be eating caviar and drinking some fine wine) she should be more aware of the Soviet situation (as she claims to be because "I lived there, have you?"). The Times told of how a family of four, with both parents working, was pulling in the equivalent of 400 dollars a week, and spending three quarters of that for food.

Perhaps Davis didn't mention the problem of inflation because, according to the Soviet press, there is no inflation in the Soviet Union, nor for that matter crime, or oppression. Angela Davis might minimize the Times story by calling it a "bourgoise newspaper". This will do little to dampen the credibility of the paper that broke the story on the CIA in Chile, the My Lai slaughter, and generally gives responsible and accurate coverage.

Angela Davis spoke about imperialism as if it was solely a characteristic of "monopolistic capitalism." She spoke about her trips to Havana and the Soviet Union, but has she ever taken the time to speak to the people of Prague or Warsaw?

She barely mentioned the work of Mao in China, or the fact that both China and the Soviet Union are closer to being at war with each other than with the United States.

The reaction to Angela was mixed. Many people who I have spoken to felt very good about her presentation. One friend said that while she did distort facts, "she had to, to wake the people up." A few people came to admire and show their respect for Angela Davis, but left shaking their heads.

What bothered me most was that too many people, intelligent people, did not take the time to challenge some of Davis' assertions. Many that I spoke to excused their lack of "critical thinking", by saying, "What she said made me feel good".

At the press conference, I asked Angela Davis what she thought about students shouting down Dr. William Schockley on various College Campuses last year. Shockley had advocated a theory genetic inferiority, and said that he believed in some cases people should be "encouraged" not to reproduce. Shockley's beliefs are simplified in this column for the sake of brevity. Davis responded to my question by saying "Yes, they sure booted him out didn't they," grinning as she said it. She went on to say that it was okay to stop Shockley from speaking because "genocide wasn't protected by the Constitution".

Now I don't think that there is any truth to Shockley's theory, but to call it "advocating genocide" is an irresponsible generalization. When I challenged her on this, Angela responded, "You know, if the Germans had not been allowed to talk about Jewish inferiority, perhaps they would not have been able to kill so many of them."

I wanted to pursue this question. To tell Angela Davis that the Jews weren't killed by words, but that the demise came when people stopped respecting other peoples right to speak and shouted them down. That the demise came when people just wanted to "feel good" about a speech by a guy with a "funny little mustache", without really listening to what he was saying.

This isn't to say that Angela Davis is a Hitler. The point is that when you are dealing with formulating political solutions, facts are just as important as the level of emotions.

Too often political personalities twist and turn facts and distort reality rather than suggest bold new programs. One might expect more from Angela Davis but in the end the crowd knew less about socialism and more about dynamic demagogary, for Davis' speech was filled with condescion and distortion. Somehow it seemed the crowd deserved more than her hollow words, for Davis might be considered a movement person, but perhaps she should also be considered another politician. From Angela Davis, one might expect more. Honesty remains even more important than the level of applause or the style of the demagogue.

Rebuttal to Fred Weiss

After reading a copy of Mr. Weiss' article on the Angela Davis speech we found ourselves very angry. There are a number of points which we would like to raise in response to Mr. Weiss.

First, we found the article to be absolutely condescending toward Ms. Davis. Mr. Weiss' accusations of naivete are ludicrous considering the breadth of Ms. Davis' experience. If Fred doesn't agree with Angela Davis' concepts of socialism, that is one thing. To act, however, as if he knows, and obviously should know, more about the concept of socialism and socialism in practice is absurd. To our minds this is outright racism and male supremacy. It also is another case of a white male assuming that he is by nature more intelligent and knowledgeable than any Black Woman could ever aspire to be. His statement "Davis is probably a very intelligent person" is a concrete example of this paternalistic attitude.

With regard to the nature of Ms. Davis' lecture, it should be noted that she was invited by the New American Movement to address a student audience about her concrete experiences with and perceptions of socialism in practice. Her lecture was therefore not intended to serve as a discourse on Marxism but rather as a general educational forum on her perceptions of socialism, its practice and potential. The accusations of demogoguery have no foundation. Demagogues have historically addressed themselves to vagueries, not to concrete examples, in order to prove a point. If Mr. Weiss disagrees with Ms. Davis' description of socialism, he is incorrect in basing this criticism on her lack of specificity.

On the question of the Soviet Union there a number of points which need to be addressed. First, Weiss made a number of accusations which he failed to substantiate. He relies on the reader to trust his opinion and on "public knowledge" of "opression" in the Soviet Union.

The one "fact" he does bring up concerning the amount of money which is spent per family on food within the Soviet Union is inadequate. This information was obtained from the N.Y. Times, a paper notorious for its editorial bias against the Soviet Union. Perhaps we should point out to Mr. Weiss that the prices on necessities have not risen in the last 25 years; that there is ncunemployment in the Soviet Union. The fact is that there is no Comsumer Dept. in the Soviet Union, a condition which is difficult to maintain in a situation of inflation. Secondly, Mr. Weiss mentioned the former Soviet author Solshenitsyn. Using this man as a spokesman for justice is ludicrous. He is an avowed tsarist and Anti-Semite. He was also accused by his friends in the so-called "dissident" movement, Roy Medvedevin in particular, of lying in Gulag Archipelago. Thirdly we must bring to Mr. Weiss' attention that Sweden and Denmark do not consider themselves to be socialist. They have had for a number of years social democratic welfare state governments which have failed to place any of the profitable industries under popular control. Again one might ask what these allegedly socialist countries are doing in NATO, and furthermore why they supported U.S. intervention in IndoChina.

Finally we find Mr. Weiss to be highly inaccurate in his analysis of Shockley's potential impact. One must identify Shockley as one of the primary proponents of a pseudo-scientific and blatantly racist theory on the genetic inferiority of Black people. The potential for having Shockley's theory used as a rationale for a genocidal thrust within this country cannot be overlooked. We must learn from the experience of Nazi Germany. Disregard for human dignity and the policy of genocide which ensued did not develop spontaneously, but rather were created and encouraged by a propaganda machine which was sussessful in convincing the German people of the validity of pseudo-scientific doctrines of racial inferiority.

To Paul, Bobbi, Isabel, National Allience, et al:

I ran your piece, but with reservations:

1. You assert Fred Weiss is "another case of a white male assuming that he is by nature more intelligent and knowledgeable than any Black Woman could ever aspire to be." Bullshit. Show me, don't play knee-jerk.

2. The Soviet Union. Public knowledge? It is just getting to be public knowledge that 40 million (40, 000,000) human beings were murdered by the Soviet State. Stalin is No. 1 in the butcher's Top Ten. This isn't New York Times' info (certainly a capitalist distortion), but rather is straight fact. Fourty million. Can you justify this?

3. Solshenitsyn. Weiss doesn't accuse him of being a spokesman for justice, but rather of being another courageous human unfairly treated by the Soviet Union. Tsarist? Show me. Anti-Semite?. Show me. I don't quite believe that his exportation from the USSR was due to this alleged anti-Semitism, but rather his stubborness in speaking his mind. And even if you can show he has a bias in the area, why do you choose to ignore Russia and her systematic policies of repression (not being able to leave the country freely) and terror (all important Jews were jailed before Nixon's last visit to Russia etc. etc.) towards its Jewish citizens.

Solshenitsyn's lying in Gulag? Show me. But do even these alleged lies negate the overall impact of the book? Is the entire book a lie?

4. Shockley. I can envision Richard Nixon having said. "The potential for having (Angela Davis') theory used as a rationale for a genocidal thrust within this country cannot be overlooked." Plug in the names — Fred Hampton, Tim Leary, Jerry Rubin, Bobby Seale, Stokely Carmichael, George Jackson, Eldridge Cleaver — pick you own danger. The U.S. Government did. Suppression of any speech only leads to misunderstanding. Did Nixon ever seriously listen to Ellsberg or Angela Davis? Of course not. You're correct, we must learn from the experience of Nazi Germany: freedom of speech must never be imperiled. Book burnings or cross burnings are the inevitable result. The truth never lies. It is only in tragic, life-denying situations like Russia that the truth never outs.

I realize the time limitations imposed upon you in this rebuttal situation, and I appreciate your efforts. However, if you couldn't bag the goods in the given time period, it would've been more responsible of you to have indicated a 'see you next week' situation was in effect, and gotten together a comprehensive reply next week. That is not as good as an immediate reply, but would've been much better than wallowing in the same unsubstantiated accusations you accuse Weiss of. People with brains are never lame.

I write this as one who hates capitalism as a dehumanizing and killing machine by its definition. Fred Weiss and I disagree on this and many other areas — this is no cronyism, but rather a disappointed critique of some folks espousing the gospel I love.

Extra-Sensory Perceptions

by David Sokol

All too often, new literary or supposedly 'artistic' publications emerge, offering nothing new to the readership it hopes to gain. Creativity is something of an excuse for advertising and advertising translates into profits the raison — d'etre. All which makes it hard to believe that right here, in the heart of the Pioneer Valley, a completely different kind of periodical is going to be unveiled early in 1975.

Sound Image is the name of a new "magazine of the innovative aural and visual arts". The brainchild of local resident and Hampshire professor Jim Matzner, Sound Image will combine visual poetry and prose with corresponding recordings of different kinds of music, seemingly unusual sounds, and the human voice.

A totally non-profit, advertisement free periodical, Sound Image will be issued four time yearly with each package consisting of approximately a dozen photographic reproductions pressed on high gloss paper and suitable for framing, and a 12 inch long playing record or cassette recording, depending on the whim of the subscriber. Accompanying these will be comprehensive explanations of the material as well as supplementary readings. The first issue, for example will include a fascinating piece written some 40 years ago by Erich Hornbostel entitled "The Unity of the Senses".

SOUND IMAGE™

World renowned photographers such as Minor White, Ralph Gibson, and Constantine Manos as well as composers Daniel Pinkham and Bill Cole have contributed to the still-in-the-planning-stages first issues. The second issue, intended for release early next spring, will be devoted in its entirety to the sounds and music of the Greek people with photography by Manos. Other topics for upcoming issues include UFOs and Arctic Marine life.

Perhaps the most impressive aspect of Sound Image is its attempt to go beyond an established format which is easily saleable.

Sounds in upcoming issues will include various non-western music, interviews with craftsmen, and respected local poet Robert Francis reading poetry from his latest book (published by the UMass Press). Each issue of Sound Image promises to be a fascinating and potentially mind expanding learning and life experience.

Although there is a high degree of sophistication inherent in this publication, and the price may seem high (due to the cost of pressing the records or recording the cassettes and providing high quality reproductions) for the average student, the magazine is doing something new and innovative and deserves our interest and support if possible.

WMUA will be playing excerpts from the first issue next Tuesday evening (15 October) at 8 p.m. in a show which should be well worth a listen.

Sound Image welcomes artistic contributions from students and these, as well as subscription inquiries can be made by writing to Sound Image, Box 472, Amherst, Massachusetts. Introductory subscription rates (before Jan. 1, 1975) are $8.50 for the first issue or $35 for the year (four issues), with satisfaction or money back.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT

To The Editor:

On page two of Below The Salt it is stated that the magazine will "print peculiar work". Further, it promises that Below The Salt is a "weekly fine art — real world magazine of the UMass Daily Collegian." For which category does (Kris Jackson's) cartoon on page five qualify? (It's rough being a bishop", 9-26-74). Fine art? Real world? Peculiar?

In today's real world, are there not examples other than the clergy to which we can direct our attention, our artistic ability and our newspaper space? The cartoon seems like a poor and tasteless example of fine and real artistry. Are not those who play games with other people's personal religious beliefs more peculiar than the subject matter?

Sincerely,
Margaret Cassidy

First of all, I believe the strip in question fits all three categories. I realized quite well the original idea, in terms of anatomical detail and composition; I address the controversial problem within the church of the basically contrary nature of celibacy; and the work is indeed peculiar.

Offensive? Only to those believing that the Catholic clergy indeed consists of feelingless robots. To pique, rather than to offend, was my aim, and I produced a work which I would not hesitate to show to a Church liberal like Father Drinan, for example.

Love & Kisses,
Kris Jackson

Mike Kostek replies:

There are, of course, many many other issues and-or problems to be dealt with in this crocked world besides the clergy. Howsomever, since we do believe that if you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem, the clergy does not escape our withering gaze. And since we have found that which is normal to be lacking, we have embraced the 'peculiar' as our religion.

The cartoon was an extraordinary, peculiar Fine Art-Real World combination (a real rarity), but why categorize? We reserve the right to offend everyone and everything in order to make this a more peculiar world.

"I Don' Wanna Pickle, Just Wanna Ride..."

by Don Aucoin

Free! My Fuji flashes over the gutted sidewalk which parallels Rte. 116, past stately white houses and little kids on tricycles, far from presidential pardons, failed French quizzes, and the asphalt jungle that has become my home. Denizens of Southwest tend to scoff at notions of grass, trees and suchlike, holding these rumors to be largely fictional, and so I am astonished to find fall in full bloom. "Foliage" time is drawing near, and already the leaves are shedding their unfashionable green coats for the more brilliant hues of red, orange and gold. I nod and smile at a woman on a red bike; the relative success and failure of my Sabbath sojourns hinges upon the weather and how many nods and smiles I give and-or receive. Some considerate Public Works official has seen fit to construct the sidewalk in such a way that one need not experience the tedium of stopping at every side street and lifting the bike over the curb; there are no curbs at all, and I mentally thank Mr. Considerate every inch of the way.

Now I turn left at the base of a fairly steep hill, ride past a softball game which ends the second I stop to watch (coincidence, I reassure myself), and bounce past barking German shepherds on a rocky road headed toward my Very Special Place. I make the appropriate dismayed sounds to discover that the cornfield through which I customarily wend my way to my personal babbling brook, has been razed to the ground. A little boy replies laconically, "Frost killed it", to my anxious query. I curse the inclement weather of late and hasten to see if the frost has destroyed that treasured spot of land too. Ah! I am in luck; my brook babbles still.

The trip back to school is invariably hard to take. Amherst traffic; a snotty look from a matron as I pedal past the stores on North Pleasant Street; and a vague sense of re-entering the spider's web; all combine to raise my blood pressure a few points by the time University Pizza hoves into view. Now the only cycling I can look forward to are those frenzied dashes to and from classes; this being, as they say, a whole 'nother trip.

There may be something in this world as frustrating as attempting to maneuver one's way on a bike from the Student Union to Whitmore during the 11 o'clock rush, but somehow I doubt it. It's senseless to bother pedaling. The surging mass propels me along, after a fashion, and I know if I can only survive the buffeting winds near the library I may yet live to ride again one day. Pretty surly crowd today, I muse while flinching under the heat of a "Get your fucking bike outta my way!" glare. Bike riders come in for their fair share of friendly grins and angry looks, the former balancing the latter, and the whole ledger reduced to insignificance by a 5' by 5' tract of smashed-glass concrete, which makes a sickening pop! When ridden over on a bike.

With an audible sigh of relief I burst free of the maddened throng and roll quickly down the hill to Southwest. This short journey is not without it's subtle dangers either. My principal worry is, one might say were he wittier than I, a singularly pedestrian one. That is to say, I wait in paranoid certainty for the moment when that clown walking up ahead is going to suddenly, inexplicably, leap into my path just as I hit forty miles per hour, and am crouched low over the bars trying my darndest to look continental! And further, that he-she-it will be armed to the teeth against just such an eventuality, and a bicycle-hater into the bargain, who will take a once-healthy young man who but a moment before was flying along life's highway, the sun in his eyes and the wind in his teeth, and transform him into a formless lump of bloody metal and twisted spokes. This picture of ravaged innocence brings a catch to my throat and a tear to my eye, and I prudently slow down and drive on carefully, very carefully.

I wind around "Dead Man's Curve", that terrifying, sweeping hook of a bend down near Boyden Gym, boom through the tunnel, and voila! My misery is complete. I have been thrust once more into the bowels of that surreal maze known as Southwest. I give myself up to the towers and the concrete, abjectly surrendering the happy freedom of cycling to both external and internal demands. All this until next weekend at least. And how the hell am I going to make it through the winter?

HEAVY METAL KIDS (ATCO SD 7047)
TOTAL PLAYING TIME: 38:55

THE HAGERS (ELEKTRA 7-1021)
TOTAL PLAYING TIME: 23:41

The main issue here, perhaps, is cleanliness. The Hagers have a debut album out, and so does an English Group called Heavy Metal Kids. The Hagers are a cute couple kids whom you will remember from Hee Haw, twins I believe. Heavy Metal Kids are working - class scruffs. Guess who emegges as the most All American, 1974 version? Not the Doublemints....

Heavy Metal Kids' debut is marked by a lot of creative imagination, talented production and a strong lyric sense of loneliness and rejection (even when under the guise of machismo). The band's composition is of the expected guitar, bass, keyboards, drums, vocal variety, and what is surprising about their work is not the type of music played — lightweight heavy metal, as the name suggests — but the way in which it is played, with somewhat eccentric hooks and many deft touches which stay away from gimmickry and lend excitement to most of their music.

My favorite songs here are "Hangin' On", in which vocalist Gary Holton is introduced — Holton sounds throughout like a high-pitched Rod Stewart, which is OK most of the time but does get a bit grating on slower numbers like "It's the Same"; "Run Around Eyes", an extremely spare song, reggae-inspired (but not a reggae ripoff, due to the nature of its lyrics); "We Gotta Go", which features a somewhat puzzling echoed vocal during the verses and an equally puzzling chorus stating "We gotta go 'cause the sound of a rock and roll band is driving me out of me mind"; and "Rock and Roll Man", which more than justifies its 7:30 timing. This last is the kind of uptempo rock hymn which our culture produces from time to time, but with eccentricities (such as harmonized vocals alone against full spectrum percussion) to make it truly distinctive.

So the Heavy Metal Kids are revealed as a band to listen to, especially if you like rock and roll which shows some thought, but isn't especially cerebral. The Hagers, on the other hand — need it even be said? — show no thought whatever. Their album is an absolutely perfect example of the producer's album. In this genre, the Producer finds a Talent, gets people to write "songs" for the Talent, gets the instrumental tracks laid down and sticks the Talent in front of a mike or two. Also puts Attractive Pictures of the Talent on the cover. This nets the Talent generous airplay on Easy Listening Stations and maybe a syndicated TV show. Artistic control? Creativity? Geeble jokes? Music? Garbage? Cute Faces? Nice voices? Oh, definitely. The Producer? Mike Curb, of course.

One thing The Hagers is good for is an examination of the lyrics, which are not intended for inspection, of course. The assumptions revealed are amazing. Two brief examples; "It's all right to go to a party — It's all right to have some fun — It's all right to take in a movie — But don't let him be the one" (Tell Him No"); Cherry, cherry pie — Cherry, cherry pie — Cherry, cherry pie — Oh so good" (Cherry Pie").

Both the Hagers and Heavy Metal Kids are clean groups in different ways and even both All American. But in these days of modern time (or at any point, really), would you rather have three days' growth of beard on your face, or fix your hair with Crisco? If you had to make the choice?

HERE COME THE WARM JETS
(Island ILPS 9268)
Sidereal Playing Time: 41:40

Well, it's been a long time hasn't it? Here's a bona fidelity rockenroll album that I like for many reasons — which are mine, and perhaps mine alone, since the idea that anything at all is strange has long since vanished from my mind.

This Eno punk is one of those hermaphroditic British whimps that gets his jollies torturing people by looking like something out of Vogue magazine, compounded by the fact that he can not play keyboards at all. That is, he does not play fifty thousand notes per minute, nor is he possessed with the facility to do so.

What he is, is actually more like a composer in Rock that can take a synthesizer and a production board, and through the quasi-miracle of modern electronics, make the group sound like an orchestra with guts.

To examine the point in his favour, songs like "Needles in the Camel's Eye" (a clever pun for theosophists) which is reminiscent of the early and driving Velvet Underground, are min masterpieces in themselves, especially for the work of Matching Mole's former bassist-mathematician Bill MacCormick's stylized Ventures-Terry Riley bass-drum solo.

Mentioning other highlights would be pointless, except to say that ENO's electric larynx and imaginative lyric writing hit the spots. "Cindy Tells Me" combines the '50's (i.e. Lesley Gore) with the seventies (decadence). "Dead Finks Don't Talk" is a normal job ("To be a zombie all the time requires such dedication..."), and "On Some Faraway Beach" is somewhat like a Robert Wyatt ballad, while "Some of Them Are Old" is somewhat Nico - teened. Both are lovely, and surprisingly sentimental.

One of the real stars of the album is Robert Fripp (you've heard of him, haven't you). "Blank Frank" is a rocker, to be sure, and Fripp almost literally explodes on his solo spot, paying more attention to highly controlled energy than to melody, aided and abetted by the keyboards of Nick Kool and the Koolaids (who sound quite a bit like John Cale...what's the deal?) "Driving Me Backwards" is ENO on mechanical piano, with Crimsos Fripp and Wetton exchanging and building layers.

My, my, but this isn't the most interesting. "Baby's on Fire", is one of the only synthesizer based songs I've ever heard (shades of Alice Cooper in the vocal), and ENO hits on the synthesizer as something a bit more than a souped-up organ (are you listening Emerson?) The synthesizer leaves Fripp and Weston free to concentrate on the most bizarre improvisations to be heard in a while.

To cap off the album, we got "The Paw Paw Negro Blowtorch" which I'll leave you guessing about, and the beautiful and gutsy ENO organ interlude between "Dead Finks" and "Some of Them Are Old". The album winds down with "Here Come the Warm Jets", a basic rock and roll riff taken ahold of by ENO, treated by the synthesizer and tapes, ENO's main strength.

There is that ENO?...(ouch!) Danke.

Bonzos: Normal Abnormality

by David Miller

THE HISTORY OF THE BONZOS
The Bonzo Dog Band
United Artists UA-LA321-H2
Total Playing Time: 101·20

"BONZO: rel. to 'gonzo', meaning a system of thought where much can follow much else and be meaningful, especially with unrelated muchnesses. See Hunter S. Thompson."

— Oxygen Max's Dictionary of Cultural References

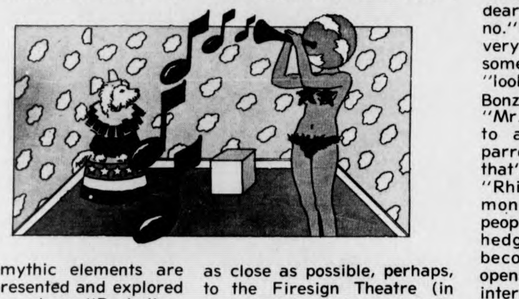
"The normal that appeared so abnormal, if you took a harder look."

— from the liner notes by Chris Welch

The Bonzo Dog Band consisted of Vivian Stanshall, Neil Innes, "Legs" Larry Smith, Joel Druckman, and many others between the period of 1965-66 and 1969-70. The group members met in an asylum (at least some of them did), recorded and developed a substantial cult following in England, were neglected and ripped off and ended in breakdowns and on-the-road angst. In the meantime they made wonderful music and art, and should be regarded now as major rock artists and Geniuses Of Our Time. The History of the Bonzos is a two-record boxed bonanza retrospective of their work and deserves our attention. Let's have a look at it.

"My pink half of the drainpipe-separates next door from me-my pink half of the drainpipe-oh Mother-belongs to me." Much of what the Bonzos did belongs to the realm of Theatre of the Absurd and Pop Art, in that they spent a lot of their energies exploring both the banalities of Western (esp. British) daily life, and the myths that the West lives by. Sometimes their attention to detail turned to Dada, sometimes their mythic explorations turned to lampoons, but all of their work was infused with an honest late '60s Counterculture ethic and a musical eclecticism which borders on the astounding — they played in a great variety of styles and never used any sidemen. And most of the time they were very funny.

The History of the Bonzos is a sampler album by necessity and therefore leaves a good many things out, but for the uninitiated (like myself) it's excellent. Where to begin? The band's mythic elements are well represented and explored in songs such as "Rockaliser Baby", with its "I Am the Walrus" — like police siren and almost frighteningly banal monologues — "Bessie and I went to Bormouth on Saturday. No one was drowned so we went for a swim. Spent an hour cleaning oil off the seagulls. I don't think we'll be going again." "Sport (The Odd Boy)" deals with the reserved machismo of British public-school training (see The Ruling Class): "My Pink Half of the Drainpipe" is an episodic classic of suburban tedium — "I have a sister in Toronto who's a nurse, and I've had a bit of bother laying turf. It's life, not books, that taught me all I learned. Ooop, Look — in the oven, my rice pudding's getting burned! Have you seen the new — attachment on my drill? I must have the cat put down, he's getting ill." "Mr. Apollo" and "Hunting Tigers Out in Indiah" manage to make a couple of other macho myths — the strongman cult and the Kipling — Imperialist syndrome — look completely ridiculous, the one through a super-heavy-metal orchestration and pubescent lyrics, the other through lyrics as evident as "They bite — they scratch — they make an awful fuss — It's no good stroking them and saying Puss, Puss, Puss." Finally, on "Big Shot", the Mickey Spillane-inspired monologue, complete with a frantic sax solo during the naughty part, the Bonzos came as close as possible, perhaps, to the Firesign Theatre (in fact, Neil Innes is apparently working with Monty Python).



"Five years ago, I was a four-stone apology. Today, I am two separate gorillas." The Bonzos are perhaps best known for their marvelous lampoons of inflated, shallow, and silly musical styles and attributes. Some of their parodies came in a form so faithful to the originals that it is often difficult to tell where the parody lies — although you would not for a moment mistake it for the original. This is particularly evident in songs such as "You Done My Brain In", "Suspicion", and "Tent", which seem to be straight rock and roll songs, but somehow not quite ... The parodies are more evident on "Jollity Farm", "Mickey's Son and Daughter", "The Sound of Music", "I Left My Heart In San Francisco" and "The Canyons of Your Mind". The first two are perfect pastiches of the kind of music you'd be likely to hear backing up old Mighty Mouse cartoons — fluffy and brainless, with talking animals and Munchkin choruses. The next two are absolute travesties of the two "popular songs", and "Canyons" is an amalgamation of presumption, from the "melting crayolas of your mind" lyric to Tommy James' reverb grunts. Loads of fun.

"Dear deer deer no dear dear dear no dear dear oh dear no." Dada. When you fix on the very minute and make it somewhat important, the usual "looks so unusual". And so the Bonzos did too. Here we have "Mr. Slater's Parrot", a hymn to an extremely ordinary parrot — he says "Hello" and that's about the extent of it. "Rhinocratic Oaths" features monologues about ordinary people who win contests, clip hedges, get arrested and become alcoholic. "Shirt" opens with a series of street interviews about the necessity of shirts and goes into a kind of R&B featuring a strenuous solo by Spear on the Electric Shirt Collar — "Three weeks? But the sign outside says 59-minute cleaners!" "That's just the name of the shop, luv." And here is also the indispensible "The Intro and the Outro", which consists entirely of introductions — first of the band members, then of such personages as Liberace (on clarinet) and Adolf Hitler (on vibes). Other goodies include "Laughing Blues", a fascinating glimpse into the Bonzos' early days as the Bonzo Dog Doo-Dah Band, a New Vaudeville-type group that could barely play their several wind instruments, or so it seemed, and "I'm the Urban Spaceman", their only chart success.

However. While there are no losing cuts on the album, some of the songs are a bit derivative. "King of Scurf" and "Bad Blood" are exercises in the Surfing and Wild West genres, basically funny but a bit, well you might say, gross — particularly the former, in which dandruff production seems to be the mark of manhood. "Trouser Press" contains a painfully dated gay parody, even if the lyrics are interesting — consisting mainly of clothing terms (more Dada). And unfortunately, the few "solo" cuts, by groups such as The World (Innes), and Viv Stanshall and the Sean Head Showband, are somewhat thin and considerably less interesting than the bulk of the work presented here. An important exception to this is "Release Me", by Roger "Ruskin" Spear and His Giant Kinetic Wardrobe. This song sets up its own world entirely, going from a tacky and sluggish version of the Roger Miller song to a frantic Spike Jones segment, finishing with an ending that always threatens to really end but never does quite.

And last of all. Worth paying a lot of attention to on this album are "We Are Normal" and "Slush". More than any others, these cuts point up the sadness that was never too far from the Bonzos, as individuals and as artists. "We Are Normal" opens with scraps of speech, sluggish and drippy meanderings, and moves to a huge dose of rock and roll while singing "We are normal and we want our freedom" (remember the asylum). It flirts with sanity the way Joni Mitchell's "Trouble Child" flirts with the opposite. "Slush" ends the album and consists of a lovely organ-string instrumental on which is superimposed a tape loop of a hearty laugh. The laugh continues, long after the instrumental ends, and in its repetition becomes thin and sad. A hallow, incessant laugh. Ladies and Gentlemen, welcome back the Bonzo Dog Band.

Capitol (ST-11317)

Shirley has done it again. Nobody, but nobody does it like Shirley Bassey. She takes songs no one's ever heard of and turns them into standards. She does not sing run of the mill songs. This album is no exception.

Most of the songs on the album have not been previously recorded. Although all are worthy of notation, the best songs on the album are "Leave A Little Room", "All That Love Went To Waste", "I'm Not Anyone", and especially Stevie Wonder's "You Are The Sunshine Of My Life".

Shirley Bassey's talents have won her the international Entertainer of the Year award. She is a sell-out everytime at Carnegie Hall. This woman is well worth listening to and well worth the price of the record.

Cleo Laine's album is a collection of songs which have been sung to death. Maybe now they will finally find their resting place.

We hear another rendition of "All In Love Is Fair" better done by Nancy Wilson and best done by Barbara Streisand. Cleo does a fair interpretation of "I Loves You, Porgy" and "The Summer Knows". There is also a Shirley Temple-like version of Donovan's "Skip-A-Long, Sam". The best on the album, "Send In The Clowns", can also be found on Cleo Laine's album Live At Carnegie Hall, which is far superior to her current release.

Nancy Wilson's album cover shows beautiful photographs of her. The album itself did not strike me at first as anything special. There are several really good cuts and several definitely poor cuts. The best is the title tune "All In Love Is Fair", the worst is "Streetrunner".

SHIRLEY BASSEY

The album must be listened to a number of times before it can be fully appreciated. A true Nancy Wilson fan will definitely enjoy it. The orchestration is excellent on all of the numbers, and Ms. Wilson does a fine job on the title tune "All In Love Is Fair" a standard now, which is cropping up on everyone's album. Other songs of note are "There'll Always Be Forever", "You're As Right As Rain", and "To Make It Easier On You."

SLEWFOOT — NORMAN CONNORS (Buddah BDS-5611) Playing Time: 33:46

How about Stinkfoot? How about Coltrane's "Welcome" re-arranged as a soundtrack for "Babes in Toyland"? How about a lot of synthetic jazz compositions that go nowhere, plus rock 'n' soul horns a la Billy Cobham? How about a sterling band, including Ron Carter, Dom Um Romao, Gary Bartz, Carlos Garnett, Lonnie Liston Smith, Eddie Henderson, Jean Carn, and Hubert Laws, almost but not quite snatching this music from the jaws of mediocrity? How about a nice Hawaiian punch? How about a C-

RELEASE YOURSELF — GRAHAM CENTRAL STATION
(Warners BS 2814) time 37:01

(Hey! You white rockers! Stick around, you're gonna want to hear this too.)

Burning bright in soul's sweet light are the handful of innovators who are taking and pulling this extremely limited music down the road of Change. These people are keeping the normal high standards while taking the music somewhere, a must for any art form. Two of the biggest movers of the past, Marvin Gaye and Sly Stone have slowed up now, leaving Stevie Wonder as the main explorer to push open the doors for second-generation folk like Mandrill, Earth, Wind & Fire, Kool & The Gang and Graham Central Station. The main features thus far in this second-line move have been harder, stronger, more versatile music while keeping the definite vocal-melody line conforming to pretty singable and-or damn danceable demands.

Graham Central Station, headed by Larry Graham, Sly's former bass player has coagulated an amazing and beautiful synthesis of textures that is well-done as any in any current music. What started slowly and intermittantly on their first album, Graham Central Station, has now grown through an almost unified 37 minutes.

They slip in and out of textures with ease and grace. And just as important, they are able to rock like demons and be silky smooth simultaneously. This cross texturing is just about unique. "Release Yourself" is sensational. It never lets up, and is one of the year's best cookers while moving through a variety of stages. "'Tis Your Kind Of Music" moves sensually, with popping interludes. "G.C.S." is a great intro to this amazingly tight and flexible bandland. You know that someone who names his publishing company 198FOE Music has gotta be moving something along.

Yes, Gil and his nineteen-piece orchestra interpret the music made by Jimi and his guitar, except in the areas of Jimi's spirit, fire, sensitivity, ultra-worldliness and genius.

IN THE SOOP WITH MARTIN MULL — SOOP (Vanguard VSD 79338) time 37:57

Before Marty Mull brought his Fabulous Furniture Into Your Living Room, and after the time he studied Art in college, he was a major part of an artsy-fartsy aggregation called Soop. They kicked around New York City long enough to become bona fide jaundiced city-dwellers, and thus half the disc deals with What's On Tube Now, old movies, (arty) garbage and auto mechanics, delivered in the powerful and convincing style of, say, Hair. There are interesting tidbits along the way, in the dual talking tracks a la early Velvets and Mothers, and a catchy melody line or two will emerge to hook every now and then, but deficiencies in singing, playing production and overall inspiration crop up in too many spots. The other half of the material sounds like early Mull mullings, sort of his Preflyte.

It's quite interesting to hear how dumbly Martin used to sing "Margie The Midget", and how a completely incompetent band can blunt the cleverest aims. In the Soop certainly makes us appreciate just how good a singer Martin is now, and how good his current band is. For real Mullers only.

McCoy Tyner: A Supreme Love

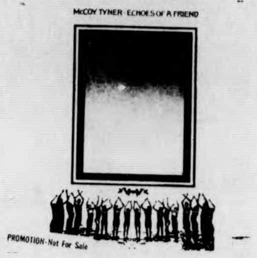
by Your Sacred Cowboy

ECHOES OF A FRIEND (Milestone M-9055) SAMA LAYUCA (Milestone M-9056) — McCoy Tyner (Playing Times: 45:53 and 42:07

ECHOES OF A FRIEND

This is a dedication to a man, a friend, a teacher — John Coltrane. "Many are called, but few are chosen" — McCoy Tyner.

The above dedication is printed on the album's back cover beneath a small picture of Tyner with Coltrane: Tyner the image of the perfect disciple — loving, respectful and even a little fearful of the man who stands half-facing him; Coltrane looking away in deepest concentration, painfully conscious of his responsibility for the young Tyner's development and direction, wondering, perhaps, if he were leading a promising musician into a life of near-obscurity. In the music of this album a now-mature Tyner performs the greatest gesture of devotion a disciple can make: Having become the very embodiment of his master's teachings, directing those same skills in glorification of the master. John Coltrane is a living, breathing, almost performing presence on this album of solo piano.



But even as this recording is a gesture of respect it is also, perhaps, a conscious act of catharsis for Tyner. Coltrane's "Naima" and "Promise", which open side one, are overwhelmed with an outpouring of both grief and, in the thumping, often literally pounding bass lines, anger at a world that had denied recognition to the man who'd given so much of himself to it. Grief and anger together fuse and build into near-rage as Tyner wrenches "My Favorite Things" into a minor-key dirge; the depth of emotion is awesome as he loses himself in a final, frenzied orgy of bitterness, trailing off at last, painfully, into the poignancy of resignation.

Side two is release and calm introspection, beginning in the seventeen minutes of "The Discovery". Tyner said about this composition, "This to me is what life is all about, to discover one's self. There are many changes in life, and they all mean something. Thanks to The Creator." In this piece Tyner occasionally steps away from the piano to perform briefly on percussion and vibes, perhaps to express more fully those changes and their underlying unity. "Folks" ends the album on a note of warm serenity; Tyner is his own man, aware and grateful, but no longer overwhelmed by echoes of his friend.

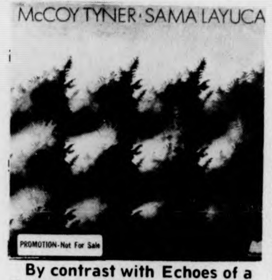
SAMA LAYUCA

Personnel: Tyner — Piano; Bobby Hutcherson — vibes, marimba; Gary Bartz — Alto sax; Azar Lawrence — Soprano sax, Tenor sax; John Stubblefield — oboe, flute; Buster Williams — bass; Billy Hart — drums; Mtume — Conga drums, percussion; Guillermi Franco — percussion.



By contrast with Echoes of a Friend Tyner seems, on this album, like a schoolboy rushing out to the playground after presenting a difficult, but well-prepared lesson to his teacher, knowing that he has earned the freedom to do what he wants. This is a well-paced, light-hearted album, and by "light-hearted" I don't mean light. The band gets into some very percussive and complex things, but there is a sense of buoyancy about the music here that is exhilarating: Just when things are working up to a froth either someone will step up to the mike and start doing bird calls, or else the bass will suddenly plummet out of the stratosphere at warp five; there is always a fine, balancing sense of the moment which keeps things from getting heavy for the sake of heaviness.

All of the long cuts ("Sama Layuca", "La Cubana", and "Paradox") are fast-moving, high-spirited, and beautifully executed, with special solo credits to Hutcherson, Bartz and Lawrence. Tyner himself has never sounded as at home and at ease as he does here. Nor is this album without its reflective moments: "Above the Rainbow" is a luminous, ethereal duet for piano and vibes, and "Desert Cry" is as haunting and mournful as its title implies; the sad sweetness of the oboe's theme conjures up the cool night air and the loneliness of the wide-open sands with ease. Certainly one of the most moving Tyner compositions to date.

Echoes of a Friend receives no grade because it would be an impertinance, buy Sama Layuca receives a "This music is smiling at you". A.

LATE FOR THE SKY — JACKSON BROWNE
(Asylum 7E-1017) Total playing time: 40:38

Before Jackson Browne became established as a recording star in his own right, he had written a bunch of songs which were recorded popularized by fairly big name folksters — Tom Rush ("Shadow Dream Song", "These Days", "Colors of the Sun"), Linda Ronstadt ("Rock Me On The Water"), The Byrds ("Jamaica Say You Will") and Bonnie Raitt ("Under The Falling Sky"). The Eagles had the first big Jackson Browne-penned hit with "Take It Easy", and Browne's own "Doctor My Eyes" frosted the cake.

Both of Browne's first two albums, Saturate Before Using and For Everyman were mellow trips into easy listener's paradise with Jackson doing his own songs, some of which were already familiar through the cover versions, some of which were newer compositions.

For Everyman represented musical maturity over Saturate with Browne going beyond his initial display of sometimes maudlin, sometimes melancholy ballads (i.e. "Song For Adam" and "My Opening Farewell") to a more witty, less stiff, less self-conscious sound. Songs like the untiring "Red Neck Friend", "Ready or Not", and "For Everyman" showed Jackson Browne leaving his self-imposed limitations and entering the real world. Though his voice and lyrics never went beyond the average, his songs were arranged and performed well enough so that all but the most critical overlooked his basic flaws.

Expecting continued musical growth on Late For The Sky, it's disappointing to find Jackson's flaws living on, more blatant than ever, and his satisfaction with staying within his typical and established formula sound. Virtually every song on Late reeks of something earlier. The slow songs (into which catagory fall six of the eight tracks) never improve on "Jamaica Say You Will" or "A Child in These Hills" and the remaining up-tempo tunes fall short of "Red Neck Friend" or "Take It Easy", with the only major difference being that the songs are longer and fewer, now with each song being milked for all or more than it's worth.

There are a lot of little subtle musical things going on (notably some nice David Lindley guitar), but these aren't enough to overcome Browne's stagnancy. Late For The Sky is recommended for the Asylum freaks only, while everyone else interested in Jackson Browne should totally ingest his other two albums first. With rave items like the recent Roger McGuinn and Jesse Winchester around and on the stands, this Jackson Browne attempt is certainly second rate.

In Concert:
Lou Reed
Orpheum Theater
Friday, October 4, 1974

Lou Reed wailed, gyrated, and glittered to a capactiy crowd at the Orpheum Theater last Friday, as he stepped off a cross-country tour.

Reed began the relatively short (a little less than two hours) show with "Sweet Jane", which was originally recorded when Reed was a member of the Velvet Underground. He continued through oldies but goodies land with "Big Sister" and "I'm a Man". He then, finally, got around to introducing some new music with "Sally Can't Dance", the title cut off his newest album.

The reference to a show rather than a concert is justified by the surprising lack of quality music and the over-abundance of commercial gimmickry. Radiant in nail polish and tinted hair, this show truely marked the surfacing of Reed as a drugs-and-death-glitter-rock-star. With his guitar gone, (it had previously been used only as something to gyrate with anyway), Reed was forced to depend totally on his voice and sensuality to stimulate the audience. During "Heroin", he even wrapped the mike chord around his arm-mimicking shooting-up. Judging by audience reaction, the majority of which were definitely "Uncle Lou Freaks", the show could be considered a success. Even though the lyrics tended to be unintelligible and the music monotonous, Reed was called out by rousing applause to do an encore of "Rock & Roll".

In regarding the performance as a concert, i.e. a production of virtuoso musicianship, Reed has to be cited as a flop. Danny Weiss, the lead guitarist, did, however, perform brilliantly at times, but was forced to give way to the star of the show-Mr. Reed. This is a complete change for Reed, who, when with the Underground, did his best writing and composing in the organism of the band. Indeed, the most popular songs-"Sweet Jane", "Rock & Roll", "Heroin"-came from this era.

What this show-concert most readilly demonstrated was the degeneration of Lou Reed the musician-composer and the emergence of Lou Reed the Mick Jagger-David Bowie glitter-rock star of the seventies.

LEARN TO LOVE IT — JESSE WINCHESTER (Bearsville BR 6953)
Total playing time: 29:30

Jesse Winchester is going to win a good number of new friends with this, his third album. As a singer-songwriter, he has already established himself as one of the most talented and diverse around, and Learn to Love It is Jesse expanding his horizons.

Jesse Winchester is one of those brave souls who sought refuge in Canada rather than be subject to the draft (it wasn't all that long ago), and there's the overriding impression here that he is still haunted by his decision and our society which forced him to make that decision. "Mississippi, You're On My Mind" is a beautiful folky song about misplacement, and has the feel of a musical dream sequence. The traditional "Tell Me Why You Like Roosevelt" has a Ry Cooder touch to it with its gospel feel, but is updated to reflect Jesse's disgust for the war: "In the year of 1967, I was a somewhat younger man; The call to bloody glory came; And I would not raise my hand..."

Two of the tunes here are sung in French, and especially interesting is the distinct American phrasing on "Laisse Les Bon Temps Rouler", Jesse Winchester's own "Let the Good Times Roll".

Every song on Learn to Love It is a highlight, each having a distinct and varied quality. Whether Jesse is folking with a touch of rock, or rocking with a bit of folk, he consistantly comes through as an amazingly versitile singer and writer, able to touch far more bases than better known artists such as Jesse Colin Young or Jackson Browne.

Perhaps the main element in this artistic output is Jesse's exiled condition. He has a wife and baby, living a new life in a new land. He plays small clubs as often as he can get the work, and that doesn't mean a hell of a lot of dough. The man misses the USA terribly — you can tell by his reminiscences. His art is hewn continually on the rough existance he leads. The best art is usually the product of repression. If we put John Lennon in prison on Parris Island, the music he'd make would blow our heads off. There are very few people who can handle success and keep the qualities that made them successful.

Be it in the apcapella "You Can't Stand Up Alone" or the introspective "The End Is Not in Sight" (written by Russell Smith, seemingly for Winchester), Jesse quietly and compassionately emotes: "Yes I knew it all along, that I'd have to go back home; 'Cause this living on the road, it makes me tired and sore; Like a bird without a nest, like a stranger in the night; And my soul must have its rest; But the end is not in sight."

Above all, Jesse Winchester comes across as a terribly honest musician whose music hides nothing in its portrayal of stark reality. The production on Learn to Love It is immaculate, the sound is excellent, and the music is among the best electrified "folk" since the Phil Ochs — Bob Dylan days of the past decade.

Rick Wakeman & The National Philharmonic Orchestra
Music Hall, Boston

Resplendent in a white floor-length cape, Rick Wakeman came and conquered all at his Music Hall gig Saturday night. He performed half of "Six Wives of Henry VIII" and "Journey To The Centre Of The Earth", and to contrast the serious music, played a wild version of "The Charleston Rag" with four dancing women.

The "Six Wives" portion of the show was the best, with Rick performing superbly; "Cathrine of Aragon" was the highlight of the set. The orchestra came on for "Journey", and much to my surprise, this lackluster piece of music came to life. I guess actually seeing it performed in front of you gives it a whole new perspective.

Capping the evening was a flash of pure genius, something that caught everybody by surprise. Rick took five TV commercial themes and combined them with bits of classical music for piano and orchestra. This short little ditty left everyone stunned at its beauty, and how Wakeman was able to write up such a "complex" piece. In all, Wakeman & company were truely entertaining, and I look forward to his next tour.

JOURNEY TO THE CENTRE OF THE EARTH — RICK WAKEMAN
A & M SP3621

When you first listen to this album you might be surprised at the difference between this album and Rick's first, The Six Wives of Henry VIII. You have a right to be. A symphony orchestra, narration and a lot of lyrics are what you'll find. You'll also find Rick plays well with orchestra, arranges lyrics superbly and if you listen real hard during the narrations you'll hear Rick playing these funny fast little notes. But you don't care.

Well, this album is the story of a journey to the center of the earth, taken from the story by H.G. Wells. The album has four cuts. "The Journey", "The Recollection", "The Battle", and "The Forest". All are excellent.

"The Journey" describes the descent through the volcano to the underground world. "The Recollection" tells of the near-tragic episode in which the main character Alex, finds himself lost. On the second side we find our weary travelers viewing a battle between two sea serpents. After surviving a storm they come across a forest of giant mushrooms. From the stalks of these mushrooms they build a raft which they ride up the shaft of an active volcano to the surface. Now you care.

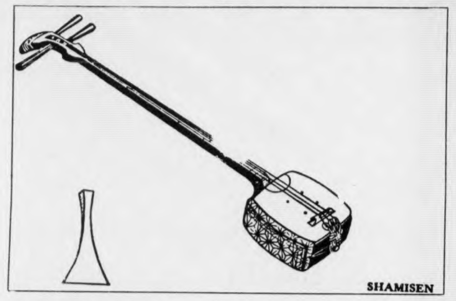
Japanese Music

First in a series of articles on Japanese music, instruments, and musicians.

If you were asked to describe the sounds of Japanese music, what would you do? You could try to compare it to Western music, but you would probably end up even more confused. Or you might describe what you may have heard in a concert, and end up very frustrated in your attempts to describe the sounds of the biwa, the koto or the shakuhaci. Most of us have heard some form of Japanese music at some point in our lives, but how many of us really know what it was we heard, or why we heard it? In this series we are going to attempt to describe the forms, developments, and the uses of the several forms of traditional music in Japan, and the instruments with which that music is played.



SHAMISEN

Japanese music has its beginnings in the folk traditions of early Japan. During the early part of her history, Japan was invaded, either physically or culturally, by China, Korea and other nearby cultures, and the influence of these cultures can be seen in Japanese music and its instruments. Many Japanese instruments can be traced back to China, Korea, and some to India. Like everything else that came into Japan from outside sources, music was adapted to Japanese tastes; the Japanese took the styles and the techniques they considered useful and adopted them into their musical technology.

It must be remembered that throughout the history of Japan, the principal use of music has been as accompaniement for the song or spoken word, and not for instrumental solos. As a result, the instrumental techniques were limited by the songs and dramatic performances they accompanied. Oftentimes the music was used to connect the phrases in a song, rather than to accompany the singing. In dramatic performances, such as the Noh plays, the music was the means of setting the moods of the play, and for filling in the gaps between the spoken lines. In religious rites music is used as accompaniment for the recitation of the sacred texts.

In early Japanese music there were very few instruments — a bamboo flute, a sitar called a wagon, and a few simple percussion instruments. As Japanese music developed, so did its instruments, yet most of the instruments used today can be traced back to these first few instruments. These instruments were regulated in their possibilities by their restrictions as accompaniment, and it has only been in the last 100 to 200 years, if even that long, that Japanese musicians have begun to explore the many possibilities of their instruments. We will deal with these instruments in future articles.

These articles will appear weekly in Below the Salt and will lead up to a concert by master Japanese musicians now in this country. This concert will be a shakuhachi that will be held on December 7, 1974, at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom film . . .

Juggernaut — directed by Richard Lester, starring Richard Harris, Omar Sharif and David Hemmings reviewed by Stuart Sojcher.

Juggernaut is the first in a series of disaster films that will soon saturate the movie medium. If half of those films attain Juggernaut's level of excellence, then film viewing over the next few months should be more than bearable, although one's nerves may well not be able to take the unending tension and suspense. Chances are though that won't happen as more often than not the failure of the disaster films or most films for that matter can be attributed to the director. A good director is able to transform a fair story into a film of some worth. In the case of Juggernaut it is Richard Lester who converts an ordinary plot into a tight, well-constructed film of considerable tension and suspense.

> "Juggernaut is the first in a series of disaster films that will soon saturate the movie medium . . ."

On the surface the plot is trivial enough. A luxury liner, ironically named the "Britannic", leaves England with over 1200 passengers and crew. An official of the firm owning the vessel is called the next day, and while his children gobble down a good old American breakfast, Rice Krispies, a garbled voice on the telephone who calls himself 'Juggernaut' states that if he does not receive one million and a half dollars within twenty-four hours, seven barrels of explosives, strategically placed aboard the ship, will explode. Minutes after the phone call there is a small explosion on the Britannic, a tiny sample of what could come later.

With so many lives at stake, the official wants to pay the ransom immediately; however, institutional forces led by the government, the military and police convince him not to pay the ransom. The government's being tired of giving in to various threats by terrorists and crackpots in addition to the fact that they subsidize a good deal of money to the firm explains the official's giving in.

A crack demolitions team led by Richard Harris and David Hemmings is sent by plane to dismantle the bombs, and to heighten the drama they must parachute to the ship in the middle of a terrible storm.

So the stage is set: twenty hours in which to somehow dismantle seven time bombs which have been designed by a master demolitions expert, 'Juggernaut'. Harris is the best in the business at taking apart the bombs, but this job is the true test of his abilities, as he later finds out that he is up against his teacher, the man who taught him all he presently knows. Omar Sharif, the captain, must somehow keep the ship's activities as normal as possible while a game of life and death is played out beneath his feet. The captain's woman is unable to penetrate the captain's icy exterior. A wife asks her husband, appropriately a politician, if he has ever cheated on her. On land, the police are desperately trying to track down former demolitions men suspected of past wrongdoings. Of course the head of the police's wife and children are on board the ship, and inevitably the weather couldn't be any worse. Corny, but Lester makes it all work.

First of all, the time bomb that Harris must contend with is the ultimate test for a man of his abilities; so much that Harris fears even doing battle with it especially after....but you'll have to find that out for yourself. Lester's camera and some fine acting by Harris convey the strain, frustration and terror on Harris's face, as he races against the clock.

Second, Lester makes use of simple occurrences to create tension. As the captain finishes explaining the situation on board to the passengers, there is a dead silence as most are contemplating the worst. Suddenly a crashing sound is heard and one can almost sense the passengers' pulse quicken. The camera then cuts to a few children who were only playing with some pick-up sticks, and one of them shyly apologizes for his deed. As Harris probes within one of the barrels containing the bombs, an alarm clock suddenly sounds, providing additional tension and also comic relief. Both Harris and the audience jump out of their places and then realize the sick comedy implicit in the clock's ringing. These small touches of a director who knows what he's doing are evident throughout the movie. One is continually kept on the edge of one's seat, especially as the time grows shorter.

Lester does not spend time developing his characters, excepting Harris, but concentrates on using them as objects in building suspense. The police head's wife says little but her pale appearance on the screen implies her fear as well as her feelings of seasickness. Two scenes between Harris and Sharif demonstrate the differences in upbringing, attitude and social position that provides an element of personal tension.

Lester has not made a film of any startling revelations but he does touch upon a few items concerning the human condition. The most important concerns 'Juggernaut' himself, an individual who gave years of service to the British government in a dangerous capacity. His reward for all his time is a small pension, just enough to live on. Consumed by hatred and revenge, 'Juggernaut' wants to get back at the government, for subjecting him to his meager existence. (Juggernaut is defined as "an object or belief calling for blind devotion or ruthless sacrifice.") Upon discovering who 'Juggernaut' really is, a government official remarks that people like that should be treated harshly. The official of the shipping line comments, "And who created those people?" An interesting response.

Juggernaut is by no means a film classic but is an unpretentious, entertaining and well made film. It is a good example of what a competent director can do with stereotypical material.

Leaving You-Me

Your love is only a faded dream, from yesterday
Your unwanted smell still lie in my bed, Smooth lover
Your words still tell me of a forgotten fable, long long ago
You were my exit and entrance
Night after night, leaving you-me
Now do me a lasting favor
Erase your-self from a haunting dream.

SOME ARE CALLED CLOWNS
By Bill Heward with Dimitri V. Gat
Crowell
354pp. $6.95

If you read Jim Bouton's Ball Four and thought that you'd found out all there was to be found out about the Joe Pepitone's, Mike Marshalls, et al. you were right. But Some Are Called Clowns tells a different tale, albeit about baseball, not organized baseball but a unique American experience, the barnstorming baseball teams.

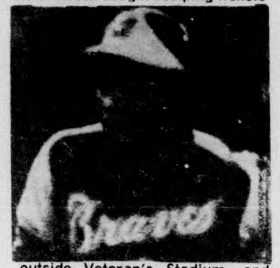
When baseball was in vogue, there were hundreds of minor league teams in operation all over the United States and all of them from Class Z on up to Class AAA turned profits. It was a time before and until the late '50's that baseball was the indisputable king among American pastimes.

But outside of organized ball, there were many other teams which crossed the length and breadth of the United States playing out of suitcases, living in rundown hotels, and hopping from Beckeneyer, Illinois to Fort Dodge, Iowa, and then to play against local nines and entertain after the game with comedy routines, the favorite of them a game called Shadowball, an infield drill without a baseball.

These teams were the barnstorming teams, and in Some Are Called Clowns, Bill Heward, presently a doctoral candidate in education at UMass and Dimitri V. Gat, an English professor here, chronicle the 1973 season of the Indianappolis Clowns. It is an intriguing, illuminating study of the men who played the game and the disintegration of what was once a lucrative business enterprise.

In the book, the authors chronicle the highlights of the forty-fourth and possibly the last season of the Indianapolis Clowns, and in so doing introduce the sports fan to some of the least-known, but certainly the most colorful players ever to put on a baseball uniform.

Among them Steve "Nub" Anderson the "greatest one armed first baseman in the world," Curtis Wallace, an outfielder who might have been offered a contract with the Philadelphia Phillies if only he hadn't been caught scalping tickets outside Veteran's Stadium, and "Double Duty" Green, an ambidextrous pitcher who would throw two strikes past you left-handed and then burst a fastball by you right-handed.



The Clowns, forgetting their name for a moment were first of all baseball players and then clowns. The team sent several players to the majors including an obscure shortstop named Henry Aaron.

Aaron, by the way, almost ended up with the Giants when the Braves organization got its signals crossed with the Clowns' management. He could have been paired with Willie Mays in the Giants' outfield to produce the most powerful lineup in baseball history.

The most interesting character in the Clowns' lineup was the manager Ed Hamman. Hamman devised the first system for playing night baseball in 1933 when he rigged together a gas generator, some poles, cables and connectors with lights mounted on boards. The system was so effective that Ringling Brothers sent out men to study the operation.

Ed also served as the business manager for the Harlem Globetrotters when Abe Saperstein owned the team and was the origin of "Sweet Georgia Brown" the 'Trotters' theme song. He also devised many of the teams tricks including attaching an elastic to a basketball to make it bounce back. The Globetrotters also had their own baseball team which in 1954 starred the immortal Satchel Paige.

The Clowns' evolution from one of maybe 15 or twenty barnstorming teams which could draw over ten thousand a game in the '30's and '40's to one that can barely draw a thousand more than three or four times a summer today as the last remaining barnstorming teams, can be called folklore, sports history and possibly even legend.

In Some Are Called Clowns, Heward and Gat explore that evolution in exhaustive detail but, more importantly introduce us to the personal side of the phenomenon-sometimes funny, sometimes tragic, but always deeply human.

Naive Entertainment

THE BOY WHO INVENTED THE BUBBLE GUN
by Paul Gallico
Delacorte Press
255 pp., $6.95

Reviewed by Ed Smith

The majority of books which are published in America can be classified as entertainment writing. These books include detective stories, gothic novels, monster books and those which can just be called pulp. While they do not have great literary merit, they are fun to read and for that reason alone have value. The Boy Who Invented the Bubble Gun by Paul Gallico, the author of The Poseidon Adventure, is the type of book which captures the reader from first page to last.

The book deals with the misadventures of nine year old Julian West as he attempts to travel from San Diego to Washington, D.C. on a bus. His goal is to patent his invention, a small toy gun which shoots bubbles. In the course of his trip he runs into CIA agents, KGB agents, Vietnam vets, gun-toting old ladies, teenage lovers, and a bus hijacker.

What Gallico captures in his characters is some of the essence of everyday America. It may be that I have just spent too much time in grimy Mid-West bus stations, but somehow the writer's perception of people on the move rings true. There are places where things are exaggerated and out of place to the point of making them ridiculous. Most of the book though, has a degree of verisimilitude which cannot be overlooked.

In some respects, this book contains the classical rites of passage motif. Julian starts out full of enthusiasm, has some setbacks and finally experiences a crushing and emotionally agonizing betrayal of trust. In the end, he learns and benefits from the ordeal, emerging, presumably, a more mature person.

Gallico's strong point in this book is the compelling picture he presents of someone who is truly naive. It is this which gives the book a focus. Julian's trusting attitude towards everyone is offset by the cynical attitude of Marshall, a friend he picks up along the way. Though one is constantly agreeing with Marshall's assessments of people, there is an attractiveness about Julian's ignorance which is more complex than a yearning to return to the womb. It goes back, I think, to that basic desire for some type of real trust in other human beings.

BONNIE AND CLYDE++
If you didn't have the opportunity to see this film on television two weeks ago, you have another opportunity tonight. A good film in general, it is also noted for being one of the first to utilize slow motion for death scenes. In any case...at Mahar Auditorium, Thurs. 7-9 p.m.

CRIES AND WHISPERS++++
Bergman examines the feminine sex with a labor of love. He disects the lives of four women, digging deeper into their anxieties and insecurities until nothing is left but their cries and whispers. At the Amherst Cinema, 7-8:45.

CINDERELLA LIBERTY ++
The story of a relationship between a sailor and a whore. Credit for the tasteful, sensitive screenplay that depicts the development of this unusual relationship. A good double feature billed along with Paper Chase. At the Mountain Farms 4.

DOCTOR ZHIVAGO ++++
Once again, this film is available for your Viewing Pleasure. The tale is a love story unfolding during the Russian Revolution. Breath-taking photography, capable acting, and a well-executed story that will coax an occasional tear from a Romantic's eye. See it, if you haven't already. At Mountain Farms 4.

GONE WITH THE WIND++++
The old classic which was stirred up the legions of decency in the Thirties. The big breakthrough in color film. It won a slew of Oscars. Showcase Cinemas, W. Springfield.

THE GRADUATE++
All of the sixties classics make it to Mahar Auditorium sooner or later. Don't go to hear the soundtrack, Mahar's sound equipment will be a disaster for Simon and Garfunkel's music. However, it's worth a viewing just to discover what was considered controversial just a few years ago. At Mahar, 7-9-11 Sat.

The JUGGERNAUT++
Another disasterous situation occurring on the high seas. Just like The Poseidon Adventure, only this time it happens on an bigger luxury liner. It is to be shown at the West Springfield showcase cinema. For more on this film, see feature review on page 9.

PAPER CHASE+½.
A student's first year at Harvard Law school is complicated by identity crises, questions of values and a love affair with a law professor's daughter. Story is strained by a lack of interesting sub-plots, but is worth a viewing if you can't wait until summer driveins, where it will inevitably appear. A large part of the film was shot in Harvard Square, but all I could recognize was the Out-of-Town News, directly across from the college. At the Mountain Farms 4.

WALKING TALL+++
A returning veteran finds his hometown has become overrun with gambling, drinking and carrying-on. He adapts Roosevelt's philosophy, and goes around pulverizing the infiltrators devices with a huge stick. The townspeople are happy with his work and draft him as their sherriff. And then his real troubles begin. Good film, guaranteed to straighten your posture. See. At the Mountain Farms 4.

2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY++++
Kubrick's best film to date. This bit of pop philosophy has become a classic for its special effects. As far as a story line goes, I'm at a loss. The film is either about something too cosmic for the common layman to understand, or a homosexual computer. See, with an altered conscious, if you have such tendancies.

SPECIAL!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

THREE STOOGES FILM FESTIVAL
Five Three Stooges shorts — Dizzy Doctors, Ants in the Pantry, Microphonies, A Plumbing We Will Go, and An Ache In Every Stake. All films feature the original Curley. Wednesday, Oct. 16 in the Student Union at 7, 9, and 11.

THAT'S ENTERTAINMENT++++
A collection of musical moments from nearly 100 great MGM films produced between 1928-1959. The singing of Liza Minelli, Frank Sinatra, Judy Garland and "more stars than there are in heaven". Also the offstage music of Cole Porter, the Gershwins, etc. as Frank Sinatra says, "You can wait around and hope...but you won't see the likes of this again." Playing at the Mountain Farms 4.

Student workers hours cut

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

The Campus Center has cut student work hours back to no more than seven in one day and has stopped paying students during their lunch time, Andrea Kemp told the Collegian yesterday.

Andrea Kemp was cited in an article in the Collegian Wednesday as one example of the Campus Center's illegal denial to pay overtime hours at overtime rates.

A Continuing Education student, Kemp works as an Administrative Aide and Supervisor for the Campus Assistance Center, the Lost and Found, and the Student Craft Tables, all of which she calls Student Services in the building.

"The Campus Center has decided to insure that none of its students and employees work overtime by not only cutting a student's hours to eight each day for legal reasons but they have sent a directive to each department for no more than seven" Kemp said.

She said that this was done because by law a worker can stay longer if they feel it is necessary in order to complete their work and the employer has to pay him or her for it. This cutting of hours insures that they don't have to pay overtime, Kemp said.

Kemp herself has been cut from 40 to 35 hours a week. Where nobody had told her exactly when to come in and leave before, Kemp said she has been instructed by her immediate Supervisor, Bernard F. Wilkes, Director of Retail Services, that her work hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 4 daily.

"Sometimes it is difficult to get things done as well as they could be done within seven hours," Kemp said in regard to her own work.

"There was never a written policy on lunches in this situation as far as I know," Kemp said, "But they have decided to stop paying students during their lunch time."

She said that students used to receive pay for lunch time when they worked a day shift since they would punch in in the morning and stay all day.

Now the Campus Center has changed its policy as of this Wednesday to save money and will deduct lunch time from the total hours worked for that day, Kemp said.

"They haven't decided how they are going to eliminate the lunch time from the punch-in time cards yet," Kemp said.

"It's sort of odd that all of a sudden now I am beginning to get co-operation when before I couldn't get some for anything," Kemp said in regard to her own job.

Kemp said that this year, "Because the budget was so tight, things that aren't money-making Student Services have been encouraged to be eliminated, such as the Lost and Found."

She said, "Maybe we are getting co-operation because people are starting to realize that Student Services in the Campus Center are important."

Kemp said that prior to September 1 there was a position, Director of Recreation and Services, who was in charge of the Lost and Found, Campus Assistance Center, Craft Tables and Games and Vending.

Since money is tight, this position was eliminated effective September 1 to shave the budget. The duties were distributed among other Campus Center personnel.

Journalist speaks out

Buttons won't beat inflation

By LARRY CARPMAN
Staff Reporter

Don Luce, the current director of Clergy and Laity Concerned, and the journalist credited with discovering the use of "tiger cages" to punish prisoners in South Vietnam spoke yesterday on the relationship.

Luce, who was "kicked out" of Vietnam because of his stories about the "tiger cases", said: "Our president is urging us to wear "WIN" buttons. (WIN buttons, introduced by President Ford stand for Whip Inflation Now). We're not going to beat inflation by wearing a WIN button," Luce said.

"The real cause of inflation is our military budget of $100 Billion," he said.

Luce spoke specifically about the inflationary aspect of the military budget.

"Take for instance the B-1 bomber," he said. "It will cost the United States $75 billion, which is half the cost of the entire Vietnam war, and by the time it is built and the program is completed it will be obsolete."

Luce also spoke of the current political prisoner situation in South Vietnam during his discussion in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

"A fairly high percentage of political prisoners are shackled in South Vietnam," Luce said. He then pointed out the shackles used on the prisoners are made by a company in Springfield.

Luce, explaining that the large number of political prisoners is due to the morally corrupt regime, indicated 50 prisoners have been released because of direct American concern.

"Representative Abzug recently visited South Vietnam and obtained the release of one political prisoner," Luce said.

According to Luce, Americans should be concerned about the political prisoner situation in South Vietnam because "some of the prisoners were arrested by U.S. soldiers."

Luce then read smuggled letters from prisoners which said: "We are prisoners in South Vietnam arrested without reason and not given fair trials." The letters further explained the various aspects of their lives as prisoners.

Luce predicted a new North Vietnamese offensive if the "U.S continues to send bombs and planes to South Vietnam."

"The U.S. has absolutely no business sending military aid and money to South Vietnam," Luce said.

In a related issue Luce told the COLLEGIAN: "I don't think the President's five per cent surcharge tax plan is necessary."

"It will be used for military expenditures anyway," he said.

Also, in speaking of Ford's amnesty plan Luce said: "His plan is not amnesty at all--the comments sound nice politically."

Luce has been Director of Clergy and Laity Concerned for two months.

White fires at Ford's remarks

BOSTON [AP] — Mayor Kevin H. White yesterday accused President Ford of inflaming resistance to integration and refused to accept any new busing plans until the federal government protects school children.

Meanwhile, sporadic violence continued in a black neighborhood as schools completed their fourth week under an integration plan ordered by a U.S. District Court judge.

Ford told a Washington press conference Wednesday that court ordered busing was not "the best solution to quality education in Boston."

"I have consistently opposed forced busing to achieve racial balance as a solution to quality education and, therefore, I respectfully disagree with the judge's order," Ford said.

White said he would not cooperate with a more extensive intergration program scheduled to begin next September unless the federal government spells out when it will call in troops and marshals and helps pay for police protection.

However, the White House quickly replied that there is no reason for federal help at present.

"There is no reason to send federal marshals" to Boston, said White House Deputy Press Secretary John Hushen. "The maintenance of law and order in Boston is the job first of city authorities and secondly of state authorities."

White said, Ford "encouraged false hopes and fanned the flames of resistance that will almost inevitably lead to further disruption in Boston and will endanger the safety of our school children in the process."

Hushen brushed aside questions about the possibility of Ford's statements bringing more violence. For the first time yesterday 450 state and metropolitan police patrolled the streets and schools of South Boston, the white Irish neighborhood where resistance to integration has centered.

White called the troopers in on the orders of Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr., who issued the plan that required the busing of 18,200 children when schools opened Sept. 12.

Plans for the second phase of Boston school integration are being drawn up by the School Department.

White said, "I will not further support implementation of phase two without greater guarantees given to the local authorities by the federal government to provide total safety for the children."

"I reject the criteria that federal assistance is justified only when a condition of riot and rebellion exists in our streets and when local authority has collapsed," he said.

In a written statement, White charged that Ford was "taunting" Boston into "becoming another Little Rock." President Dwight D. Eisenhower called National Guard and paratroopers into that Arkansas town to oversee school integration in 1957.

Garrity said Wednesday that White should call in suburban police and the National Guard if the city needs more help.

But at his news conference, White said, "I will not at any time put national guards into the streets

Third world stays with UM day care

By CHRIS WILLIAMS AND PATTI KELLEHER
Staff Reporters

The Third World Centers have decided, at least for the time being, to remain within the University Day Care System.

Keryl Thompson, director of Infant Day Care in New Africa House, told the Collegian the Third World centers declined to join the system in the beginning of September because of doubts as to how the system would work.

Parents were upset that their tuition would be going to the university rather than the individual day care centers. Secondly, only two of the centers were represented on the committee. Thirdly, the staff members would have to sign a University contract, which meant that the University would have the option of firing staff members if it chose.

The directors of the centers within the system, Beatrice Blaine of the University Day School, Brad Stocker of Grass Roots, and Janice Rewak of the North Village Center also expressed concern over these issues.

In a meeting last Friday, Dr. Gage reassured the advisory committee that the University would exercise minimum control over the individual day care centers. As a part of the University system the centers would have to follow state health and safety requirements and could not be "exclusive" under federal law. In other words, the centers could not be labeled as being specifically designed for men, women, or any other group. Dr. Gage told the committee that anything else was negotiable.

When told of the concern of the day care centers for representation on the committee, Gage said, "I would be happy to expand the constituency to have all the centers represented."

On the question of hiring staff, Gage said the centers have "free

Cynthia Iris, a 20 year old junior Human Development major, is the first woman to be appointed Student Attorney General.

Last spring, Iris was appointed to the office by Richard Savini, Student Government President.

Iris attributed her success in being selected, to all the time she spent as an advocate, Student Advisor on SGA constitutional law, to Attorney General Jim Papas, last year.

She said, "the biggest thing in my favor was my intimate working knowledge of the office and the unofficial endorsement of Jim Papas."

Diplomacy, working knowledge of the UMass Student Government Constitution, and the ability to work as arbitrator with Whitmore, Campus Center, and Student Body are important qualifications for the attorney general. Someone who has been a judge or advocate has an added advantage.

Iris defined the duties of attorney general. The job entails training advocates, prosecuting violators of the Student Government Constitution on behalf of SGA, RSO (Recognized Student Organizations) or individual students, and interpreting the Constitution when opinion is requested.

The office has been swamped this year with big business from the Student Senate, Campus Center and Greek Council, said the attorney general. Some of the upcoming cases are an International Hearing process, a decision on IPO and RSO groups, and student versus student on a harassment case.

Iris and her advocates are working closely with the Office of Residential Life to help set up judiciary and arbitrary labor boards in the area.

Affirmative Action, women's rights, and the drawing up of a new student code of conduct are two important projects the attorney general plans to become involved with this year.

The present student code of conduct was instituted in 1971. The code which the former Attorney General has been working on for the past two years, was vetoed last spring by President Wood. Iris said she plans to redraft the code, working on the previous one, which she felt was very good.

"The education I am getting at UMass, to prepare me for working after graduation, rests primarily in this office. It has given me real life experiences dealing with people and coping with the real world. Intellectually, I have gotten a good education in classes. I wouldn't rather be anywhere else," Iris said.

Plans made to assist handicapped get ID's

By KATHY SHEEHAN

Peggy Stevens, coordinator of Handicapped Students Affairs has made special arrangements with the I.D. Office at Hampshire House to insure that handicapped students get their pictures taken for the required new identification cards.

Becuase the UMass library's circulation system is becoming totally computerized, new white i.d. cards will be required beginning next semester for all students.

All UMass students have been requested to go to Hampshire House to be photographed for the new I.D. cards, but the building is inaccessible to handicapped persons.

All handicapped students are therefore requested to appear Monday, October 21, at 4 p.m. in Room 227D, Whitmore. The I.D. office will have equipment set up at that time to photograph any students who were unable to go to Hampshire House because of a physical handicap.

Stevens stressed that this may be the only day and the only time that this arrangement will be made. Any handicapped student who can not be present at this specially arranged time is urged to call the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs in Whitmore to discuss his or her problem.

Pharmacy services improve with move

By FRITS GEURTSEN

The UMass Pharmacy will be offering more services in less time as a result of their recent relocation, according to Joseph Pelis, director of Pharmacy Services.

"We've moved from the trailer, which was just a temporary set-up, and are now located directly inside the entrance to the Infirmary," he said.

"Although our staff has not increased, our space has been doubled thus allowing us to serve the University community better," Pelis said, adding that a forthcoming dispensing counter would further help.

The pharmacy currently distributes medications for prescriptions ordered by staff physicians. According to Pelis, 90 per cent of these medications are free to students.

"If students have prescriptions from their family doctors." Pelis said, "we cannot honor them unless the student is checked by one of the Infirmary doctors first and an ok is given."

In addition to those medications which are distributed free of charges, there are also other products, such as acne preparations and first aid supplies, which are sold at cost, he said.

The UMass pharmacy is currently staffed by four registered pharmacists, one aide and a technician. Pelis said that they also have students working there who pick up and deliver orders from other colleges in the Five College area.

Pelis announced that the new pharmacy would be open from 8 to 8:30 Monday through Thursday, from 8 to 7 on Friday, from 9 to 4:30 on Saturdays and Sundays, and from 8:30 to 4:30 on holidays.

The telephone number for University Pharmacy Services is 5-0399.

Dangers of food faddism exposed by expert

By ANN BOSYK
Staff Reporter

"American people need to be better informed of the dangers in today's fad food diets and myths," said Ronald Deutsch, a Nutrition Educator who spoke before a full auditorium in Mahar Wednesday morning.

"Faddism seems to have taken on a pattern of introducing certain foods as the only essential ones, and condemning other foods which would be beneficial to the American diet," he said.

Deutsch, who has worked with the National Nutrition Exchange and wrote the Nutritional Labelling Guidelines for the National Nutrition Consortium, told his audience there are now many "food myths" among American consumers. These myths affect the way people choose their foods. He cited a recent survey which revealed that a large number of consumers are under the wrong impression that "natural" vitamins are better than "man-made" vitamins, chemicals added to foods take away their nutritive value, and foods grown in worn-out soil are less nutritional than those grown in "good" soil.

According to Deutsch the real problem with most fad diets such as Dr. Atkin's high-protein, quick weight-loss diet, is that they recommend certain dietary changes which would not be good for most Americans. Dr. Atkin's diet requires a high amount of protein (which is already too high in most U.S. diets) and a severe cut-down in carbohydrates (which are very important nutritionally.)

Deutsch explained that in reality the effect of organic gardening versus chemical gardening is the same. Nitrogen, which is the most important nutritive element in the soil, has the same effect whether it is found in the soil naturally or if it is added by a commercial fertilizer, he said.

According to Deutsch, there is also no difference in natural or man-made vitamins. Consumers are often fooled into thinking that they are getting more benefits from "natural" vitamins because they cost more.

The term "natural processing" also distorts the real nutritive value of some foods, says Deutsch. "Lots of people pay extra for stone-ground wheat bread because it contains the enzymes which would have been destroyed in higher-temperature steel-grinding processes. But these people don't realize that when the bread is baked at 350 degrees, these enzymes are lost anyway."

Deutsch defended the American food industry by saying, "Without chemical methods of food testing and production, food would be so expensive that there would be a real malnutrition problem in the U.S."

Deutsch is the author of several books, four of which are best sellers: Nuts Among the Berries, The Family Guide to Better Food, Key to Feminine Response in Marriage, and Pairing.

Weekend 5 college bus may run continuously

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

A plan to run the Five College weekend buses continually is being formulated by the Five College Student Coordinating Board's Transportation Committee.

Bob Soule, chairman of the committee, said due to "massive overloading, we are working on a plan to run the buses continually over the weekend."

Soule also said at Wednesday's meeting of the Five College Student Coordination Board, that Northampton commuters now have the option of taking the 8 a.m. public bus to UMass, instead of crowding into the five-college bus.

The public bus, which can be picked up at John L. Greene Hall at Smith, can be taken free of charge by presenting a student I.D. He emphasized however that this only applies to the 8:00 bus.

He also stressed the Campus Center Station is a full time, fuel service bus station. "The bus stops at the UMass Campus Center on both routes all the time."

A proposal to distribute the Collegian to the other four campuses: Amherst, Smith, Hampshire and Mt. Holyoke, was also discussed at the meeting but no final plans were made.

Also proposed was a Five College Guide to student services. The idea, at first applauded by the members, was dampened when Jack Margossian, from the UMass Student Senate suggested that there really wasn't a need because, "between the Valley Advocate and the Collegian there is enough material on student services." The matter will be discussed further at future meetings.

Contradiction marks student living trend

By HUGH OWEN
Staff Reporter

This fall marks the first time since 1970 there has been an increase in requests by students to live in the dorms, according to Ken Dean, director of the Residential Life program.

Contradictory to this, Randy Dahl, of the office of Commuter Affairs, reported that a "growth trend has been established" toward off-campus living.

The dorms are filled close to 100 percent, Dean said, compared with a reported 1000 open spaces in the dorms last spring.

According to figures compiled by the Registrar's Office the total of undergraduate commuter students has increased from 7278 last fall to 7737 today.

The total enrollment of students at UMass has not increased significantly to affect these numbers, Dahl said.

Dahl could give no explanation for this contradiction in numbers cited by the two offices, except that perhaps the two offices "may be counting differently."

Dean said he could give no account for the increase in requests for dorms at UMass.

Three factors involved in the nationwide trend favoring dorm living are increased transportation costs, increased costs in off campus living, and increased food costs, Dean explained.

Direct cause and effect is not applicable at UMass, Dean said. "Transportation costs are not a complete factor here due to the free transportation system."

This year food costs are forecast to go up 16 per cent, according to Dean.

"We are confident we can handle this increase ... and stay where we are on meal ticket prices."

There will not be a dorm increase this year if at all possible, Dean continued. While the increase in dorm occupancy does not mean a decrease in dorm costs, Dean said it will help to alleviate a dorm increase.

If a traditionally marked decrease in dorm occupancy for the spring holds this year, there ~~should be no overcrowding next semester~~, Dean said.

Hills dorm, which was closed last year, was not a "real factor in the situation now," according to Dean.

A recent article in the Springfield Union reported that the shift of students from off- to on-campus housing is apparent at UMass this fall. "I don't think so," Dean said.

Ever wonder who that is always juggling on campus? Here he is again. It's Steve Margil alias "Bounce the Clown".

Tenure, work loads central issues in Faculty Senate meeting

By BILL GONET
Staff Reporter

Tenure and work loads were the main concerns of senators at the Faculty Senate meeting held yesterday afternoon.

The tenure question was introduced by the presentation of a report on the "Non-Tenure Track Proposal", developed last spring by Provost Robert Gluckstern.

In the discussion following the presentation, Professor Stein said that University President Robert Wood's statements regarding the tenure situation at UMass were "contrary to campus practice and therefore causing morale problems".

At Tuesday's press conference, Wood stated that the granting of tenure was getting out of hand with 80 per cent of the staffs of some departments holding tenure.

Stein felt an arbitrary limit on the number of tenured positions available would put young, untenured faculty members in an insecure position.

The report on the "Non-Tenure Track Proposal", which was passed by the Senate, rejected the Provost's plan to set a quota for a number of non-tenure positions each year. The converse of this plan would have arbitrarily limited the number of tenured positions available each year.

Gluckstern's plan was initiated in response to Wood's office's concern that the increased percentage of faculty members holding tenured positions impaired the intellectual vitality of the university.

However, the report on the "Non-Tenure Track Proposal" prepared by members of the Senate's Personnel Policy Committee pointed out that the faculty's intellectual vitality was adequately stimulated by visiting appointments, emergency appointments, and contractually limited appointments.

Although ex-officio Senator Dean Alfange and Senate Secretary David Boothe expressed concern that the tenure granting policy pursued by the Provost's office was contrary to that outlined in the above report, Gluckstern assured the senators that his office would pursue a policy that would conform to the interests of the Senate.

In response to the state legislature's budget amendment that stipulates that University faculty members carry a workload of nine classroom clock hours, the senate passed a report prepared by the rules committee. This report will recommend to the Board of Trustees that other criteria, like administrative duties, research, and graduate studies advisory duties be used for judging faculty work loads.

Rules Committee Chairperson, Professor Frank Hugus, added that he hopes that this bill "will show the Board of Trustees that we are concerned with this issue," and that they will handle this question with our interests in mind.

The Senate also passed a special report on the Graduate Program Review and elected a total of eight members to the Committee on Committees.

Parliament majority gains

Wilson and Labor party lead in Britain

By Wire Services

LONDON — Prime Minister Harold Wilson and his Labor party held a strong lead early today with about two-thirds of the voting districts counted in Britain's Wisis election. He predicted a victory that would enable him to form a majority government.

His chief rival, Conservative party leader Edward Heath, refused to concede defeat. "We battle on!" he said.

Television network computers projected a Laborite victory with an absolute majority of the 635 seats in the House of Commons.

"I now look like forming my fourth administration," Wilson said after winning an impressive victory for his own Commons seat and with about half the 635 election districts reporting.

All the pre-election polls predicted a clear-cut victory for him. He had been heading a minority government since narrowly outpolling the Conservatives in last February's elections.

With 471 of the 635 Commons seats decided, the Laborites had 284, the Conservatives 175, the Liberals 5 and other parties 7.

A total of 318 was needed for a majority.

The third-ranking Liberal party, which had hoped to break out of 50 years in the political doghouse and to sweep back into the big time, apparently failed to do so.

Labor's hopes were boosted when it held the "barometer" voting district of Keighley, in Yorkshire.

"As Keighley goes, so goes the nation" has become a political tradition in Britain in recent years.

Edward Du Cann, chairman of Conservative party rank and file members in parliament, said "This is disappointing but no surprise. Everyone had expected Labor to make gains."

Labor's Deputy Prime Minister Edward Short said a 16-seat majority "will be no problem. In 1964 we governed for 18 months with a majority of five and later of only three."

"It looks as if the electors don't like minority governments or coalitions."

Clemency board announces alternative service reductions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Presidential Clemency Board announced yesterday several factors which could lead to reduced alternate service and pardons for draft evaders and deserters.

Among them are lack of sufficient education or ability to understand the law, personal hardship at the time of offense, and acute mental or physical illness.

Chairman Charles Goodell said the board also would consider alternate service already performed, combat wounds and decorations, service in the war zone, harrassment or inequitable treatment, denial of objector status on technical or improper grounds, imprisonment for the offense and personal explanations for the offense.

Goodell said the board's list of mitigating circumstances was the first step in establishing policy. He said it was not an attempt to swell the trickle of applicants to the board.

Neither he nor President Ford are disappointed by the number — about 400 — who have applied, Goodell told a news conference.

Goodell said he thought the majority of evaders and deserters are hanging back to see how the system works. They "are looking for a track record," he said.

But the "have nothing to lose," in coming to the board, Goodell said.

The board's first priority, he said, is deciding on the fate of 104 men in military and federal prison systems for draft convictions. The board will try to have at least a tentative decision by Oct. 16 when the 30 day furlough granted 86 of these men ends.

The men's files show that they are not bright college students from comfortable homes, but generally poor, under-educated men who are not aware of the workings of the system, he said.

Approximately 8,700 men are believed to be eligible for board action on their convictions. Another 111,000 men who were discharged as undesirable or court martialed for absenteeism are also eligible to apply.

Smallest increase in a year

Price index rises only 0.1% in September

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Reflecting a sharp drop in farm prices and a slowdown in industrial price hikes, the volatile Wholesale Price Index rose by only 0.1 per cent in September - its smallest monthly increase in a year - the Labor Department reported yesterday.

The statistics gave President Ford his first bit of economic good news since taking office. The Dow Jones Industrial average jumped 20.03 points to 651.05. . Observers said the market, which has declined since August, was in position for a sharp rise because of depressed prices.

Because the Wholesale Price Index signals roughly how the prices of consumer goods will increase or decrease at a later date, the small increase last month might be reflected in lower consumer prices later.

But government experts cautioned against viewing the September index as a harbinger of victory in the battle against inflation. They noted that wholesale prices had climbed almost 20 per cent in the past year, that the key index of industrial commodity prices was still going up, and that farm prices could again soar.

"This should not be taken as any portent of a situation in which one could confidently say the rate of increase will continue to subside," one econmist said.

The overall Wholesale Price Index for September was 167.2 meaning wholesale goods that cost $100 in 1967 would now cost $167.20. The increase for the month was the least since October 1973, when there was a 0.1 per cent drop, but the index was still 19.7 per cent higher than a year ago.

On an unadjusted basis, the index actually declined 0.1 per cent. But the seasonally adjusted figure- which showed the 0.1 per cent increase - is considered a better barometer of economic trends.

The September report showed wholesale farm product prices fell 2.8 per cent - sharply reversing a pattern of increases averaging about 7 per cent reported in July and in August. The Labor Department said the drop was chiefly due to lower prices for livestock, grains and oilseeds.

October crop report shows sharp decline

WASHINGTON (UPI) - A forecast of sizeable declines in both corn and soybean crops this year will result in higher retail meat prices in 1975 and 1976, the Agriculture Department predicted yesterday.

Chief Economist Don Paarlberg, who called the October crop estimate report disappointing, described 1974 as "a year when the weatherman pulled all the wrong levers," from spring rains that delayed planting to a summer drought and, finally, premature frost.

He predicted that cutbacks in the major livestock feedcrops would cause "moderate" rises in wholesale beef prices during the next two years. But he refused to give any estimates.

Paarlberg said the new estimates indicating a 1974 corn crop of 4.718 billion bushels and a soybean crop of 1.262 billion bushels were in line with what private grain traders had been expecting.

The corn crop, which dropped 277 million bushels or 6 per cent from September estimates, was late maturing and therefore felt the brunt of premature frost that struck throughout the Midwest on Sept. 21 and 22.

The soybean crop, down 53 million bushels or 4 per cent from September, reflected deterioration from repeated frost as well.

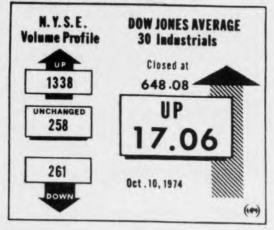
Greenspan sees inflation drop of only 2 or 3 points next year

WASHIMGTON (UPI) - The government's top economist said yesterday that the "meaningful" decline in the inflation rate next spring predicted by President Ford will amount to a decline of two or three percentage points from the current 12 to 14 per cent.



Alan Greenspan, Ford's chief economist as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, said he foresaw slowdown in the rate of inflation by spring - but a dropoff of only two or three percentage points.

He hinted that in the meantime the 14 per cent rate reflected in the consumer price index may stay at its high level or even climb since "so much of the CPI is food."

"We see light at the end of the tunnel, but the only thing is that you don't know how long the tunnel is," Treasury Secretary William E. Simon told reporters.

In other economic developments, Charman Arthur F. Burns of the Federal Reserve System, disagreeing with President Ford, said the country was now in a recession. But he said he did not agree with those who think it will get much worse.

Ford, at his news conference Wednesday, predicted a "meaningful reduction" in the rate of inflation by early 1975 if Congress and the public go along with his anti-inflation program.

But Ford's proposal to impose a 5 per cent surtax on middle and upper-level incomes came under new attack.

Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, in his first public statement on the tax proposal, said it would be a "cruel burden" for working people and of little help in fighting inflation.

Report charges GSA with illegal hiring

WASHINGTON (UPI) - A congressional report said yesterday the General Services Administration broke federal hiring laws to get government jobs for political favorites of Nixon administration officials and politicians.

Rep. David Henderson, D-N.C., said there was evidence of similar lawbreaking in other government agencies.

The previously classified report said such "special treatment" had been accorded a number of persons referred by Sen. Hugh Scott, R-Pa., and to men who had worked as chauffeurs for former Attorney General John N. Mitchell and Nixon campaign aide Jeb Stuart Magruder.

The report was prepared by Civil Service Commission investigators in September 1973 for the House Subcommittee on Manpower and Civil Service and made public yesterday by subcommittee Chairman Henderson.

Campaign reform bill given final approval

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A comprehensive political reform bill, including taxpayer subsidies for presidential candidates, yesterday received final congressional approval, but was not immediately sent to the White House.

The legislation cracks down on "fat cat" contributors, sets stingy ceilings on candidate spending, and creates a commission to enforce the reforms.

Despite some Republican grumblings, the House approved the measure 365 to 24. It was approved by the Senate earlier this week 60 to 16.

The bill was not immediately sent to the White House because Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said he wanted assurances that President Ford would sign it and not exercise a "pocket veto" while Congress is in recess for the pre-election period.

There were strong indications that Ford would sign the bill. Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott predicted presidential approval and House GOP Leader John J. Rhodes, who originally opposed the bill voted for it.

Under provisions of the bill, Democratic and Republican presidential candidates would each get $20 million for their general election campaigns. Each party would also get $2 million to stage their conventions.

The bill also provides up to $5 million for each candidate in the primaries with the government matching any donation of $250 or less after the first $100,000 is raised in private contributions.

All the money would come from the $1 checkoff provision on individual income tax return forms, now, in operation for three years, which is projected to reach a total of $75 million by 1976.

Contributions by an individual to a single candidate would be limited to $1,000 in the primary and $1,000 in the general election with a limit of $25,000 to all candidates in a year.

Kissinger talks

CAIRO (AP) - Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger met with Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy on yesterday, the second day of his new round of Middle East peace talks.

Kissinger exuded friendship for Egypt and the Arab people in a speech to the staff of the U.S. Embassy. Standing on the front steps in bright sunshine, he declared, "We have no conflicting interests."

Turkey to get aid?

WASHINGTON (UPI) - A compromise resolution permitting a temporary continuation of U.S. military aid to Turkey was sent to the floor of the House yesterday in an effort to encourage a permanent Cyprus peace.

The House Rules Committee voted 8 to 6 in favor of the joint resolution, passed Wednesday by the Senate. It will be debated in the House today President Ford has already threatened to veto another congressional resolution cutting off all military aid to the Ankara government because of its use of American arms in the attack on Cyrpus.

PANAMA CITY (UPI) - The Panama National Guard held seven kidnaper guerrillas from the Dominican Republic at an undisclosed location yesterday and said they were being shielded for their own protection and given medical check-ups.

In Santo Domingo, the seven former hostages of the terrorists, including U.S. embassy information officer Barbara Hutchison, were resting up from nearly two weeks of captivity in the Venezuelan consulate with a minimum of food and water.

Mrs. Ford goes home

WASHINGTON (UPI) – Doctors yesterday cleared Betty Ford to return home today after two weeks' hospitalization for breast cancer surgery and President Ford said his wife is "raring to go."

Ford, busy all week with economic policy planning and political campaigning, made his first hospital visit since Sunday and confirmed reports she has recovered well enough to come home today.

Outside Dorchester High School, two white girls were beaten yesterday by a gang of blacks. They were hospitalized with multiple bruises but were not seriously hurt.

At Codman Square, a few blocks away, police chased away black youths who were stoning passing cars.

Three black teenagers were arrested for trespassing at English High in Roxbury when they tried to walk into the school after it was cleared for a false fire alarm.

Throughout the city, attendance yesterday was 65 per cent, compared with 60 per cent on Wednesday.

In the incident at Dorchester High, the two girls were rescued by players on the school's integrated football team. The 25-member team was practicing nearby when it saw the attack and rushed to the girls' aid.

Jordan labels Boston racist

DALLAS (AP) — The violence in Boston arising from court-ordered busing is an expression of Northern racial hyprocrisy, says Vernon Jordan, executive director of the National Urban League.

"It will give us a chance to see how northern liberals will react," the black leader said during a Dallas visit.

Jordan said the violence in Boston also justifies southern suspicions about the North.

The situation in "Boston says the South has no monopoly on meanness and repression..." he said, "and to those people who in the 1960's pointed to the South with an accusing finger of morality and Constitution, the chicken has come home to roost.

"Now it is Boston, the heart of the abolitionists."

Jordan's trip to Dallas was to solicit corporate financial backing of Urban League programs.

He said the Urban League in the 1970's is facing issues that transcend race. He emphasized the organization's goals for "people programs" such as full employment and national health insurance.

Union for students is organizing projects goal

By ROSEMARIE ELLIS
Staff Reporter

The Student Organizing Project, (S.O.P.), a group founded last spring for the purpose of securing students' rights and serving students' interests, is now under way developing various programs on campus.

It's goal is to involve and unionize students in order that they may better control their lives at the University, organizers say.

The S.O.P. has recently undergone an organizing campaign to start a Student Union. The campaign consisted of membership recruitment activities within all the dormitories. Eventually, they plan to have a network of members representing the dorms, living areas, academic departments, graduate students, student employees, and other interest groups.

Last Friday the UMass Student Credit Union Coalition, another program sponsored by the S.O.P., had a meeting for the completion of the preliminary by-laws of the Credit Union Coalition and the election of Coalition officers.

Peter Birnbaum was elected President and Cindy Spearing was elected Secretary-Treasurer. Now, the Credit Union is ready to begin enlisting volunteers so that the Union can begin serving the students.

A Financial Aid Task Force, which would act as a medium between the administration and those students receiving financial aid, is developing. The Task Force would help in eliminating many of the problems and obstacles students face when attempting to obtain financial aid for their education.

The Student Organizing Project will be expanding its Resource Center in the Student Union to include a mobile Resource Center that will be able to educate students about the many activities of the S.O.P. Also, students who are interested in becoming involved in the Project will have a more easily accessible information center to go to.

A Bail Fund that would primarily be used to bail University students out of jail is an idea that is currently being discussed among the offices of the S.O.P.

The S.O.P. is sponsoring a movie Thursday about Kent State in the Campus Center concourse. Afterwards, those interested can meet and discuss the incident.

Fine arts director views cultural complex

By MARA KLEIN
Staff Reporter

Situated in a cluttered, unpretentious office in South College is Frederick Steinway, the director of the Fine Arts Center.

A member of the UMass administration since June 1, Steinway sees himself as the overall administrator of the cultural complex. His three main functions are to oversee the activities of the three academic departments housed in the building, to supervise the operation and use of the concert hall and Bowker Auditorium, and to work with the director of the art gallery contained in the facility.

The departments housed in the building will look after their own concerns; however a Fine Arts Center Council has been established, which will coordinate the cultural activities of the three departments. Steinway is a member of this committee along with members from the various departments.

The concert hall and Bowker Auditorium, the two main public performing arts facilities on campus, are also under Steinway's supervision, since he will be working with the technical and production crews.

Along with the director of the art gallery and a policy making committee, Steinway will be trying to bring visual art shows on campus, plus house and exhibit the university's art collection which is presently scattered in storage rooms, and offices. Currently an inventory of the collection is being made.

After graduating from Columbia and obtaining his MA from Harvard, Steinway embarked on his career in the arts with his family's piano company: Steinway and Sons. After working his way up from production trainee to manager of the concert and artist department, he formed his own national concert artist management organization along with four other people.

Directly before coming to UMass he was executive director for the National Orchestral Association, an independent, non-profit corporation which helps train young instrumentalists and conductors.

A native of New York, Steinway and his wife are currently settling in the area. About a year from new we'll see the culmination of his hard work with the opening of the 16-million dollar facility.

Parade chairperson seeks participants

By TONY BATTISTA
Staff Reporter

The 1974 Homecoming Parade will be held Friday, October 25 at 7 p.m. Arrangements are under the direction of Mark McDonough, Activities Chairperson of the Greek Council.

"All dorms and organizations are urged to participate," McDonough said. Applications will soon be available from each of the Area Directors and the Student Activities Office.

Trophies will be awarded for the best float in both the Greek and the non-Greek divisions. In addition, a trophy for the most unusual float will be awarded.

"Unfortunately, there were no entries in the non-Greek division last year," McDonough said. The winner in the Greek division was Phi Sigma Kappa.

McDonough emphasized that many small things still remain to be worked out. Within the next two weeks all plans will be finalized and publicized in the Collegian.

Anyone having questions about the parade can contact McDonough at 5-0174.

Who's who candidates sought by committee

By LINDA BROWER
Staff Reporter

This fall, UMass juniors and seniors can represent the University in Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges.

Application sheets will be available Friday, in 420 Student Union (Student Government office).

A selection committee will pick 48-50 juniors and seniors who have exhibited academic excellence along with active participation in extra-curricular and community activities.

Cindy A. McGrath, Speaker of the Student Senate, is organizing the selection committee, which will consist of one senate member, one Greek member, one area government president, one Third World representative, one Media Member (Collegian or WMUA), one Student Activities member and four students.

McGrath believes these various group members would "represent everyone's interests without drawing on any one group or activity."

Campus Comments

By JIM PAULIN
And BOB SMERLING

In spite of having one of the best teams in New England, UMass skaters are forced to practice and play at Amherst College's inadequate Orr Rink. Meanwhile, UMass Boston is constructing a multi-million dollar sports complex which will include a 1000 seat hockey rink. Campus Comments wanted to know what students felt about this lack of a rink on this campus.

The question: Do you think UMass Amherst should build a hockey rink?

Annie Goldstein - Junior majoring in music from Newton living in North Hadley. Considering the amount of people here interested in hockey, there should definitly be a rink provided for everybody, not just the hockey team.

John Wilson - Graduate student studying Sociology from Philadelphia living in Greenfield. I really don't have an opinion one way or the other. I'm not that much of a sports enthusiast, really.

Steve Wajda - Freshman majoring in Animal Sciences from New Bedford living in Washington - Southwest. I would get an Ice rink, because they have to pay for ice time at Amherst. So the money they pay for ice time can be used for their own rink. If they held their hockey games here, students would get more involved and the whole spirit would go up.

Rona Rubin - Graduate student studying Communications Disorders from Fairlawn, N.J. living in Springfield. I don't see why not. It's just a matter of money. I don't see where they'll get the money ... maybe the students could come up with some way of getting the money.

Steve Thompson - former UMass Geography student from Hyde Park. I really don't have much of a comment on the sports aspect of the campus. I don't follow sports much at all. They have a really nice stadium but I don't follow football.

Donna Jones - Junior from Freeport N.Y. majoring in Art, living in Coolidge - Southwest. I think that they should because its a big enough school and we have so much emphasis on our sports that hockey should also have their own facilities.

Letters to the editor

Stamp out smoking

To the Editor:

I wish to appeal to the nonsmokers of the community. We can halt smoking in the UMass classroom. If we band together, we are a force the University of Massachusetts cannot ignore. In this era of new awareness to the dangers of smoking it is time for nonsmokers to become militant if necessary.

There is a student-faculty health board whose task it is to look out for the health of the students. If we can attend these meetings they will be forced to recommend strict enforcement of the long ignored "no smoking" signs on the walls of classrooms. Those students with respiratory ailments such as asthma should definitely attend, for although there are some who still dispute the findings of the researchers as to the ill effects of smoking, the health board cannot deny that smoking in poorly ventilated classrooms does pose a threat to the comfort of these people. Professors can and should be forced to enforce the no smoking rule. Due to fire laws, it is now illegal to smoke in some University buildings.

Those who wish the Advisory Board to act in the interests of non-smokers should attend the next meeting. Watch for an announcement of the date and time in the Collegian.

This letter is also directed at Mr. Bromery and the former head of Health Services, Dr. Gage. I dare you to show that you are actually concerned with the welfare of students on this campus. Put an end to smoking in classrooms now!

Dormitory dilemma

To the Editor:

The article on dorm financing seems to put down the investors who risked their money for the financing of dormitories. State bonds are sold to finance the construction of state buildings. This is how many new buildings in cities were built, and how many of the buildings at UMass were financed, dorms among them. These state bonds are available for anyone to purchase. However, because the top firms in the country buy these bonds it is a cause for public outcry. Just because the Chase Manhatten Bank, Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith, Morgan Guaranty and Trust Company and others bought these bonds, does that make bond financing of buildings wrong? The interest on these bonds are tax-exempt, a fact that has allowed MANY Americans to profit, not just the top banks in the country.

The article says that the payment of interest on state bonds is bad. But how else could these buildings have been built? The state could pay for them, but then we would have higher taxes. Or the students could pay for the buildings, which is how the Campus Center was financed. We know where that got us, don't we.

It is unfortunate that 60 per cent of dorm fees go to the payment of these bonds, and not to the students. But without these bonds there would be no dorms, hence no students.

Stifled by senate

To the Editor:

Would somebody PLEASE tell me what one has to do to get something done around here? I have been getting the run around to the max from the Student Senate.

Let me start from the beginning. It took the Senate all of last semester and all last summer and practically half of this semester just to decide if the Asian American Student Association could have "Recognized Student Organization" status. Finally, after more trips to that damn Senate office than to all my classes put together, they told me that our application had been lost along with our budget proposal and constitution. I'm sure they must be just as sick of seeing me up there as I am of them. They did find it stuffed in some remote corner.

And now I receive a letter saying that funding is impossible from them or anyone else on the UMass campus. Would they like us to sell raffles every week to make money to use?

The Asian American Student Association is a relatively new group that is striving to help the university understand a very misunderstood race of people. We want you to understand our culture. We are striving to create an awareness for the rest of the community of the unique combination of cultures which we share.

I am sick of being shafted at this university and I am sick of Third World people getting the raw end or no end at all of the deal.

How many yellow faces do you see as you walk around campus? The university accepted approximately 16 Asian freshmen out of a class of a probable 4-5 thousand.

We are outnumbered on this "pure" white campus by 240-1. And how much of the worlds population do Asians comprise? I am talking about not just Chinese or Japanese, but Hawaiians, Samoans, Filipinos, and other Pacific Island people, Thais, Vietnamese, Koreans, and many, many other Asians.

So, Jack Margossian and Karin Croft, I don't want to come up and shake your hands another 12 times and act like we're old friends and all that other crap you believe in because I have had it. If we even get some responsible people in the Student Senate office, maybe, just maybe, my attitudes will change.

Students integrity threatened

"Only the educated are free."
—Epictetus

You've seen the scenario a million times, or at least a few if you haven't been here very long. It's the first day of class and your new professor, a relatively friendly looking person, walks in. Everyone receives a syllabus for the course, the still unspeaking professor handing them out personally.

He settles into his seat, smiling at the assemblage of students around him who have undoubtedly come to this class because he is such a widely loved personality on campus. He utters his first words: "First, I'd like to tell you the bad ~~news about this course,~~ then I'll tell you the good news. You must attend class. Failure to attend will result in a lowering of your final grade at the rate of 5 per cent per missed class. Written assignments are due every Tuesday. No excuses for lateness will be accepted. There will be a quiz every Thursday, a mid-term, a final, and a ten page paper due on or before October 30th on a subject which has my prior approval.

"Now for the good news. Follow the rules and you'll get a good grade."

This insult to a student's integrity is played out in various forms an alarming amount of times here. It is the product of a two pronged problem, and both sides of that problem, student and professor, are in bad need of a little awareness in order to eliminate it.

The obvious problem with students is that for the most part we stay in our seats when that sort of line comes out of a professor. This is part of the deeper problem that we share of not seeing ourselves as consumers, but as children here to be educated by those who are qualified to do it.

The proper ending to the scenario would be for the students to assert their rights, and if necessary leave the course for a more tolerable alternative. A professor with no students is an unemployed professor, tenure notwithstanding, and more professors need to get the message that students are going to be a force in determining their own educations.

The professor's problem ties in with this very neatly, it being simply that professors need to know that they are not here to shovel the same old shit that's stifled any attempt at real education for years. Instead, they should get into being more responsive to the needs of their students. In the early stages of such a change this would entail helping students to realize that they should control their destiny at this level. Yes, I'm implying a cooperative effort, something that seems increasingly less likely in these days of faculty and student unionization. While students should realize that they're the niggers of the relationship, they should also realize that professors were brought up in the same system, and that while their rights are a priority the adjustment on the part of the professors will not be the easiest thing in the world to make.

Of course, there will be students who still insist on having everything fed to them, on the theory that slavery the easy way is better than freedom the hard way. There will also be professors who will feel that it is an infringement on their academic freedom if they're not allowed to base their teaching on repressive educational theories straight out of the Neanderthal Age. To those students I leave the wasted potential of your minds. To the professors I leave a spot in the unemployment line, hopefully.

To anyone who's willing to try, I leave you the future. You're the only hope for it.

Thoughts for Columbus Day

The discovery of the New World called America is one of the most important and celebrated happenings of humankind. Perhaps the place which more countries claim to have discovered, and obviously, the land which has more people from all over the world.

When Christopher Columbus, (Cristobal Colon) arrived in this Hemisphere in 1492, there were some civilizations in which technology and social structures were better than some European countries of the time, and perhaps better than some contemporaneous societies.

Despite the many discoveries America still should be discovered again. And some happenings show that direction: For example the end of the boycott against Cuba. American countries should be able to recognize that in the Hemisphere the solution of the socio-economical problems of at least one country, could be a different system than the one used in the rest of the Hemisphere. The recognition of Cuba is significant because that country has resolved many problems that other countries could apply in the same type of government. For example United States is awaking to the needs of recycling many materials which had been considered as re-usable. Other countries have been recycling mostly everything, and the closest example is Cuba. In educations Cuba accomplished the great task of educating the great majority of the population in only a couple of years.

There are other issues of great importance such as the prices of oil from the Latin countries. Many countries, especially Venezuela, claim that they should receive a higher price since oil represents one of the sources in overcoming their underdevelopment.

In this same area of energy many Latin countries had nuclear research plants to study the possibilities of using reactors for peaceful purposes. The creation of new sources of energy, with more resources for education, could be a step in the right direction in speeding the development of the Latin American countries.

Another important event is the meeting held a couple of weeks ago between Dr. Kissinger, the Latin American Ambassadors and the Governor of Puerto Rico. Even the fact that Puerto Rico had claimed to be the cultural bridge of the two Americas, they had never allowed Puerto Rico to directly participate in the Hemispheric affairs. And it is important for Puerto Rico, and the Puerto Rican people to participate in the making of political and economic policies which affect the Hemisphere. This would show a change of attitude of the U.S. toward its non defined status territories.

The rediscovery of America is needed to assure that all the Hemisphere is moving toward the achievement of complete development. Because in the long range the total development of each country in the Hemisphere will be determined by the creation of solutions for population growth, political stability, and human rights.

This is an individual and collective responsibility that we must achieve.

Columbus Day should be a time to reflect on United States treatment toward Latin America

CC to ante up

In order to protect the American laborer, a number of laws have been set up to be sure that the worker is not taken advantage of by an all too shrewd businessman. Unfortunately, however, it seems that no matter how many laws are set up, they are going to be "overlooked" by the dishonest or negligent employer.

Such has been the case, evidently for years now, with the Campus Center. Although being compelled by law to pay the employee time-and-a-half for any hours worked over forty within one week, the Center has attempted to sidestep that law by holding any excess hours within a given week, and tacking them on to future weeks when the employee might have worked less than forty hours.

Not only is the practice illegal, but villainously immoral as well. The legal and proper way to avoid paying the worker any overtime pay, would have been simply to not hire anyone for over forty hours per week. This is apparently what the Center had originally intended to do, as is evidenced by the fact that each employer, before starting work, had signed a paper stating that he was not compelled to work overtime.

Obviously "not being compelled" and "not being allowed" are two very different things. The fact that a number of workers went ahead and worked overtime, bears this point out.

It would be pleasantly refreshing to assume that the Center will now go ahead, and not only pay those who come in and request money owed, but also pour through old records and seek out those past employees who have money coming to them. Personnel Director Timothy Cox has stated that "We will tell anyone who comes in that all of the records will be reviewed - not just by request only. We will review all the records that we have."

Pleasantly refreshing, but also quite ludicrous. Without a doubt, a number of past workers will never see the money owed them.

One may take consolation in the fact, at least, that the problem has been recognized, and evidently permanently corrected.

Caution must be taken, however, from Cox's statement that "From this time on there will be no more overtime." Surely on occasion the situation will arise where a worker will be needed to work more than forty hours in a given week.

Here's hoping anyway, that the improprieties of the past will not be repeated.

The woods are lovely, dark - and full of solitude

By GILBERT J. SALK

Gil Salk, a UMass graduate writes a weekly column.

Autumn, the prelude to winter drowsiness.....

Autumn has a way of pulling me back into the woods, after the mosquitos have successfully chased me out for the major part of the summer. Weekend before last, even with the rain, was a kind of homecoming as the woods and I renewed an old friendship.

To my mind, the woods, swamps, and fields are the most relaxing and exciting places to spend my time.

On a rainy day the woods are dark, but the colors become brighter by comparison, and the faint mist creates a sense of solitude and peacefulness. Many different varieties of mushrooms add their accent to the leaves on the ground, and there's the silent swoop of an owl in the trees overhead.

The rain fills the streams, and the waterfall is more spectacular than usual. Walking around a beaver pond reveals another one beyond it, and yet another beyond that, and in the middle we can see jays storing nuts for the winter. Chipmunks scurry over rocks and up trees, and there are unidentified noises deeper into the woods.

And everywhere, there are birds, and caterpillars preparing to build their cocoons, and leaves falling silently and acorns falling noisily.

I think about the beauty around me, and wonder what it was like a hundred years ago before pesticides and super-highways and snowmobiles.

I wonder how long we can continue to tamper with the environment before it rebels. Look at what we do to it.

We use massive doses of insecticides to "control" insects. The insecticides kill insects, but they also kill birds. Thus, there are fewer natural enemies for the insects, which reproduce at a much faster rate than do birds. The insecticides also seem to weaken the shells of birds' eggs, causing them to be crushed by the weight of the parent. This, also, reduces the population of the natural control. As a final indignity to the birds, the insecticide also eliminates their food, so they are in greater danger of starving to death.

This creates a cycle which could be deadly. As we continue to deplete the natural controls on insects, we create an environment which favors their rapid reproduction. This, in turn, necessitates expanded use of insecticides, further decimating the bird population. There are many species of birds whose very existence is threatened by these ignorant practices. The bald eagle is an endangered species. Other large birds are facing the same problem.

The difficulty is that most pesticides have a very slow rate of deterioration. An insect which has ingested the chemical retains it, and when it is eaten by a bird, the chemical simply enters the bird's system. Over an extended period of time, when the bird has eaten thousands of such insects, the poison becomes of sufficient quantity in the bird to become a danger to it.

The problem goes beyond danger to birds, also. Many insects are beneficial to man. They are indispensible for polinating plants. They are part of the food cycle for many animals. They eat other "harmful" insects.

It is difficult to predict the dangers attendant to our meddling in this particular ecosystem, but the very fact that we can't accurately predict should be enough to make us go very slowly. Instead, every time a particular insect gets troublesome, a great cry goes up for renewed use of chemical controls. If we simply let nature take it's course, the increase in the numbers of an insect species would mean more food for it's natural enemies. This in turn would lead to an increase in the population of that species until the numbers of the offending insect were reduced.

It's a very simple cycle which has been working effectively for more years than man has been on earth.

My appreciation of this problem, and the fear that it may damage what little wilderness and wildlife we have left, spring from a growing association with the world outdoors. There's no substitute for getting out and experiencing it firsthand, but there is a publication which serves to beautifully augment that experience.

It's a free bi-monthly magazine called Massachusetts Wildlife. It is published by the Mass. Division of Fisheries and Game. Subscriptions can be obtained by writing to the Information and Education Section, Fish and Game Field Headquarters, Westboro, Mass. 01581. Be sure to include your ZIP code.

This beautiful little magazine carries a wealth of information about the wildlife, woods, and environment in Massachusetts. It is extremely ecology-conscious, and carries any informative article on the state of the environment throughout the nation.

They are not "purists" in the sense that they will satisfy neither those who feel the wilderness should be left totally alone nor those who believe in exploiting all the natural resources that can possibly bring profit. But their criticisms of both sides are very well reasoned, and they approach a balance which seems to be workable and responsible.

The magazine also carries a large number of photographs, most of them by Jack Swedberg. Swedberg is a top-notch nature photographer, and his photos alone are a compelling reason to subscribe to the magazine.

It's entertaining, informative, and free. Giver that combination, how can you go wrong? Write soon and subscribe. Peace.

reign over the make-up of their staff," as long as the hiring policies meet with state and federal regulations.

In the subsequent interview with the Collegian, Thompson said she was satisfied with the committee set-up as long as it included parents and staff from each center. Her center is planning to move into Melville House this Sunday if the facilities there are acceptable to the building inspector.

The New World Center in MacKimmie House is also being inspected for safety. Space will be found elsewhere on campus if the present location is found unacceptable.

Thompson also stressed that she had a lot of co-operation from many people, including Dr. Gage, Helen Hill of the Commuter Affairs Office and Terry Dumas from the School of Education.

World's tallest library to be dedicated

The library which the "Guinness Book of Records" calls "the tallest library in the world" will be dedicated here Saturday, Oct. 19.

Within the 28-story red brick structure, which rises 296 feet, four inches, a dedication ceremony will begin at 10:30 a.m. Remarks will be made by UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery; Former Chancellor Oswald Tippo, new Commonwealth Professor of Botany at UMass; Kenneth Freed, student representative to the Faculty Senate Library Committee; and UMass Trustee Frederick S. Troy. All events of the day are open to the public.

At 2:30 p.m. the library will present a panel discussion of "The Management of University Libraries in the mid-1970's." Panel moderator will be John P. McDonald, library director at the University of Connecticut. Panelists will be: Warren J. Haas, vice president and director of libraries at Columbia University, with the manager's view; Michael R. W. Bommer, assistant professor at Clarkson College of Technology, with an analysis for better library management; Burton I. Wolfman, Massachusetts undersecretary of educational affairs, with a look at academic libraries in the state; and Philip J. McNiff, director and librarian at the Boston Public Library.

Tours of the building will be offered Oct. 19 from 9 to 10:30 a.m. and regularly scheduled tours are given each Wednesday afternoon at 2:30.

The library, which opened its doors for students in fall, 1973, has approximately 1.6 million books, microfilms and periodicals. There's room for growth with the library's potential capacity of two and a half million volumes. There are enough seats to accommodate 3,000 readers at one time.

Ground for the $16.8 million library was broken in 1969. Daniel O'Connell's Sons of Holyoke built it according to design by Architect Edward Durell Stone who also designed the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington and the Gallery of Modern Art in New York City.

Officials attribute this to the more accessible stacks of books, wider aisles, and non-crowded shelves of the new building. Some days as many as 8,000 people are counted by the turnstiles.

After being in existence four weeks, the UMass Food Stamp Program will have a third and hopefully final home. Next Tuesday they are scheduled to move into offices in Munson Hall.

The program began in the Student Union and then was moved to Whitmore, but these areas turned out to be temporary. With all the Munson office space the program will gain, there will be plenty of room for the food stamp workers.

Approximately 450 of the 3,000 applications that have been picked up by UMass students have already been completed and returned for processing.

Organization of the program has been revamped several times, causing it to move more slowly than anticipated. According to Helen Hill of the Commuter Student Affairs Office, one of the University offices involved with the program, lack of permanent space has been a major concern. Each move has temporarily disrupted the program.

In spite of some minor problems, the program is progressing. David Clark, the on-campus representative from the Springfield Welfare Office, has been working with the program for the past two weeks. He is now training on-campus persons to handle the application process. Clark is optimistic that once the training period is over the program will be running smoothly.

Many students who thought they would be ineligible for food stamps have found they qualify for at least some assistance. The two major disqualifiers for students have been either the student has a meal ticket or is being claimed by a parent as a dependent for tax purposes.

Clark has found the UMass offices that are working with the program most cooperative. The Financial Aid Office, Veteran's Affairs, Commuter Student Affairs, Student Organizing Project, Bursar's, and Commuter Assembly have all helped the Welfare Office since the program began.

The UMass Food Stamp Program is unique Clark added, because the Welfare Office is working on a college campus in conjunction with University departments. It is hoped by Hill and Clark that this program will be a permanent service for UMass students.

This Wonderful Old Mill Wants to Introduce Itself . . .

HI!
The Old Mill

The Old Mill

It has been, for many years, a country store — plus, catering to the selective tastes and cravings of Amherst. Where else can you find flower presses imported from Europe, pine incense that smells like you have the fireplace burning, or Racey Helps postcards (you know, that English artist who draws animals all dressed up and acting like human beings).

The friendly people who work in the store encourage browsing through this rambling old mill. Through the stationery and greeting card room (the nicest selection in the area!). To the clothes department, featuring the best in distinctive country clothes. Through the room that is stocked to the rafters with an extensive selection of candies and spices. And finally to the ultimate gift room, which has everything from Pewter, Copper, Stainless Steel table and cooking wares to spirits hip flasks to Winnie the Pooh books.

The store is a quick five minute ride from campus. Or take the UMass bus that goes past Puffton Village into North Amherst. Or just walk — The Old Mill is really closer than Amherst Center to Campus. The Old Mill is just one-half mile past Puffton Village, directly after the North Amherst Post Office.

Afro-American WFCR offers music series

Classical music and the Afro-American, a new musical series, will be broadcast on Sunday evenings at 6:30 on WFCR (88.5 FM), the Five-College station at the University of Massachusetts.

In each of the hour-long programs, George Shirley, one of the most renowned tenors of the international stage, will introduce other Afro-American artists, including Marian Anderson, Todd Duncan, Henry Lewis, Natalie Hinderas, McHenry Boatwright, Leontyne Price and Andre Watts.

Shirley will also introduce serveral very gifted young Afro-American artists who are just on the threshold of promising careers in classical music. Many of them will be performing their national public broadcasting debuts.

The series presents outstanding music, much of it not available on record, performed live by accomplished artists, and it offers young people, especially young Afro-Americans, positive goals and encouragement for those among them who aspire to careers in classical music.

Yoga lecture featured at three colleges

Acarya Visnu Preya, an Ananda Marga yogini, will be speaking on yoga meditation and philosophy, and its social implications Monday night in the Colonial Lounge, UMass from 7 - 9 PM.

On Tuesday at 8 PM in Merrill Science Hall, Lecture room 3 at Amherst College the lecture will be repeated.

Tues. from 4:30 - 6:00 PM, she will speak on yoga postures and diet at Franklin-Patterson room 108, Hampshire College. The public is welcome at no charge.

Arts series opens

Training sessions designed to inspire, support, and help persons interested in establishing an imaginative arts program within their community are offered through the second annual Community Arts Leadership Workshop series sponsored here by the Arts Extension Service of the Division of Continuing Education.

Made possible through the support of the National Endowment for the Arts and the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, this year's workshops will begin with a free introductory session Tuesday, at the UMass Campus Center, room 904-908. The series will continue on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, 7 to 10 p.m., from Oct. 22 through Dec. 10, with a workshop fee of $25 with credit options available for a small additional fee.

Further information is available from the Arts Extension Service, Draper Annex, telephone 545-2013.

Amherst College station gets power boost

By MARK GREENE
The Amherst Student

After four years of legal and technical wrangling, the student-operated FM radio station at Amherst College will get its long awaited power boost in order to reach the entire Amherst area, including UMass.

WAMH, 89.3 megacycles on the left of the FM band has been operating at ten watts transmitter power. The boost, to 150 watts, will include a switch to stereo transmission.

Last week the Pelham Zoning Board of Appeals cleared the station's proposal to erect new transmitting facilities atop Mount Lincoln. The plan was given approval under a section of the zoning code providing special exception to educational institutions such as Amherst.

"We have received a construction permit from the Board of Selectmen," College General Secretary John Callahan said Friday. This allows the radio station to proceed with installation of its new 100-foot broadcasting tower.

"The station is all set from the technical end," according to WAMH General Manager Andy von Salis. He expects clearing of the Mount Lincoln site to begin within a week, with groundbreaking to follow shortly thereafter. Installation and connection of the tower should be completed in about three weeks.

"We hope to be broadcasting from our new antenna in early November," von Salis said.

When the hike finally comes it will represent both a 15-fold increase in wattage and a conversion from mono to stereo signals. This is expected to extend WAMH's coverage signifantly beyond the Five-College area, von Salis said.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Friday, October 11

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A chance to increase your income makes this an exciting day. You may be disappointed by another's lack of interest in the evening, however.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — There is no place for self-deprecation today. You have an opportunity for gain; take it, or you will regret not doing so later on.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Though change may not actually be called for where your plans for the immediate future are concerned, you may wish to effect them on your own.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Unless you can act quickly when the chips are down, you may be in for disappointment this morning. Make an effort to see everything at once.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — A day which calls for exceedingly wise business decisions. You will not be able to ride on your reputation now—not even for a moment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The opportunity that comes your way this morning won't come again for a long, long time. Be careful of the decision you make regarding it.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You would do well to take loved ones into your confidence, especially should plans for a change involve their ease and common well-being.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Lend a sympathetic ear to one whose difficulties outweigh yours by a good bit. You may not be able to grant material aid, however.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Put on a show of interest even if you can't really feel yourself involved either mentally or emotionally. Another needs to feel your support.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Relations with partners, whether of a business or domestic nature, may be a bit "sticky" today. Make an effort to appear calm, cool, and collected.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A morning mood of depression must not be allowed to dominate the entire day. Reconsider your decision in favor of a change in your activities.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Make a start in the right direction today where new friends are concerned. You can do yourself a lot of good if you will be tactful in criticism.

"West" series a toss-up

By STEWART SLAVIN

LOS ANGELES (UPI) -- Some sports writers are already calling the 1974 World Series the "Freeway Series" because it's a 390-mile drive from Oakland to Los Angeles down California's heartland along Interstate 5.

But the Oakland A's took no time for a leisurely drive Thursday - they arrived here by jet for their Saturday appointment with the Los Angeles Dodgers in the first All-California World Series ever.

In fact, it will mark the first time in 18 years that a single state has boasted both the National League and American League pennant winners. The last time was the 1956 encounter between the old Brooklyn Dodgers and the New York Yankees.

The 1974 series matches a veteran Oakland team, bidding for its third straight world championship, against a young Dodger team that has been pennant starved since the days of Sandy Koufax eight years ago.

Most oddsmakers hesitated to predict a winner, though some have installed Oakland as a razor-thin favorite on the strength of the team's three veteran starting pitchers - Vida Blue, Jim "Catfish" Hunter and Ken Holtzman.

A's manager Alvin Dark said he will go with either Blue or Holtzman in game number 1 of the series at Dodger Stadium which begins at 4 P.M. EDT.

Dodger skipper Walter Alston will open with Andy Messersmith, a 20-game winner, followed by 19-game winner Don Sutton on Sunday.

But Alston said his plans for a starter in the third game in Oakland Tuesday were "up in the air."

Oakland's Reggie Jackson, who is mending from a hamstring pull, had a doctor's appointment in Los Angeles Thursday to determine whether he will play Saturday.

"I'll play Saturday if my name is in the line-up, even in a wheelchair," Jackson said Wednesday after his team wrapped up the American League title in Baltimore.

"Hey, I've had 19 hamstrings," Jackson told newsmen. "I can tell you exactly what will happen when I go to the man's office today. He'll tell me to get up on the table and then he'll poke around my leg some. He'll ask me how the leg feels and I'll tell him, 'fine, just fine."

But A's owner Charles Finley said Jackson, who got Oakland's only hit Wednesday in the role of a designated hitter, would be in the hands of the doctor.

"You're not going to decide if Reggie will play," Finley told Dark. "I'm not going to decide and Reggie's not. The doctors will make the decision."

If the A's took their third straight pennant in stride, the Dodgers took their first National League crown in eight years in anything but stride.

"We can beat anybody, ' said Dodger catcher Steve Yeager, dripping with champagne in the clubhouse following Los Angeles' 12 - 1 drubbing of the Pirates.

"This is phase two of our season," said Steve Garvey who had smashed two back-to-back homers in the game. "Phase three starts Saturday."

Women's crew opens

By LAURIE GULLION
Sports Staff

The UMass Women's Crew Club elected officers for the 1974-5 rowing season last Saturday while continuing to practice for their first race this fall on Saturday against Trinity College and Smith College.

President of the club, Rose Sellew feels that the season is a "turning-over" year for the club.

"We have eight veteran rowers plus a large turnout of interested novices," said Sellew when explaining the change in membership, "and we have enough people to fill over three boats, more than ever before."

Because the Women's Crew Club has only two shells and cannot accommodate all new rowers, Sellew says "the club wants recognition from the athletic department, hopefully status as a varsity sport, to know where we stand. In the past, we've been scrambling for money to buy necessary equipment for the team. With varsity standing, new we'll have better idea, financially at least, where we can go."

At 9:30 on Saturday the first boats from UMass and Trinity College race along the two-mile Connecticut River course, and at 10:00, the second and third boats from the three schools will compete. The UMass club is entering one shell in the first race, and two shells in the second race.

Equestrian events

The first UMass Student Horse Event began early last Saturday, October 5, at Tilson Farm. The event covered three phases of equitation: dressage, cross-country, and stadium jumping. Among the 31 competitors, both novice and training levels, were eleven riders from Smith College.

Under the discerning eye of the judge, Ms. Karen Kramer, the riders strove for harmony and precision during the first phase. A change of pace marks the excotong cross-country jumping, where horse and rider fly through woods and fields over natural obstacles. The final phase, stadium jumping, demands the utmost in control, and yet freedom, as the rider and house together end a strenuous day of competition.

On October 12, the University will be represented at the Worcester Intercollegiate Horse Show. The University sends it's riders to various regional, intercollegiate horse shows and the public is welcomed to attend.

Pats face shaky Jets

NEW YORK (AP) - According to Coach Charley Winner, the New York Jets have been a one-half team through their first four National Football League games this season.

"We've demonstrated that we can be a good club. But we have to play two good halves, not one," he said as the Jets, 1 - 3, prepared for Sunday's home opener against the unbeaten New England Patriots.

"We played a good first half against Kansas City and Chicago and a good second half against Miami. Now we have to put it together for 60 minutes," said Winner.

After leading Kansas City 13 - 0 at the half, the Jets lost 24 - 16. They beat Chicago 23 - 21 after building a 20 - 0 halftime edge. Then they lost 16 - 12 in rainy, windy Buffalo before losing 21 - 17 last Monday night to Miami after the Dolphins had run up a 14 - 0 halftime margin.

"In the second half against Miami, we demonstrated the type of defense we are capable of playing," Winner added. "We lost the game because we didn't play any defense in the first half."

The Jets, whose offense has been erratic all season, go against a Patriots team whose defense has been equally erratic.

The Pats, who routed winless Baltimore 42 - 3 last Sunday, have the American Football Conference's strongest defense against the rush-but the weakest against the pass.

Soccermen tackle Terriers in key YanCon meeting

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

The UMass Soccer Minutemen go against the Terriers of Boston University this Saturday at 11:00 a.m. in a very important Yankee Conference battle.

The booters are coming off a week lay-off. In their last contest they impressively beat Worcester Poly-Tech 4-0 last Saturday. In that game the team was passing very well and moving the ball up field the best they did all season.

Coach Al Rufe commented that, "we would like to play the same type of game as we did against W.P.I...That short passing which uses the whole field is the best attack."

The soccer squad's record so far this season is a solid 3-1. In their first two contests they shut-out both Boston College and Maine but then they were soundly beaten by a fine Keene State team. After that loss though the team seemed to pull together and they gave their best effort of the season against W.P.I...

Boston University thus far this season has not been that impressive. They have a record of 0-4-1. In shut-out contests they lost to UMaine and UConn, 1-0 and 4-0 respectively. They also had a 2-1 loss to Vermont, a scoreless tie with University of New Hampshire, and a somewhat misleading 18-1 loss to nationally ranked Brown. Coach Rufe on that loss to Brown said, "our guys must look at that game and think that BU will not be tough. What they must realize is that BU is not going to give us the game, we've got to beat them."

Soccer practice this week has been good and bad. The team worked quite a bit on the passing that was so well executed against W.P.I. Of course, it would be a big plus if they can continue that type of performance. On the bad side, the week lay-off could have gotten the team rusty. Also, there were certain days that key players on the team did not practice, and that leaves Coach Rufe torn between the decision of who to play related to merit for hard work in practice, or related to ability, even though there are others that might deserve the playing time more. Actually, though things have started to iron out a little more smoothly than they had been and everyone was working fairly hard all week.

One thing that Coach Rufe has to work with that can really be to the team's advantage is some fine depth at most every position. He has substitutes at his disposal for almost all spots and working them correctly can be a big plus for the squad.

"What we have got to do," said Rufe, "is to go out there and hustle and go out there and be up. The Yankee Conference championship is our primary goal this year and this game will be an important step in the right direction if we can take it."

QUICK SHOTS — In this week's New England Coaches Soccer poll UMass was rated tenth. The Minutemen's next opponent after BU is Westfield State and they are rated eighth. In the YanCon, Connecticut is 3-0 and they are also rated tenth nationally. Springfield College another team that UMass will face later in the season is rated seventeenth in the nation.

Sunday sorcery

By SCOTT HAYES

Can the Patriots break the Joe "Willie" jinx in Shea Stadium? Will the Cowboys begin their perennial "march to the sea" this weekend, stomping on anyone or anything that gets in their way? Are the Dolphins capable of handling the Redskins when the Super Bowl title is NOT at stake? Will Baltimore or Detroit win any games this season? And more importantly, can the UMass Minutemen find a passing game to complement the running of Rich Jessamy and Keith Lang? These are questions that should be answered this weekend, but for those of you who can't wait, here's a look ahead.

UMASS 26; BOSTON UNIVERSITY 21

BU may have its best team since the Pasadena Bowl squad of 1969, and has to be inspired after last Friday night's 33-8 drubbing of Northeastern, but the Terriers depend too heavily on their ground attack. The Minutemen haven't allowed a touchdown on the ground yet this season, and have to win this one to stay in the YanCon race.

BUFFALO BILLS 31; BALTIMORE COLTS 14

The lowly Colts will have more to worry about than just O. J. Simpson. Joe Ferguson is coming on, while teammates Ahmad Rashad and Jim Braxton have been playing well. An improved Buffalo defense will have the Colts looking for a new head coach again....but it's more than coaching problems.

CINCINNATI BENGALS 28; CLEVELAND BROWNS 20

True, this one's the Buckeye State grudge match, but Bengals are simply a better team than the Browns this year.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS 28; DALLAS COWBOYS 27

Realistically, a toss-up, but I have to go with the Cards, who are rolling and will have home crowd to cheer them on. Dallas may make its move toward Eastern Division supremacy, but if the Cowboys lose, the Dallas days of reign are all but over.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS 16; HOUSTON OILERS 7

The Vikings won't even need the last-second heroics of Fred Cox to put away Oilers and remain undefeated.

LOS ANGELES RAMS 35; GREEN BAY PACKERS 13

John Hadl, Jim Bertelsen and teammates won't have as much trouble with Packers as they did last Sunday against Detroit.

CHICAGO BEARS 20; ATLANTA FALCONS 17

According to NY Giants head coach Bill Arnsparger, the Giants played their worst game of the season last week and Atlanta barely managed to win. The improved Bears will stop the Falcons, as Chicago QB Gary Huff begins to make a name for himself.

MIAMI DOLPHINS 23; WASHINGTON REDSKINS 21

There's no Super Bowl title at stake, but Dolphins will edge the Redskins.

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS 21; NEW YORK JETS 17

Reggie Rucker is a doubtful starter, but Pats are not about to let a hex stand in their way.....at least not this year.

DENVER BRONCOS 34; NEW ORLEANS SAINTS 21

If Archie Manning doesn't get the Saints marching, it may not even be that close.

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES 17; NEW YORK GIANTS 10

Remember the good old days Giant fans? What ever happened to Y. A. Tittle, Frank Gifford and Joe Morrison?

PITTSBURGH STEELERS 14; KANSAS CITY CHIEFS 13

Chiefs only managed 170 total yards against Denver last week and both offenses have had trouble getting started, but Steelers should take low-scoring affair.

OAKLAND RAIDERS 35; SAN DIEGO CHARGERS 27

Ken Stabler has a great fleet of receivers — Cliff Branch, Fred Biletnikoff and RB Clarence Davis — as well as train-like Marv Hubbard. That's a little too much for most NFL teams to handle, and Chargers are no different.

DETROIT LIONS 24; SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS 20

This is my Monday night special, as winless Lions upset 2-2 49ers — just a hunch.

Gorilla fall match previews season

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

This Sunday at 1:30 p.m. for all of you that are not planning to be part of this weekend's mass exit from the campus, a special treat will be in store. The varsity lacrosse team will open its fall season with a scrimmage against Springfield College on the lower fields across from Boyden.

The fall lacrosse season is actually just a tune-up, get-in-shape session for the spring season, and if you will recall last spring you will remember what a season it was for lacrosse. UMass finished ninth in the nation and just missed out on an NCAA playoff berth.

This year, as Coach Dick Garber put it, "there are a lot of new faces and alot of new talent. After losing people like Rutledge, Lally, Seidman, and McVey it would seem like this would be a rebuilding year for us. But actually I think we may have a better squad than last year's with the new people and the more experienced returning players."

The object of the fall lacrosse season as Garber sees it, "is to get out and play, have some fun, get in some shape, and see what we have got for the spring." It appears right now that what they have seems quite promising. Barring any unforseen problems or injuries UMass should be in for another fine season from the gorillas when the good weather rolls around.

This fall the stickers will also play Army at West Point on October 19. That game is always an interesting one because the Cadets usually have a squad that is one of the top in the country. On October 26, which is this fall's homecoming, the Lacrosse team will also add to the day as they too will play Connecticut (as will the Soccer and Football teams) at 9:30 here.

Minutemen look to rebound against improved Terriers

By STEVE SARACENO
Sports Staff

After you've been clawed by a cat, you don't go looking to battle a dog.

But that's just the situation the Minutemen, fresh from a 25-14 scraping from the claws of the Catamounts, will face as the Terriers from Boston University arrive in full pack tomorrow at Alumni Stadium (WMUA, 1:00).

The big question: Is the Terrier bite as bad as its bark? The howl, in the form of a 3-1 record, a 33-8 win over Northeastern last week, and 62 points in the last two games, is threatening enough, but coach Dick MacPherson is not signaling a Minuteman retreat.

"Nobody would be worrying about us in this game if we had won last week. Sure, BU's a fine team, but you've got to remember they were shutout by New Hampshire, 28-0".

BU has a freshman quarterback, one Greg Geiger, who emerged as a starter in the Terrier rout of Vermont. "He's got a lot of poise," says his coach, Paul Kemp. "He can run and throw and he gets things done."

Kudos from Kemp aside, Geiger is not the main cog in the offensive machine. Halfback Glen Murphy, a speedster with 476 rushing yards, is the top BU banana. Their inside running specialist is George Katopodis (237 yards). And the guy who clears the way for these two is the sizeable fullback, Joe Driscoll.

"The big thing is", says MacPherson, "we've got to stop their running game."

The big thing for UMass offensively is to keep their own running game rolling along. If Rich Jessamy, Keith Lang, and Mark Tripucka can run for as much yardage as last week, without the fumbles, the Minutemen will be in good shape.

It's going to be tough, though, because two men who have been clearing the truck lanes are injured and will not start. Tom Harris, an offensive tackle, is definitely out with a torn hamstring. The other tackle, Ross Schubarth, may see some action, but he'll be restricted by a bad back.

"We'll have a couple of capable guys in Brad Calnan and Dave Williamson in there as replacements", says MacPherson.

They'll have to be capable, not just in making holes, but in protecting the passer. The BU D-Men have sacked the quarterback 10 times in the last two games.

And when Tripucka does get the protection, he'll still have to cope with a secondary that hunts down aerials like Kojak hunts down criminals - with deadly diligence... 7 pickoffs over the last two games.

The defense is something Tripucka must overcome, because the lack of a passing game has stunted the UMass attack. He'll have to improve on a 17 for 48 passing mark.

Team morale? Well, the zapping from Vermont left the team demoralized, but MacPherson assures that the spirits of the team, after a week of practice, are back up there. "We started coming back last Tuesday night. We should be ready."

And "ready" is one thing the Minutemen were not last week. Films showed the defense tripping over each other, mesmerized by the Vermont attack. But perhaps still 'tis better to beaten by correctable mental errors, than to lose because of a lack of talent. And, make no mistake about it, the talent is there.

But, questions from the Vermont game still abound. Was the showing indicative of UMass or was the loss a fluke? Is the secondary always that pourous, or does it just happen against QB's like Batemen? Will the ball continue to slip away from ballcarriers even when it's dry and sunny out? Can the band come up with back-to-back musical spectaculars?

You won't get the answers to these questions from your friendly neighborhood guru — only the contest itself can provide any conclusions.

IC4A preview on tap as Harriers head for NYC

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

"The home of Eastern cross country," more commonly known as Van Cortlandt Park, will provide the landscape, tomorrow afternoon, for a preview of the IC4A (Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America) Championships. Manhattan, William and Mary, Syracuse, UConn and the UMass harriers will assemble in New York City for the five-way meet.

Manhattan, presently ranked seventh in the national cross country poll, won the IC4A Championship in 1972 and 1973. Returning this year are standouts Tony Colon, Peter Squires and Joe Savage. Colon was runner-up in 1972 at the IC4A's, Squires finished third last year and captured the IC4A steeplechase championship during the track season. Savage placed twelfth in the IC4A meet two years ago, but was injured last season. Manhattan also has five outstanding sophomores, all of whom finished among the top ten in last year's IC4A junior varsity race. Manhattan topped Army 24-31 in its only meet so far this season.

William and Mary finished fourth in the country a year ago, and has seven of its nine runners from that team returning. Ranked fifth in the nation so far this year, William and Mary depends on Mack Collins, John Greenplate and Mike Hagon. Collins missed All-American honors (top 25 in the NCAA's) by two places and Hagon was one of the most sought-after schoolboy runners in the country. A 4:08 miler in high school, Hagon captured the Penn Relay high school two-mile championship.

According to Coach Ken O'Brien, Syracuse is the second best team the runners will face this season. "Syracuse is better than any other team we'll face the rest of the season," commented O'Brien, who feels that Providence was the squad's toughest opponent.

Syracuse flaunts a 6-0 record, having beaten Cornell 20-41 and shutout three opponents. Bob Dugan, a 28:50 six-miler, leads a team that features pack-style running. Syracuse has a deep team and depends on the close grouping of its top eight runners.

Connecticut will be the weakest team in the meet, with only the strong running of sophomore Bruce Clark to show for. Clark holds the UMass course record, as a result of outdueling Randy Thomas in a dual meet last year.

The battle up front in the race should be interesting. Assistant coach Mike Muska stated that Thomas, Bill Gillin and John McGrail are ready to run and capable of taking three of the top six spots.

If UMass can close the gap between its number three and number five runners, Minuteman supremacy is possible. The rest of the team must improve, and it's certain that Thomas, McGrail and Gillin will be up front fighting Dolon, Squires, Savage, Collins, Greenplate, Hagon, Dugan and Clark. That group of runners represents some of the best talent in Eastern cross country, and the meet will be both figuratively and literally "an uphill climb".

While the varsity is taking part in the miniature IC4A meet, the freshmen will be up against UConn. The meet is scheduled to begin at 11:00 a.m. tomorrow in front of NOPE. It will be the first real challenge for Mike Muska's group of outstanding freshmen, as UConn will be using three varsity runners in the JV contest.

Sabres slash Bruins, 9-5

BUFFALO, N.Y. [UPI] — Gil Perreault scored a three-goal hat trick and assisted on two other tallies while Rick Martin collected two goals during a second period onslaught Thursday night to lead the Buffalo Sabres to a 9-5 victory over the Boston Bruins in the National Hockey League opener for both clubs.

Perreault, who assisted on both of Martin's goals, got his first score at 14:23 of the first period to tie the game at 2-2, and got his second at 2:03 of the final period to put Buffalo in front 7-2.

Student committee to investigate hour cutbacks

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

The Student Employee Committee, an ad hoc committee of the Campus Center Board of Governors, decided last night to investigate cuts in student work hours in the Campus Center and seek either reinstatement of those hours or compensation for them.

The committee wants to investigate why hours are being cut from students who only work 15-20 hours to begin with, and not overtime.

Scott Ganz, a member representing students who work in the Administration and Food Service areas, told the Collegian the committee wants students with grievances concerning cutbacks in work hours or other employment conditions to notify them so that the problems can be investigated and righted.

The Student Employee Committee is an ad hoc committee of the Board of Governors that was voted into existence last Thursday night.

Members in attendance at the meeting are students who were nominated to represent the various areas of student employment in the Campus Center in which they work.

A representative of the Campus Center Board of Governors outlined last night five things that the committee can do.

First, the committee has a right to investigate all complaints with the co-operation of managers in the various Campus Center departments.

Second, the committee has the right to go to managers to get settlements of all grievances.

Third, the committee has the right to go to the Board of Governors with complaints and problems if they cannot get them solved at other points along administrative channels.

Fourth, the committee has the right to recommend legislation to the Board of Governors.

Fifth, the Board of Governors has directed the committee to keep records of all grievances received. Names are not necessary.

Any student working in the Campus Center is eligible to be a member of this committee by attending three consecutive meetings.

Nominations are now being accepted in room 817 CC, for a Chairperson who will be the representative from the Committee to the Board of Governors.

Ford Foundation grant awarded to Art Dept.

A $100,000 matching grant from the Ford Foundation has been awarded to the UMass Art Department for faculty enrichment, student scholarships, and an experimental computer graphics program, it was announced today by Department Chairman George Wardlaw.

According to the terms of the grant, the $100,000 and an equal amount in matching funds must be spent in not less than three years nor more than seven.

Over half of the total grant will be used in the faculty enrichment category, to help the continued artistic growth and development of studio artists on the faculty.

The funds will help buy materials and time for faculty artists for creative projects they would otherwise be unable to do, and also bring leading artists, critics and others to campus for lectures, workshops and special projects.

Approximately $18,000 of the Ford grant will be used in the student scholarship and fellowship category. Grants will be made both to undergraduate and graduate students planning careers as studio artists. Awards will be made on the basis of both need and achievement. The Art Department now has 100 graduate students and nearly 600 undergraduate art majors.

The third category, the experimental computer graphics program, will be allocated approximately $25,000 in Ford Foundation funds. This amount will support work already underway in the department under the direction of Professors Robert Mallary and John Roy.

The grant is directed by Ms. Mary Vercauteren, associate director of the UMass Fine Arts Center, with Professor Wardlaw as co-director. It is part of a total of over $4 million that the Ford Foundation is granting this year to 34 institutions under its Program for Professional Training in the Visual Arts.

Local cablevision evaluated by UMass grads

By AL COLARUSSO
Staff Reporter

Two UMass graduate students have been appointed by Amherst selectmen to the Cable Advisory Committee of Amherst which was formed to assess the future cablevision needs of the area. They are Bob Antil and Prescott Smith.

The Advisory Committee, whose responsibility is to make relicensing recommendations to the town's selectmen, is believed to be the first of its kind in New England and possibly in the nation, according to Antil, doctoral candidate at the School of Education.

The town's existing cable television license, held by the Pioneer Valley Corporation, will expire in 1976 and notices of open bidding have been sent to competing cablevision companies.

Pioneer Valley Corp. is owned by Communications Properties, Inc., a Texas firm in which former President Lyndon Johnson's family has interests. The corporation's service, which consists of a 16 channel system, has been termed "unsatisfactory" by Smith, a graduate student aiming for a doctorate in educational media.

"We're looking for a 30-channel system with public access" said Smith, a 10-year resident of Amherst, in a recent interview. Public access would include UMass organizations such as the Student Video Project.

The project, which now plans to air student productions on a closed circuit basis, would be able to broadcast educational and informative programming to the entire Amherst area.

Under a public access system, the local citizens would be provided with a cablecasting studio and technical assistance, allowing them to produce their own programs at very low cost. This would "offer something more than theoretical freedom of speech," according to Smith in an article published in the Amherst Record.

The advisory committee's report has been submitted to the town selectmen and a public hearing based on that report is tentatively scheduled for Monday, Nov. 4. All interested persons are encouraged to attend.

J.S. program still under fire

By JIM GIBBONS
Staff Reporter

When the motion to reconsider the locking of Journalism majors into English requirements is heard by the English department faculty on October 21, the rumblings of student discontent may be echoing in 61 Bartlett Hall. The English department on May 15, voted 17-13 to establish English as the sole track to a Journalism major.

Student reaction to this step has been overwhelmingly unfavorable. Some students have gone so far to suggest they would seek the aid of their state representatives in the matter. "We're not going to sit and let this go by," said one angry CASIAC sophomore. "I intend to contact my representative and inform him that I'm not being allowed to pursue my desired course of study here at the state university," she said.

A number of students surveyed termed the restriction "unreasonable." They feel that Journalism majors should gain a strong background in diverse areas and not be limited to English only.

At the October 21 meeting of the English department faculty, a motion will be offered by Professor Dario Politella of the Journalistic Studies program to "establish Journalistic Studies as a dual major requiring 15 hours of Journalism-related courses plus whatever course requirements are negotiated by the student's participating department, university-wide."

A sophomore Political Science student said she has always received encouragement that Political Science and Journalism would be a good combination. "Now, all of a sudden someone decides that they aren't" she said. "It's a very discouraging situation."

Many students seem particularly upset over the manner in which the change was enacted. A junior majoring in History said, "It was so secret--even faculty members didn't know about the change. It all occurred at the last department meeting of the semester. It seems so typical of the way that things are done at this university."

One senior Psychology student said she could understand if a distinct Journalism curriculum had been established. "But to say that anyone wishing to attain a Journalism major must also do English seems ridiculous," she said.

A Physical Education major not affected by the present restriction questioned the motives of the English department. "I'd be interested in seeing whether enrollment figures in English courses have declined. If so, maybe they're trying to get more business for themselves," he said.

Howard Ziff, director of the Journalistic Studies program, proposed the policy presently in effect at the May 15 meeting of the English department. He's quoted saying he considers "a journalist to be a man of letters and that literature was therefore a journalist's most important discipline."

Ziff said he is not fully happy with a Journalistic Studies--English setup, but feels "it's the closest thing to a real Journalism background."

He said he would hope that eventually a distinct Journalism department could be established with its own set of requirements for a major. He said that within this "courses would range from many diverse areas as economics and political science in addition to journalism courses."

Ziff emphasized he would "seek student and faculty opinion" regarding what requirements would consist of.

Professor Joseph Frank, chairman of the English department, told the Collegian the issue concerning the Journalistic Studies major will be open to discussion at the next department meeting.

Frank said the situation got so that "those in the Journalism program were just overwhelmed with students and did not have adequate manpower for advising."

He said he views the change as a "stop gap measure to be in effect for only one year, until we can get a fuller, more coherent program staffed."

Assembly head:

Need for SW improvement cited

By MICHAEL J. MASSI
Staff Reporter

"Southwest is at a changing point, a state of flux. What the Assembly has to do is to get interested students together, assess their needs, their concerns. I want to make Southwest more attractive, more to offer than just a room," said Craig Sanderson, President of the Southwest Assembly in a recent interview about the Assembly's future plans for the Southwest area.

In admitting that his top priority is awakening student interest and awareness of the Assembly, Craig said, "We do have a communication problem with the students in this area. We want the Assembly to become a viable part of the area. It's got some responsibilities and powers, and we have to fight this vision of the Southwest Assembly as being nothing."

Craig offered some solutions to the problem by suggesting a greater use of the media, specifically the "Southwest Newsletter" and the "Collegian," to advertise meeting times and action being taken by the Assembly for the benefit of the Southwest residents.

He also suggested use of table tents in the dining commons and possibly utilizing the local radio stations in an effort to spark student interest.

"People are concerned about what people in Southwest want. I'd like to submit a questionnaire about what whey want their student government to do for them." He said he would like to define the issues and secure some guidelines to develop a sense of direction which the students want the Assembly to follow.

In defining the future plans of the Assembly, Craig elaborated on two bills which he submitted to the Assembly and which were subsequently passed.

One bill directs the Social and Cultural Programming Committee to study outdoor facilities in the Southwest area and examine ways in which such facilities can be better employed or more functionally used.

The other bill reviews the controversial no-paint policy. "Southwest has a no-paint policy which has forced some students to become criminals in order to paint their rooms," Craig said. "A committee should work with the Southwest Business Office to examine this policy and see if something can't be done about it," he added.

When asked how long these bills would be in committee, Craig said that the paint policy bill would take Food stamp problems?

Students who are still waiting for a Food Stamp interview or who have been disqualified for reasons they do not understand, are urged to complete a survey being distributed by the S.O.P.

They are attempting to document cases of negligence and hopefully help students receive what they deserve.

Completed surveys should be returned to the Project office in Room 428 A, Student Union as soon as possible.

There is a possibility, however, that students whose parents claim them as dependents for income tax purposes will be disqualified. Last week, the Boston Globe announced that Congress had passed a Department of Agriculture appropriations bill which closes that loophole.

When asked about the effect this bill will have on UMass students who have already applied, Cindy Spearing, of the Student Organizing Project (S.O.P.) replied, "Nobody seems to know yet if the bill is retroactive."

Collins, Atkins vie for State Rep office

By SANDY CARLIN
Staff Reporter

State Representative James Collins and his political opponent William Atkins both say that if elected they would "work to defeat any bill proposing an increase in tuition at UMass". Both candidates are running for State Representative for Amherst and South Hadley.

Representative Collins is a candidate for his second term of office as State Representative. He was first elected in 1972.

During his first term Collins served on the Joint Commission on Education. He has worked successfully against tuition raises at UMass as well as budget cuts.

Collins feels the state should have a "coordinating policy with both public and private educational institutions. The public sector should be of an equally high quality as the private, giving each citizen a choice," he said.

Collins also served on the Special Commission on Belchertown and introduced a bill that increased the school budget by $9000. He said that many mental institutions in the state are "non-responsive institutions" and that individual families had to push for years before they could get these services.

Collins has also worked on both the Commission on the Performing Arts and the Humanities and the Commission to Regulate Travel Agencies.

Collins is now working on the Commission on the Quality of Life in the Commonwealth. He would like to promote, on the state level, the "highest quality of life for citizens without environmental hazards."

Recently, Collins has supported the bill to create a commission to investigate nuclear energy. He feels the state should be involved with monitoring the abuse of nuclear energy.

Running against Collins for the Republican party is William Atkins. He has served on the Recreation Committee in Amherst for nine years. Atkins served on the Amherst School Committee for twelve years and was the Chairman of the Regional School Committee for Amherst Pelham, Leverett and Shutesberry for four years. At present, Atkins is serving on the Town Finance Committee.

Atkins is also in favor of a committee to explore other areas of energy other than nuclear power. He feels that representatives from Western Massachusetts are needed on the new state energy commission.

The institutions in Belchertown also interest Mr. Atkins. He feels that the schools have been neglected and that, "talent from the five colleges must be used to give the children as good a living condition as possible."

"With proper counseling," commented Mr. Atkins, "these children can Function in a normal society."

Both Collins and Atkins agreed there should be no increase in taxes at present because of inflation. Collins favors a graduated income tax scale rather than a flat income tax because this would help the lower and middle class citizens. Atkins said, "The state must set up priorities and live within its budget."

Regarding the judiciary system, Collins would like to introduce legislation involving better bail procedures. He also feels that there is a need for full time judges and full time district attornies.

Both candidates also have important platforms dealing directly with UMass. Collins and Atkins said that they would fight against any proposals for budget cuts at UMass. Both feel UMass should continue to provide quality education at a low tuition rate.

Atkins said, "By raising the tuition there would run the danger of discriminating who could go to college."

UMass debaters meet at MIT tournament

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

A total of 45 debate teams from as far west as California and as far south as Georgia, met at the annual M.I.T. Debate Tournament Oct. 4, 5, and 6.

UMass was represented by the teams of John Adams and John Cross, and David O'Brien and Howard Steinberg.

In eight rounds of debate, Adams and Cross compiled a 6-2 record. The pair beat Seton Hall, U.R.I., George Mason, and three different Harvard teams.

Their losses came at the hands of U.N.C., who went on to win the tournament, and another Harvard team.

Adams and Cross' 6-2 record was good enough for the octafinal elimination rounds, where they bowed to Harvard by a judge's ballot of 3-0.

O'Brien and Steinberg broke even with a 4-4 record. They beat Bates, Pace, Wellesley, and Army, but were defeated by Harvard, Marietta, Canisius, and B.C.

Marlyn Fine, a debate coach for UMass, said, "From the results of this tournament, it looks like it's going to be a good year."

O'Brien and Steinberg will be competing at a West Point tournament, along with John Bena and Larry Hershkowitz later in the year.

Competing at UPenn will be the teams of Bill Dale and Rosanne Hynes, and Dave Donovan and Ken Grunes. Attending a tournament at Dartmouth will be eight novice debaters.

UMass has three tournaments slated for Oct. 18 and 19. In a program new to the Debate Union, UMass students will be participating in an "individual events" tournament at Plattsburg.

The events include after dinner speeches, extemporaneous speeches, impromptu speeches, off topic debate, oral interpretation, persuasive speaking, and others.

Attending the tournament will be Nick Burnett, Paul Goslin, Jill Peltin, Beth Rose, and Martha Seif.

Need seen for pre-med advisory committee

By Mark Citron
Staff Reporter

At some point before the end of this year, the 21 faculty members of the Pre-med advisory committee will have to meet and organize itself into some coherent body for advising students aiming toward a medical career, according to various members of the Pre-med Committee.

Last year, of the 87 UMass applicants to U.S. medical schools, 27 per cent were accepted; well below the national average.

This year, the Pre-med committee added twelve new members and elected a new chairman.

"Two years ago the (Pre-med) committee's condition was shaky undermaned. Help was needed and it's been slow in coming," said Mac Edds, Dean of Faculty for Natural Sciences and Mathematics.

The "shaky" character of the committee was that not until last spring did the committee attempt to define its charge and establish by-laws, according to Edds. Until this year, the committee had been run on an ad-hoc arrangement with vague University sanctions. Edds cited the failure of the College of Arts and Sciences (Casiac) to "get off its ass" as the reason for the committee's lack of organization.

Committee members hope the needed committee leadership will come from Brian O'Connor of the Zoology Department, the new committee chairman who replaces Benjamin C. Crooker of Physics.

O'Connor and Edds both emphasized the changing dimensions of the Pre-med committee, with O'Connor saying, "It must be understood that we're not here solely to get students into medical schools - no one can do that - but rather than just getting people into med school, the committee will be trying to talk to all students who are 'pre-professionals' for any kind of medical career."

O'Connor added that the new committee members were chosen from a varied background to better reflect the students going into the allied health fields.

"The faculty in the past failed to do their homework; they have not been able to advise students in the allied health fields," O'Connor said.

If the dimensions of the committee are changing then so are the responsibilities of the individual members of the committee. The committee chairman will be expected to be "full-time on the job" according to Dean Edds.

Professor Crooker said one new function of the pre-med chairman will be to go around visiting medical schools, and he added "This was news for me. I didn't find out about that until after I asked to be relieved of the job."

Crooker, who has been chairman of the committee for five years and a committee member for 16, said he had waited first for the medical schools to contact UMass; but now UMass will attempt to make overtures to the medical schools.

Some of the pressure for these changes in the committee's definition has come from the the Mass. state legislature which recently passed legislation placing minimum teaching hours by all state professors. New that the committee has been better defined, according to Edds, the University will be better able to determine "what exemptions from teaching time can be granted to the leader of a group such as the Pre-med committee".

Another problem facing the new committee will be in minority student placements. George J. Oberlander, one of the eight returning committee members, said that in the past "there has been no special minority counselor."

O'Connor feels that "it's our social resonsibility to attract more minorities . . . but the reality is that the vast majority of minority students are not in sciences."

O'Connor cited women applicants to medical schools as an area where a lot of misconceptions exist. While women are not a minority, O'Connor said, "medical schools are not giving women equal treatment as the American Medical Association claims."

Crooker said, "I don't think med schools ever tried to reverse the role status that has gone against women. Women are nurses and men are doctors ...of course I don't agree, but that is the way things are."

A major function of the pre-med committee is writing letters of recommendation for students applying to medical schools. The present letter of recommendation system has one advisor on the committee writing a letter that is circulated to the entire committee. O'Connor feels this process will have to change, partly because of outside pressure.

"The Attorney General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has said students must have access to all their files, and that students must see it (letters of recomendations)," O'Connor said.

Crooker said that this means "since the confidentiality of letters of recommendation can no longer be guaranteed, no one will write a bad letter,"

O'Connor, when asked what advice he generally gives to pre-med's listed;

--"never major in pre-med. It's a vehicle for those who, because of departmental problems, need a major,

---"take senior honors...but begin in the junior year so an evaluation can be included in the letter of recomendation,

---"join a group such as Belchertown volunteers,...or work in a hospital" to obtain a medical background.

O'Connor said the best news he could give pre-meds is that UMass-Worchester (UMass' med school)" will be accepting 100 students next year, all Massachusetts residents.

In opening statement at trial

Ben-Veniste charges Nixon had coverup role

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The prosecution opened its Watergate cover-up case yesterday by charging that "even the President himself" was involved in the conspiracy and that Ricahrd M. Nixon's best friend provided $50,000 to be paid to the original Watergate burglars.

Assistant Watergate Prosecutor Richard Ben-Veniste, in a 3-hour, 10-minute opening statement to a jury of nine women and three men, said he would prove the cover-up was a conspiracy among "the most powerful men in the government of the United States ...even the President himself."

Five of Nixon's former aides are on trial in connection with an alleged effort cover up the link between the 1972 Watergate burglary and Nixon's re-election campaign.

Ben-Veniste told the jury that Nixon's friend Charles G. "Bebe" Rebozo provided $50,000 in available campaign funds a month before the 1972 election - half of which went to the burglars arrested for breaking into Democratic National Headquarters at the Watergate complex, and half to a gubernatorial candidate.

The prosecutor said he was undertaking to prove that the cover-up was a conspiracy among "the most powerful men in the government of the United States ... even the President himself."

The opening prosecution statement consumed the 10th day of the trial. Defense lawyers will make opening statements Tuesday, and the prosecution then will call its first witness, former White House Counsel John W. Dean III, Nixon's chief accuser.

Ben-Veniste also alluded to some hitherto unpublished White House tapes the prosecution will seek to enter into evidence.

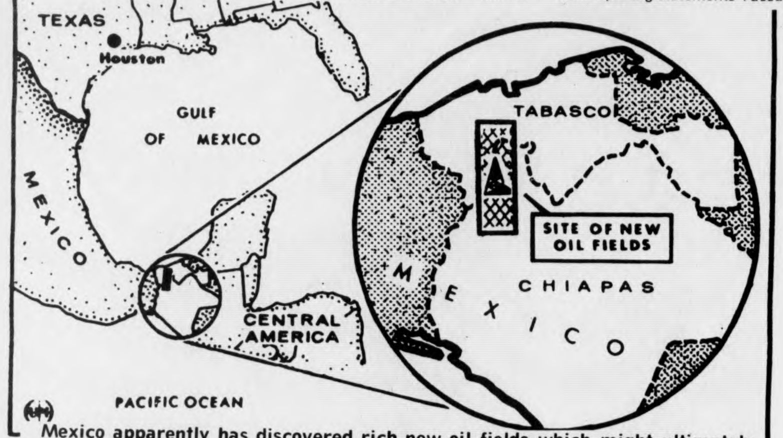
On April 14, 1973, as the alleged, cover-up began to unravel, Nixon asked his two top aides, H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman, who are defendants, about development of a strategy should Dean talk to prosecutors, the prosecutor said.

They agreed Dean had performed valuable services in the past, Ben-Veniste said, but then "considered a strategy of pushing Dean outside the circle of wagons around the White House." Ben-Veniste quoted Nixon as saying, "If you serve, the investigators hors d'oevers, maybe they won't come back for the main course."

During the same conversation, Ben-Veniste said, "the President recognized that if Dean was guilty, half of his staff could be considered guilty." He said Ehrlichman remarked during a conversation 11 days later that if Dean cooperated with the prosecutors, "an impeachment resolution" might be voted by the House.

While Haldeman was listening to the March 21, 1972, tape of Nixon's talk with Dean, Ben-Veniste said, he kept construing Nixon's statements merely "as drawing him out."

"It's not a good story but it's the best we can do," Ben-Veniste said Nixon replied.



Mexico apparently has discovered rich new oil fields which might ultimately break the grip of the Middle East oil cartel, according to U.S. government sources. Unofficial sources say the fields may contain double the amount of oil under Alaska's north slope.

Ford vetoes arms cutoff bill; fears threat to NATO alliance

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford yesterday vetoed a bill that would require an arms cutoff to Turkey, saying it would threaten the NATO alliance and undercut efforts to negotiate a settlement of the Cyprus dispute with Greece.

Congress, which ignored Ford's veto warnings in adding the arms cutoff to a continuing funding resolution for a variety of government programs, appeared likely to consider overriding the veto on Wednesday so it can recess to campaign for the Nov. 5 elections.

It requires a two-thirds vote in both chambers to override a veto, and observers said it seemed likely the veto would be sustained, if not in the House - which will vote first - then in the Senate.

House leaders indicated that if the veto is sustained the bill may be resubmitted with the same language but with an automatic 45-dav delay in the arms cutoff while negotiators make another try.

In the Senate, Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., chief advocate of the cutoff in that chamber, said he was "disappointed and dismayed" by the veto because if sustained it would permit the "continued sending of illegal military aid to Turkey." Ford, however, called the cutoff "an act which is harmful even to those Greece it purports to help.

It appeared likely the veto would be sustained in Congress, and the lawmakers would resubmit the basic bill - a so-called continuing resolution to provide interim funding for certain health and labor agencies - without the offending provision.

Ford said in his veto message, "I take this step with great reluctance but in the belief that I have no other choice."

"Instead of encouraging the parties involved in the Cyprus dispute to return to the negotiation table, an arms cutoff to Turkey could mean the indefinite postponement of meaningful negotiations," Ford's message said.

"Instead of strengthening America's ability to persuade the parties to resolve the dispute, it would lessen our influence on all the parties concerned. It would as well imperil our relationships with our Turkish ally and weaken us in the crucial Eastern Mediterannean. It directly jeopardizes the NATO alliance."

The United States is currently reported to be supplying Turkey with ammunition, spare parts and other material valued at about $6 million.

But the House, urged on by a small group of critics headed by Rep. John Brademas, D-Ind., and other representatives of Greek descent, Friday rejected, 187 to 171, a Senate-passed compromise to suspend the obligatory cut-off until Dec. 15.

Ford's popularity drops 18 per cent

NEW YORK (UPI) — Pollster Louis Harris says President Ford's job performance rating has dropped 18 percentage points since the pardon of former President Richard Nixon.

The latest Harris poll said 49 per cent of a cross section of Americans gave a negative rating to Ford, compared with 45 per cent who responded favorably. Ford's previous rating was 67 per cent favorable to 20 per cent negative, Harris said.

The pollster asked a series of questions in early September, before the pardon, and the same questions in late September, after the pardon, and said Monday Ford's score dropped in all areas.

"It is obvious that before the Nixon pardon, President Ford was given every benefit of the doubt," Harris said. "Now, he must rely on his specific performance in domestic and world affairs to regain public backing and to determine if and how the wounds inflicted by the Nixon pardon will heal."

1970 campaign book may hurt Rockefeller

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House Judiciary Committee members said yesterday the Rockefeller family's backing of a derogatory 1970 campaign biography was the most damaging evidence uncovered in an FBI investigation of vice presidential nominee Nelson A. Rockefeller.

But Rep. Edward Mezvinsky, D-Iowa, one of the members contacted by UPI, said the committee's confirmation hearings on the Rockefeller nomination would have to probe the deeper question of "whether there was a pattern" to that and other activities by all of the Rockefellers.

The biography in question was written about former Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg and published with Rockefeller family funding while Goldberg and Rockefeller were opponents in the 1970 New York governor's race.

Rockefeller has also come under fire for gifts and loans totaling more than $2 million he acknowledged giving to political associates, aides and friends between 1957 and 1974.

"We know now that it's not enough to just take a look at Mr. Nelson Rockefeller," Mezvinsky said in a telephone interview. "We'll have to take a look at the whole family — at the effect of the family and its money on public policy and governmental decisions. decisions.

Foresees 2 years of belt-tightening

Britain faces economic crisis, warns Wilson

LONDON (UPI) — Prime Minister Harold Wilson told Britons yesterday they face at least two years of belt-tightening to survive the country's gravest economic crisis since World War II.

"Fighting inflation is a matter of national survival," Wilson said in a television and radio broadcast message to the nation. "We cannot look forward over the next two years or more to any general increase in living standards."

Wilson's grim warning to inflation-plagued Britain was his first since his Labor party's victory by a narrow margin of three parliamentary seats in Thursday's general election.

Wilson said his Labor government, backed by its new though narrow mandate, plans to go through with plans to nationalize large sections of industry still in private hands.

At the same time he promised continued existence of "a vigorous, alert, responsible and profitable private sector."

He also promised help for businesses threatened with bankruptcy because of cash shortages caused by inflation.

Wilson said the government will not tolerate mass unemployment as a weapon to fight inflation and promised special help for elderly, sick and disabled.

He warned powerful trade unions. "We cannot afford the big battalion philosophy with power groups, whoever they are, trying to seize more than their share of what is available."

Before delivering his message, Wilson conferred with heads of the 10 million-member Trades Union Congress and the Confederation of British Industry, which represents the country's largest industrial companies.

"We believe that our problems can be solved only by a partnership between government and the whole of our national family," Wilson said.

Aides said Wilson plans no major cabinet reshuffle. The Conservative part, beaten in three of the last four general elections, began what political informants predicted would be a long and probably heart searching post mortem, with a big questionmark over the future of party leader Edward Heath, a former prime minister.

Kissinger receives assurances from Sadat before flying home

By The Associated Press

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat assured Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger ysterday that he will try to gain support for interim agreements with Israel at the upcoming Arab summit.

Kissinger obtained the pledge at Sadat's residence outside Cairo, flew to Damascus for a tough three-hour session with Syrian President Hafez Assad, then went on to Algeria.

Syrian sources said Assad insisted on a Geneva peace conference, which Kissinger now opposes, and an Israeli commitment for complete withdrawal from occupied Arab territories, in particular the Syrian Golan Heights which Israel has said cannot revert to Syrian control.

They said Assad also threatened to refuse to renew the mandate of the United Nations observer force in the Golan Heights on Dec. 1 unless Syria gets substantial signs its demands will be accepted.

Asked whether Egypt was prepared to offer guarantees to Israel in return for a withdrawal from Sinai, Sadat replied, "Why am I asked about guarantees? I myself, I need guarantees."

But he agreed to ake the initiative at the Arab summit and said he was "very optimistic" about the session in Rabat, Morocco on Oct. 26.

The West German news magazine Der Spiegel quoted Sadat as saying he would be ready to sign a peace agreement if Israel pulls back from territories occupied during the 1967 war.

Kissinger told newsmen outside Sadat's residence: "There are positive indications that we are making progress toward a just peace in the Middle East."

Kissinger also announced he would return to the Middle East the first week of November.

Palestine guerrillas allowed to attend UN

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] - Rejecting charges by Israel that the Palestine Liberation Organization practices "premeditated murder as a profession," the U.N. General Assembly voted overwhelmingly yesterday to invite the guerrillas to debate the question of Palestine next month.

"We are extremely happy and extremely excited," said Nabeel Shaath, a spokesman for the guerrillas. He said "a full delegation at the highest level of the PLO" will arrive in New York shortly to take part in the U.N. debate, which begins Nov. 4.

"We are filled with emotion that 105 delegations voted for us," Shaath said.

Shaath said the guerrillas had renounced terrorism against third parties and was making every effort to stop it.

Israel, the only nation to speak against the proposal to ask the Palestinian guerrillas to debate the question in the United Nations, said it "would amount to a bow to the scourge of savagery in utter humiliation."

The vote was 105-4 with 20 abstentations.

Abstaining were Australia, Barbados, Belgium, Burma, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, West Germany, Guatemala, Haiti, Iceland, Laos, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Britain and Uruguay.

Israel, the Dominican Republic, Bolivia and the United States opposed the proposal, cosponsored by more than 70 national delegations - more than half the membership of the United Nations.

In the debate before the vote, 24 speakers supported the resolution and only Israel spoke against it.

The debate next month will be the first time in U.N. history that the Palestine issue has been listed separately from the Middle East crisis.

"For years, the United Nations has tried to combat international terrorism," said Israeli Ambassador Yosef Tekoah. "Now, it is called upon to welcome those who have turned the premeditated murder of innocent children, women and men into a profession."

Mao suffers severe stroke?

LONDON [UPI] - Chinese Communist party leader Mao Tse-ung suffered a severe stroke at the end of September which has virtually ended his active role in the country's political life, the Daily Telegraph said yesterday.

The newspaper, in a London-written report by its Communist affairs correspondent David Floyd, said "news of the sudden worsening of the health of Mao, 81, this year and the bitter battles for succession which are now under way was brought out by Western businessmen recently in Peking who had unique access to top Chinese leaders."

It said Mao "had a severe stroke at the end of September which has brought his active role in China's political life practically to an end."

It said the main contestants in the power struggle to succeed Mao were Premier Chou En-lai and Mao's wife, Chiang Ching.

Fanfani may form Italian government

ROME [AP] - Amintore Fanfani, a staunch anti-Communist Catholic leader, got the nod yesterday to form a new government to try to bail Italy out of its political and econmic crisis without Communist participation.

President Giovanni Leone called on the 66-year-old Fanfani, a four-time ex-premier and secretary general of the dominant Christian Democratic party, after 11 days of uncertainty about Italy's political course.

Premier Mariano Rumor resigned Oct. 3, creating a vacuum that many Italians speculated could only be filled by bringing Italy's big Communist party into the government. Fanfani's appointment appeared to end this possibility, at least for the present.

However, in a statement issued after his appointment Fanfani said the situation before him was "not encouraging."

Mexico protects oil

By United Press International

Two leftist political parties urged yesterday that Mexico not only join the Middle East oil cartel but also help establish a separate Latin American cartel to protect Mexico's new oil find against U.S. "imperialism."

The call for Mexico's entry into the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries collided with reported U.S. plans to negotiate directly with Mexico on the new oil discovery in hopes of braking the world oil cartel's leverage with the United States.

Ed Sullivan dies

NEW YORK (UPI) — "And next week, a rilly, rilly big shew. . ."

A generation of comedians mimicked the famous accent and deadpan demeanor of Ed Sullivan, who died of cancer Sunday night two weeks after his 73rd birthday.

Awkward, shy, tongue-twisted and occassionally confused, Sullivan was a familiar image in American living rooms for 23 years, standing in a cross-armed slouch while introducing acts that ranged from the Beatles to trained seals.

"Ed does nothing," commedian Alan King once remarked, "but he does it better than anyone else."

Nixon responding

LONG BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — Richard M. Nixon's doctor said yesterday a weekend examination of the former president turned up "no clinical evidence of reactivation" of the painful phlebitis which hospitalized him for 11 days.

Dr. John Lungren said Nixon was still in a period of "controlled physical activity," indicating that at least for the immediate future, he would not be available for testimony in the Watergate trials in Washington.

Pro-, anti-busing forces remain active in Boston over weekend

BOSTON (AP) — The city of Boston rested yesterday from a month of turmoil that has accompanied forced integration of its schools, but both pro- and anti-busing forces remained active.

Schools were closed for the Columbus Day holiday, and for the first weekday since classes began Sept. 12, there were no reported incidents of school-connected violence.

Lawyers from a five-man Justice Department team met over the weekend with black community leaders to discuss their investigation of civil rights violations in connection with school integration. They said they also planned to meet with white leaders.

After their arrival from Washington last Friday, they said their probe would include anti-busing protesters and an incident of alleged brutality involving members of the Boston Police Department's Tactical Patrol Force.

One of the lawyers, David Rinzel, said the team's immediate task was to review 43 cases under study by the FBI, and that the team would be ready for grand jury action "pretty soon."

A white boycott of some schools was expected to continue, although anti-busing leaders disavowed any connection with it.

"It's no longer organized as it was in the first weeks. It's just people keeping their children out of school for their own safety," said Virginia Sheehy, an organizer of the South Boston Information Center.

Asked what plans she had for further resistance to the school integration plan, City Councilwoman Louise Day Hicks said, "Are you so naive? You think I'm going to answer that? Five lawyers come in from Washington to investigate obstruction of the court order and you're asking me what I'm going to do to oppose busing."

Chappaquiddick clouds future of Kennedy's political life

EDGARTOWN (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy has withdrawn from the presidential race in 1976, but his political future is still entangled in questions and doubts that remain from 1969, the year of the Chappaquiddick incident.

On the night of July 18, 1969, Mary Jo Kopechne drowned when Kennedy's big black car ran off a wooden bridge and landed upside down in a tidal pool.

More than five years later - after public statements, a trial and an inquest - Kennedy's actions and motives that night are still in the shadows. And the senator consistently brushes aside the questions that linger: Where was he going? What happened? What did he do afterward?

Here, essentially, is Kennedy's account:

A party was held at a rented cottage on Chappaquiddick Island for Kennedy, five male friends and six young women who had been campaign workers for his brother, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

About 11:15, Kennedy was tired and decided to go back to his inn at Edgartown. Miss Kopechne said she was feeling ill and asked to ride back to Edgartown with him.

But on the way, Kennedy took a wrong turn. The only paved road on the island leads to the ferry, which ran back and forth to Edgartown until midnight. Instead of staying on that road, Kennedy turned right on a sharp left turn and swung onto a bumpy dirt road.

He drove less than a mile to Dike Bridge, and the car plunged into the salt water. Kennedy escaped and made several futile dives to rescue Miss Kopechne from the submerged car. Then, exhausted, he rested a few minutes before trudging back to the cottage.

There, he summoned Paul Markham, a former U.S. attorney, and Joseph Gargan, Kennedy's cousin. They all rode back to the bridge and tried again to bring up the young woman.

After they gave up, the two companions drove Kennedy to the ferry landing, where he dove into the water and swam to Edgartown, He walked dripping to his inn and went to bed. The next morning he reported the accident to the police, who had already recovered Miss Kopechne's body.

Here are some of the questions the story raises:

Where was Kennedy really going?

A deputy sheriff testified at the inquest that he saw a car pull off the tarred road, stop and then drive on toward Dike Bridge. The car's license number began with L7 and ended with a 7. The time was about 12:45.

The next day, the sheriff identified Kennedy's car as the one he had seen the night before. It's license number was L78-207.

By the time the sheriff saw the car that night, the ferry had stopped running.

Even though Miss Kopechne supposedly was leaving for the night, she left her pocketbook and room key behind at the cottage.

Why did Gargan and Markham attract no attention?

The two men said they spent about an hour diving for Miss Kopechne. Even though they would have been wet, the young women did not notice anything unusual about them when they returned to the cottage.

Collins, Atkins propose their platforms

The candidates also expressed their views about the amount of hours that professors are required to teach.

Atkins said, "I would like to act as a buffer between the legislature and the teachers because I am convinced that many are putting in forty plus hours of work per week. I am very sensitive to the problems of teachers and can appreciate their feelings when they say they have been unjustly criticized."

Collins feels the law requiring professors to teach a specific amount of hours per week is "absurd as well as an insult to the University". He feels that overall, the professors put in full weeks of work.

Collins recently helped defeat the Governors bill that would have divided UMass into three separate campuses. He felt this would have hurt UMass greatly because of a lack of unity. He also revealed that last year when there was a budget decrease which would have resulted in the cutting back of library books and teachers, he worked to restore the needed funds.

Both candidates stated that they would always be "full time legislators."

Absentee ballot application due

The Office of Commuter Student Affairs will sponsor a centralized "Notary Public Service" Tuesday, October 29 through Friday, November 1 in order to assist students who wish to vote in the November 5 election by Absentee Ballot. This service will be available in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, and Notaries Public will be available according to the following schedule:

Tuesday, October 29, 12:00 noon to 5:00 p.m.; Wednesday, October 30, 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.-7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.; Thursday, October 31, 12:00 noon to 9:00 p.m.; Friday, November 1, 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.

Absentee voters are encouraged to appear early in the week in order that any unexpectedly heavy volume can be accommodated through expanded hours and-or additional personnel.

Students wishing to vote by Absentee Ballot should request a ballot AS SOON AS POSSIBLE from the Clerk of the City or Town in which they are registered to vote. Voters must be registered prior to requesting an Absentee Ballot. Those who have not already requested a ballot may do so by using the following form:

Southwest changes proposed

about two weeks to study and the recreation bill will be ready "hopefully before the end of the semester."

He stated that there is currently no reviewing of what happens to the money allocated to various programs in Southwest. He would like to see some sort of evaluation done which would discern the benefits of the programs and their expectations. In this way, the Assembly could then evaluate the effectiveness of each program and determine if the money was being spent properly.

"We need more programs of a diverse nature," he said, "more Southwest-oriented programs. At present there are some things I've got in mind."

Each house in Southwest is represented in the Assembly, but, according to Craig, eight houses currently have no representatives. He states that this fact can be directly traced to the lack of knowledge about the Assembly, which he is trying to correct.

"I guess our main job is to make the living environment within Southwest as comfortable as we can with the limited resources we have," Craig said. "One problem is recognition, from the faculty especially. Some faculty members come to Southwest and teach courses but they get no recognition from their departments. If we can get the faculty to recognize the work of its members within Southwest it would be a big help."

Craig wants the Assembly to become reactive instead of proactive, and needs student feedback in order to do this.

His responsibilities take up a lot of his time, since he is not only responsible to the Assembly but to the administration and the Student Senate. But he is in the Assembly Office in JQA most of the day and is open to criticism and suggestions.

Congress incompetency could cause demise

By MIKE IZDEPSKI

A funny thing happened on the way to the 145th Congress. And if our great-grandchildren are lucky, the President might be able to make his (her?) hilarious announcement just in time for the 4th of July fireworks in 2076: "My fellow senior Americans, with the passing away of its last member at the crisp age of 106, it is my solemn obligation to declare as extinct the Congress of the United States. At the same time I am announcing my candidacy for re-election for an 8th term in office..."

Far out? Not at all, in fact the Congress has been on the endangered list for some time now. Thanks to a legislative system that favors incumbency and old age, efficient government in this country has been all but wiped out. Not that there weren't enough young men and women waiting to offer and press for useful solutions to America's countless ailments, but somehow it seems their efforts have been consistently thwarted by their more "experienced" colleagues.

Take for instance the outdated seniority system that dictates law making on Capitol Hill: When a new bill is introduced in Congress, it is immediately passed on to the appropriate congressional committee for consideration. The committee decides, if the bill should be presented to the full House or Senate for a final vote. In making its recommendation the committee may alter any part of the bill by striking provisions or adding amendments.

Of the 36 standing congressional committees, ranging from such "unknowns" as Public Works and Merchant Marines and Fisheries to the biggies like Ways and Means and Foreign Relations, the membership of no fewer than 36 is determined exclusively by seniority.

This system gives priority to those members with the longest service record in Congress. Regardless of other qualifications (or limitations), they have first grabs at the important committees and the chairmanships.

Thus, congressmen, who play it safe, are conservative and don't jeopardize their re-election by coming out strongly for or against a controversial issue, are most likely to be seated on a committee. Invariably, these wishy-washy opportunists, who too often are willing to prostitute their conscience for another term in office, stay on that committee for the rest of their political lives (once on a committee it is very difficult to remove a member).

It is no surprise then that most bills that are reported out of committee and recommended to Congress are as insipid and inconclusive as the committee members themselves. To make matters worse, as time drags on, committee members, while becoming more eligible for retirement, also become more eligible for the powerful chairmanship positions.

The chairman of a committee dominates its members. By giving or withholding favors he can effectively discipline constituents to "see it his way". Over the past two decades, many a chairman, by defying party programs and policies, has in effect prevented Congress from responding to the nation's needs until the problems became searing crises. The average age of a committee chairman today is 70.

The only workable solution to this whole mess is really quite simple: drastically limiting the number of terms a member of Congress may serve. For no matter how good a man, it is simply an outrage that some congressmen will be running for their 19th or 20th consecutive term in office this coming November (no kidding!).

Also, the length of a term should be adjusted to a uniform 4 years for both houses of Congress. Under the present system House members with their short two year terms seem to be permanently on the campaign trail, neglecting completely their main job of forcefully representing the people of their district, while Senators with their extended 6-year terms spend the greater part of that time touring the country and hounding publicity before getting down to work in time for the next election.

The benefits the just described changes would have on government efficiency are obvious:

Congressional, Presidential and Gubernatorial elections could all be held in the same year, voters would be asked to cast their ballots only once every four years. Interest in the election would increase, the turnout at the polls would rise significantly.

Due to the term limitations the Congress (as already is the case with the Presidency) would be totally renewed every 4 to 8 years. The seniority system would be rendered useless, committee membership could instead be based on such criteria as expertise, experience and individual motivation.

Finally, as an added feature, the quality of our politicians would improve markedly. Statesmen would see Congress not as a lifetime occupancy that is automatically renewed every time election day comes around, but as a temporary period of service toward the welfare of the American People.

So spread the word, write to your Congressmen and Senators pressing them for new legislation to cope with the antiquated practices on Capitol Hill. And above all: vote! It is the only, but at the same time the most powerful weapon you have against all those deadbeats, who so long have been sponging off your and my taxdollars. But do it now...2076 may come sooner than you think!

Letters to the editor

Salt staff wrong on Davis

To the Editor:

It is with dismay that I read the articles by Fred Weiss and Mike Kostek, journalists who fancy themselves liberals and open minded individuals. From the way they talk one would assume that Mr. Weiss and Mr. Kostek have had a great deal of experience organizing Americans to fight the injustices that capitalism inflicts upon our society, and that they have a far more profound understanding of capitalism and imperialism than Angela Davis. If you Mr. Weiss, have been accused of being condescending, it is because you assume yourself to be far more acquainted with contemporary issues than a woman who has spent half of her life battling the U.S. forces of law and order, who has served time in prison where the threat of the gas chamber was imminent, and who could not be silenced by some of the most powerful figures in the world, namely, Ronald Reagan, and Nelson Rockefeller. Do not infer from my argument that I assume all radical activity to be above criticism. Not at all. Those of us who are attempting to affect some kind of social change must continually criticize our policies, ideas and activities, so that we can build on our strengths, and minimize our weaknesses. But there is such a thing as criticism that is highly destructive, and that is the category into which yours falls. Whatever your opinion of the Soviet Union may be, save your accusations Mr. Weiss and Kostek, for a time when we have solved the basic economic and social problems of our own country, and use your newspaper to awaken people to the grave social problems that we are now facing, and not to attack individuals who are doing their best to make some kind of positive impact on American society. It is too easy for those who do nothing to muckrake those who are actively involved in political activity, and unfortunately, it seems that these are the kinds of tactics that the editors of the Collegian employ.

,But worse than that, you now raise the issue of racial inferiority, and support the rights of individuals to publicly affirm such beliefs. And you defend that in the name of freedom of speech. How quickly you do forget that before the rise of Hitler, it was with such freedoms that a massive campaign was launched against the Jewish population of Europe, and that it was the press, the radio and public forums, which provided a means for the airing of racist lies and which later were held responsible for the death of more than six million people. Did those who were slaughtered have the luxury to support the rights of the freedom of speech of their murderers? Are we to support the right of people to lie? Do not come back with the common retort that there is no truth, because that philosophy becomes the very platform on which a policy of genocide is built. Today, in light of what is happening in Boston, Mr. Weiss's defence of Shockley's right to talk about genetic inferiority, is particularly sinister. Maybe when the violence starts hitting home, [and how much closer can it get] maybe then, Collegian, you will be sorry that earlier you didn't spend less time advocating the rights of racists to speak. Maybe you'll realize that your energies would have been more productive, had you spent more time attacking facist policies in the U.S. rather than the Soviet Union, and less time attacking the integrity of fighters like Angela Davis who are doing all they can to awaken the conscience of the American people.

Paying the price

To the Editor:

What, if any, is the justification behind a mandatory fee of $15 for ALL students for an athletics fee? Is there any reason to believe that every student at UMass wants, and can afford, to spend $30 a year on tickets for basketball and football games, to which most students rarely, if ever attend? Sure, the sports programs here, as everywhere, need and deserve more than they are getting - but what is the reason for forcing all of us to pay so much? Most students are not at all wealthy — in fact, most are probably living below the poverty level, especially those with families of their own, and who don't have their parents paying the tuition bill without knowing where all the money is going. That $30 could go a long way towards paying for a family's medical, food, and other vital expenses. I, for one, as a working man and a father, resent having this money taken from me in this way. What has happened to freedom of choice? I would rather spend the money, if I could afford it, on good movies and concerts, but I wouldn't advocate forcing those priorities on people more interested in sports. Why do I have to let them force their interests on me? At the same time, I see that, on the tuition bills, an "optional" fee of $2 is included for MassPIRG, an organization whose purpose it is not my purpose here to debate. How much money have they been able to trick unquestioning students and parents into paying by including the charge on the bill? If even 500 out of the school's 20,000 plus blindly pay the "insignificant" and "optional" fee, then MassPIRG has cheated people out of $1,000. Would the school consider adding $2 for the Socialist Workers Party, Collegian reporters' lunch money, or whatever other self-interest group desires it, onto the tuition bill, and then instruct people that, if they don't want to pay, they have the "option" of subtracting the fees from their bill before they pay. Who is supposed to do the bookkeeping for this school? How much money have students been cheated out of, just considering these two situations?

Tell me, what can a poor boy do?

Why is this man smiling?

The bold confident smile of his Presidency, is fading like the foliage. Gerald Ford's term as President is losing the facade of "crisis populism", as the public is getting over the shock of Watergate long enough to ask "why?" once again.

The Nixon pardon, the Rockefeller nomination, the general state of the economy. Pick one, anyone. Many of the people in this country are beginning to realize once again that the fact that Ford isn't Nixon, doesn't necessarily make Ford a good President. When Ford was nominated for the Vice-Presidency, his friends testified about his integrity, sense of self, love of country, and his early fame as an All-American football player at Michigan.

Few spoke of Ford's intelligence. Friends candidly admitted (with a shy grin) that Gerry Ford was no "intellectual". After two months in the White House, Ford has shown that simply being honest, doesn't make you another Lincoln. Simply being an All-American football player, doesn't prove that you have courage.

If President Ford had as much courage as his wife Betty has shown, perhaps he would really do something about the economy. Ford's approach to the economy is basically "If I do nothing, I can do nothing wrong". However, the country is in such a state, that doing nothing is wrong.

There are construction workers who can't find a job who are willing to build colleges, hospitals, and parks. There are teachers out of work, who have the ability to help people learn how to read and write. There are lawyers who can't find jobs, and people who need lawyers, but can't afford them. The same goes for doctors, engineers, accountants, and industrialists. In fact the only people who seem sure of employment are those who are six feet-seven inches, and can "ram that ball through the hoop". Of course they keep up the average income of all workers, because they pull in 200,000 dollars a year.

Gerry Ford isn't a bad sort of guy. You see Gerry Fords all the time. On State Farm Insurance commercials. At the bowling Alley. Heck, just walk into Whitmore on the second or third floor some afternoon. Soft spoken, low key, but sort of a rah-rah just the same. You know, the kind of guy that your father always used to bowl with on Wednesday nights.

However, President Ford's honesty cannot compensate for his lack of imagination. Perhaps Ford is a product of his environment...but the last progressive thing the silent majority ever did, was jump to the Bull Moose party in 1913.

Gerald Ford is not the man that this country needs as we get ready to enter our second depression in fifty years. Secretary of State Kissinger recently said that he envisioned that the next decade would be one of real cooperation and creative enterprise, or international strife and hardship.

We need someone who can see past the stadium cheers. Someone who gets bored of listening to Nixon's economic advisors tell about the "silver linings" (without mentioning the clouds), and that the end of the tunnel is in sight. We need someone who no longer loves apple pie. Hates football. We need someone who is willing to offend the interests of the established power brokers, and take a chance and try some bold innovative programs. Clearly such a man isn't Gerald Ford.

However, Gerald Ford is our President. There is at least a fifty-fifty chance (and that is more than he deserves) that Nelson Rockefeller will soon be our Vice-President. And soon, after he's done cursing photographers during his stay in the hospital, Richard Nixon will be giving speeches about his innocence, and all the while lobbying for an Ambassadorship. By then the condition of this nation may have deteriorated so much, that peaceful change will be almost impossible.

Yet, Gerald Ford is still smiling. In the great tradition of Coolidge and Hoover, Ford will tell us that things are fine.

But if most of this people are standing on a bread line, who will be listening?

Gas pains again

If you're looking to fill your tank, you needn't search very far for the next few months or so; and you'll be quite pleased to find that gas prices will be dropping. Regular will go for 51.9 cents, Clear will be 53.9, and High test will be a veritable steal at 55.0 cents per gallon. However, if you're looking for some decent service on your auto; well, that's a different story; at least it's that way at what was once called Campus Arco station, on Route 9.

It's not called Campus Arco anymore, as you may have gathered, it's now known as the Arco Full Service station; full service at the gas isles that is. The reason for this is that the local manager has been forced to scrap all his mechanical services and sell gasoline only.

As my car sputtered and gasped along Route 9, I realized that it either (a) had a severe whooping cough, (b) I was breaking in a mechanical bronco, or (c) I needed some muffler service, and fast. I concluded that it was the latter and swerved into the Arco Full Service station.

My gas situation was fine and I pulled straight up to the closed garage doors. Quite a dismal sight befell me. Inside the station attendants were playing handball off the side of the concrete walls. The presence of a potential customer, let alone another human being completely overwhelmed them and I had never received such a kingly welcome at any place before like this. Once I got a word in edgewise and explained that I needed my muffler checked, I got the whole story.

Arco

Super Service:

Eat here

and get gas.

Arco is a subsidiary of Prestigious Oil Inc., and when they discovered how well business was running at Campus Arco they decided to take over operations completely. When for some reason a station goes up for sale the company has first shot at it. This is what happened when Campus Arco exchanged hands on September 9, 1974. According to a former employee, the chief mechanic (name withheld under request) had intentions of assuming ownership having worked for the company for a lengthly period of time.

The iron fist of tyranny shattered his dream. Prestigious Oil bought out the station and has since dispensed with any mechanical service whatsoever. Employees are not allowed to work on their own cars or even wash down an auto with the company hose (soon to be removed).

So what's the big plan? Sources say the company may turn the garage into a store. I can see the sign now as you drive along the highway; "Arco Full Service Station — Eat Here and Get Gas!" Quite the deal; inflated food prices and gas ailments all at one conveniently located center.

My source states further that neither he nor any other employee would even consider working at a "full service station" and a modified Cumberland Farms.

I see a comparison with the great Grange wars that scarred the early west; when company men pushed the small farmers out of business. Everyone is well aware that the collosal oil manufacturers have been cheating the average customer for years but few know of the cut throat, backstabbing policies they lay on their own workers.

The company sells the gas to the dealer and he must in turn draw up his prices in moderation. Plus paying rent for the building, the company profits 17 to 18 cents per gallon of gas sold from the dealer to the customer.

I managed to get one quote: "The system stinks." The main office of Prestigious Oil is located in Philadelphia, the accountants bureau is in Chicago, and the gas dealers for New England are officed in Revere, Mass. "Half the business is done by phone and no one has ever met anyone else at the other end of the lines."

While standing at the pumps, a blue dressed mechanic drove in and said he was from Texaco and would like to buy the station. Just like that. So what becomes of the present manager? And what becomes of the customers (decreasing in number - 700 gallon decrease in gas sales per day) when the snow flies in February. Will the prices suddenly bolt sky high with the everpresent excuse of inflation? So what is to be done. We can wait and let it happen ... wait ... wait ... just wait ...?

Vietnam veterans lack funding

While the attention of the nation has recently focused on the Vietnam war draft resister, here at UMass another remnant of that war - the veteran - is finding his academic life difficult. And the reason, for most, is financial.

A survey released by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office last January indicates that approximately 33 per cent of the 2,300 UMass veterans drop out of school before completing degree requirements. Staff assistant Stephanie Bourbonnais of the Veterans Affairs Office reiterated last week what the study pointed out quite clearly; The Vietnam veteran at UMass lacks sufficient funding to educate himself.

When veterans returned home to the U.S. following the completion of their tours of duty, many had been transformed by the war and passage of time from 18 and 19-year-old adolescents to independent adults no longer able to expect financial help from parents. For many enrolled veterans, this heavy financial adjustment process - not to mention the psychological re-orientation to society - proves to be too difficult. Thus, at UMass, one out of three drop out.

Veterans taking advantage of the 1966 Vietnam era Veterans Bill are finding it inadequate. This allows the veteran a maximum of $220 per month or only $1980 annually. One result is that over 50 per cent of both married and unmarried vets find it necessary to hold part-time jobs.

World War II veterans fared much better under the GI Bill than do their contemporary counterparts. In addition to expense money covering the costs of books, tuition, and supplies, World War II veterans received an additional $75 per month living allowance - a substantial amount because many universities offered special low-cost housing specifically for veterans. And the inequities between the two veteran groups do not stop there. The Vietnam veteran has only 36 months, in contrast to the 48 months of the World War II veteran, in which to take advantage of veteran benefits.

Financial aid from the University is available only to those veterans married and with children. As financial aid is distributed on the basis of need, veterans already receiving a $220 monthly stipend are generally excluded from consideration. One of three respondents to the survey indicated they had serious financial adjustment difficulties during the transition from service life to college life.

There are several ways in which a concerned and responsive public could help alleviate veteran financial problems. Employers, for example, could give veteran job applications preferred treatment. Services could be offered to veterans at lowered rates. Such minor concessions could go a long way in elevating the present level of veteran morale.

Most important, however, would be strong public support of future legislation designed to increase veteran benefits. Only when Americans make it clear that they are concerned with the welfare of those whose lives were interrupted to serve in the war will veterans begin to find education at UMass - and across the country - less than a hardship.

The opinions in this space represent those of a majority of the Board of Editors.

Southie racist

To the Editor:

What's going on in South Boston is racist. It has gone beyond incidents directly related to school segregation. It is no longer safe to be Black in South Boston. Maybe all of South Boston isn't racist — maybe there are parents who are only concerned with their children being bused halfway across the city, but for them to join in the attacks against Black school children, for them to join in attacks against individual Blacks, for nightriders riding through Columbia Point, and for Ku Klux Klansmen to be featured as the main attraction at the anti-busing rallies is nothing but racism. Anything Whites do to Blacks in "Southie" is an incident but when Black people decide to defend themselves, when they do anything, it's violence. Blacks must organize, to demonstrate, to get out into the streets, to get the whole Black community to mobilize to defend the students and to get the cops out of Columbia Point. The need for independent action by the Black community is more urgent than ever. The racists have been on the offensive for years in this state. The Black community must unite and decide upon and launch the massive actions that can defend the students and the community and win the quality education that is needed — by any means necessary.

Senate committee on I.P.O.

To the Editor:

I have recently been shocked by the attitudes of students, faculty and administrators alike. Many have reacted most violently to the news that a special committee of the Student Senate has been created to investigate alleged ills in the International Programs Office.

The matter is being handled with a great deal of care and consideration by this committee. It is a fact finding committee, not a witch hunt.

I find it strange that in an institution of higher learning where the very foundation of its existence is based on free exchange of thoughts, feelings, and ideas, there is no one in this community who is willing to support these ideals. With that I must ask why are you all here, and what are your intentions?

The Special Committee was created to investigate the International Programs Office because students were raising questions about the office. The Senate felt a duty in finding out what is really going on in that office, an office that has been "nationally" acclaimed for its services to "foreign students".

In conclusion, I feel that this committee should be praised for the delicate and appropriate manner in which it is dealing with the situation. People have raised questions, and these people deserve accurate and thorough answers, and these answers they should and will get.

Peter Birnbaum,
Student Senate

Would you hire you?

Of course you would.

You work hard. Care about what you do. And you know your job inside and out.

That's what everybody says.

And for most of us, it's true. But it's also true that we could all do better. Whether we're doctors or teachers, lathe operators or telephone operators, legislators or longshoremen, bankers or union officials...every one of us.

And we'll all have more to show for it.

More money, for one thing. Because we'll be giving each other our money's worth for the products, the services and even the government we pay for.

For another thing, we'll be giving America better ammunition to slug it out with our foreign competitors. Not just here. All around the world. That would help bring the lopsided balance of payments back onto our side. And help make your dollar worth more.

Best of all, as we hit our stride, we'll be protecting jobs here at home. For ourselves and the future. And we'll have a deeper sense of pride in the jobs we've got. So maybe we'll find our work as fresh and challenging as it was the first day on the job.

Which brings us back to the original question.

Would you hire you?

America. It only works as well as we do.

Air Force ROTC awards scholarships

Four members of Air Force ROTC at UMass have been awarded Air Force scholarships in recognition of their outstanding academic and leadership abilities and their potential for success as Air Force officers. The scholarships pay tuition, fees, and book expenses for the students' last two years at the University.

William R. Corrigan has been awarded a scholarship to pursue his bachelor's degree in industrial management. The son of Lt. Col (Ret) and Mrs. Robert Corrigan of Los Alimitas, Calif., Corrigan is a 1972 graduate of Bedford High School. He has been active in intramural sports and in the Arnold Air Society at the University.

Steven Sabatini is pursuing a degree in leisure studies and services. A 1972 graduate of West Springfield High School, Sabatini is the son of Fayia Kulchinsky and Edward Sabatini, and has been active in intramural sports and the Student Senate while at the University.

Howard J. Buckley, the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Buckley, is a graduate of Barnstable High School. He transferred to the University this year from Cape Cod Community College and is seeking a degree in botany.

Edward J. Pokora, son of Edward Pokora of Chicopee, attended Chicopee Comprehensive High School, and is now working on a degree in civil engineering at the University.

Anita Allen to speak

CUE-TEP Center for Urban Education Teacher Education Program will begin its Film and Colloquium Series tonight at 7:00 p.m. in the Marks Meadow Auditorium. The Center for Urban Education Teacher Education Program is honored to present Mrs. Anita Allen as its first guest speaker.

Mrs. Anita Allen is chief of the Program Development Branch Division of Compensatory Education, Bureau of Elementary and Secondary Education in the U.S. Office of Education. She is responsible for directing and coordinating the functions of the Branch, which are concerned with the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

McDonald's presents the Glass of '75.

Next time you feel the urge for a tall one at McDonald's, just ask and we'll wrap your large soda in the ultimate of status symbols. A genuine 100% pure plastic cup. Suitably inscribed with the U.Mass. Minuteman on one side. And those handsome golden arches on the other side. It's free for the asking with any large soda.

Imagine all the exciting uses you can find for this pint-sized beauty. Add a little dirt and go into organic farming. Use it as a new home for your outdated pop-top collection. Or stuff it with all those important little odds and ends you can never find. And if your cup runneth over, just start again with a new one. At the price, you can afford a whole collection.

So come down and spring for a large drink. And get all that status, gratis.

Five faculty members named to state office

Hugh C. Davis and four other UMass faculty have been named to a team that will make reorganization studies of the state's Executive Office of Environmental Affairs.

Davis, a member of the UMass resource planning faculty and associate director of the Institute for Man and Environment, has been asked bv Secretary of Environmental Affairs Charles H.W. Foster to coordinate studies on the need for the reorganization of each of five departments under new legislation (Chapter 806, Acts of 1974) which creates a reorganized Executive Office of Environmental Affairs. Davis, since January of 1972, has served half-time as assistant secretary under Foster.

Foster, who must make recommendations to the legislature on the reorganization of the agencies under his jurisdiction, has appointed five task forces to assist him.

Also named to serve are five UMass faculty members: Eugene N. Engel of the Department of Agricultural and Food Economics, Bernard B. Berger, the director of the Water Resources Research Center, Davis of the Department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning, Ross S. Whaley, head of the Department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning, Joseph S. Larson of the Department of Forestry and Wildlife Management.

Let your fingers do the shopping...

By DAVID KOWAL
Staff Writer

In the past the Collegian, as well as society in general, has been extremely one sided in an issue of utmost importance: that of shoplifting. The Collegian has always looked at the negative side of shoplifting, forgetting that one of the most important aspects of good journalism is getting both sides of the story.

Shoplifters are continually being slandered with the hackneyed outcry of "rip off. Taken literally, the phrase "rip off" means "to remove, as by cutting or tearing away roughly". This makes the shoplifter sound like a person who would pull a band-aid off of someone's hairy ankle, thus putting the shoplifter in the same criminological category as Shylock.

Most people fail to realize that despite the derogatory connotations of being a "rip off person", shoplifting has a great number of positive aspects.

On the ego side of the topic, shoplifting is character building. Just as "you are what you eat", and, as our Skinnerian dining commons tell us, "eat what you take", one need merely apply the transitive property of mathematics in order to discover that "you are what you take". This philosophy is the shoplifter's credo.

Thus, frustrated math majors can fulfill their dreams simply by pocketing pocket calculators, failing chemists can easily satisfy their ambitions by sliding slide rules into their knapsacks, restaurant managers can take revenge on the dining commons by sneaking snacks, and the Minuteman waterboy can boost his ego by stealing every jock strap in the locker room.

Shoplifting sharpens both the imagination and the fingers. The football team could have more completed passes, the basketball team could control more turnovers, and the hockey team could win more fights if team members took up the practice.

Not only is shoplifting healthy for the individual's state of mind, but it is important for social wellbeing. According to Bob "all the idiots" Estelle. "The only thing really promoted (at UMass) is communism." If we are to be true hard core communists, all property must belong to the entire community. It is obvious that the shoplifter is striking out against capitalism, and, thereby, helping us to reach our goal.

Finally, shoplifting increases the rate of employment. For every person that becomes a full time shoplifter, there is one less person to compete with for a job when the honeymoon of college comes to an end.

I realize that shoplifting does have its negative aspects. Shoplifting causes prices to go up, and, if one is a believer in the domino theory, it could lead to bigger crimes, such as big time robbery, rape, or libel, but the positive aspects clearly outweigh any negative aspects.

Do your part to change these "We prosecute shoplifters" signs to "We encourage shoplifters".

Poor no more. With the justification of shoplifting behind you, there'll be no more worries about whether you can afford that book, record, or typewriter.

LIFE/STYLE

Surviving as a freshman

By PAUL LOGUE
Staff Writer

The beginning of the semester is a time of change, especially for freshmen. They are the ones who are relatively unprepared for the diversitized setting of UMass. Within this campus are many programs which will help make an easier transition from Hometown, USA.

Peer sex counseling is one of the major programs working to help students. According to Ron Mazur, program head, there are 26 peer sex counselors in the residential areas, 9 in the Third World, 7 in the Greek system, and 8 working with students off campus.

These counselors are students who have completed the 3 semester course necessary to provide answers to such problems as sexuality, sex education, peer pressure, homosexuality, contraceptives, and other related problems.

This program is provided through a grant from the National Mental Health Association.

Jimmy, one of the dorm counselors, said "many times a student just wishes to rap about something that is bugging them.

We are more than willing to listen, and offer suggestions to rectify the problem. Everything is held in the strictest confidence. Someone can come anytime."

"Let's talk, listen and learn together because everyone is a teacher and everyone is a student" is the syllabus of Psych 190, the Freshman Experience.

Ted Slovin, Allen Greenbaum, and their staff are running the course through the psychology department. It provides fresmen with the opportunities to develop and improve understanding of themselves and others. Interpersonal relationships, decision making, and using skills learned in planning your future are some of the topics covered.

"The objective", said Greenbaum, "is to show that changes are going to occur while here at UMass. Our position is to try to make these profitable in order to have a positive learning experience."

In random interviews with freshmen, the following comments surfaced.

"I had some trouble meeting people even though it is obvious that every person wants friendship. I guess I need more motovation."

It wouldn't take more effort to arrange a little privacy here compared to home. People at orientation were very friendly and I was anxious to return this fall."

"Co-ed floors are good because they create a commune atmosphere. Everyone is friends, feeling free to rap about anything. There seems to be no pressure for dates since last minute plans are best. I know UMass has a reputation for sex but I think everyone is just 'feeling around' right now."

"One good area is the free health services. Although it may seem to be an invitation, people who are mature should be able to handle themselves. Last year I visited regularly and it was really wild and free. Now that I'm up here it doesn't seen to have that much impact. It might be because I'm a lot busier now."

"I know the reputation this place has: UMASS-UPARTY. Some kids have taken the wrong attitude about their freedom.

UMass is a challenge to growth in both mind and body. How you feel is a great part of settling down. So if anything arises to complicate things don't hesitate to seek an informed source on the matter.

It's apple time! I'm sitting on top of a Vermont mountain amidst sun-licked lemon, orange, lime and rasberry lollipopped trees, thinking of how many ways you can prepare one autumn's most delicious and nutritious fruit – the apple.

Apple Sauce is by far the simplest to prepare and the only equipment you need is a hot plate. It can be served with a main dish (as pork or ham) or just eaten alone as a snack or dessert. Recently, I was just told by my ex-roommate that it goes delicious when served hot over ice cream.

If you can avoid peeling the apple's skin, you will abtain the most vitamins. To do this you can either eat the apple fresh or try Baked Apples. They are a cinch to make, but call for an oven.

Finally, we all know that our favorite – Mom's Apple Pie, has the aroma to make anybody's mouth water. A pie is not for beginners, unless you don't mind cheating. To do this, just travel to your nearest supermarket (Stop & Shop) and pick up a frozen pie crust, (about 60 cents).

EQUIPMENT:
Apple Sauce – knife, hot plate
Baked Apples – knife, baking pan, oven
Apple Pie (frozen crust included) – knife, bowl, oven

INGREDIENTS:
Sauce:
8-10 apples
water
½ c. sugar
3 tsp. cinnamon — Serves 5

Baked:
4 apples
4 tsp. cinnamon
4 tsp. sugar
4 tsp. margarine or oil — Serves 4

Pie:
2 c. apples
2 tsp. cinnamon
three-fourths c. sugar
9" pie shell
Optional: ½ tsp. nutmeg and cloves

To make up the sauce, pare the apples and dice them. Add the sugar and spices. Fill a pot with water that is one-third the amount of the apple mixture. Bring it to a boil and add apple mixture. Boil on medium until soft, then mix with a fork and serve.

For Baked Apples, preheat oven to 350 degrees F. Core them and sprinkle with sugar and spice on the inside. Place them on greased pan and bake until soft.

For the pie, preheat oven to 350 degrees F, for the pie. Pare and dice apples. Mix them with spices in a bowl. Now add this mixture into the pie shell. Bake for about 45 minutes and enjoy!

Apples are freshest and cheapest when hand-picked. This can be done at Atkins Farm for $3 per bushel.

the law & you

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND

Howland is a practicing attorney in Amherst. He will offer legal advice to students who desire it by mail to Box 770, Amherst, MA. All responses will be printed in full as part of the column.

Readers who are UMass students are reminded that a fully-staffed Legal Services Office funded by the Student Senate exists on campus to handle formal legal representation.

The matter of landlord-tenant relationships is a continuing and pesistent problem for students and also for tenants and landlords alike.

The following is a reprint of the laws of Massachusetts that most directly affect the typical landlord-tenant relationship.

There is no emphasis on either side of the relationship. The text is an attempt to be a plain English rendition of the principle statutes and is as comprehensive as appears to be necessary.

Because of a serious question that arose in a local apartment complex, I would like to make special emphasis of the responsibility of landlords to segregate security deposits given to them by tenants whether under lease or not.

It is a principle of common law, and there are many statutes that apply in one form or another that money entrusted to another person for safekeeping or in the nature of a bond, like a security deposit, does not become the property of the person entrusted.....in this case, a landlord.

The only way a landlord obtains the right to the funds labeled as a security deposit is by operation of law or the decision of a court. For instance, the landlord's claim to a deposit might ripen into property, or at least the appearance thereof, when a tenant defaults on rent and-or leaves premises in a damaged condition.

Under Chapter 186, section 15(b) the landlord's possible property right does not occur until the end of the tenancy. If a landlord entrusted with special funds should use those funds for any purpose before the right matures under the law, the landlord may very well be guilty of larceny or embezzlement, or breach of trust, all of which are criminal violations.

Herewith follow the statutes in a hopefully simplified translation. Students with questions about the meaning of any of these statutes should be certain to discuss the matter with their legal services office.

Chapter 186--Section 11. In leased tenancies a landlord may begin eviction proceedings if rent is not paid within fourteen days of the due date. However, after such proceedings are begun the tenant may stop the proceedings absolutely by paying all rent in arrears. If the situation occurs a second time the tenant may be evicted if payment is made.

Section 12. Tenancies at will, which for all practical purposes means tenancies without leases or "month to month" or "week to week" tenancies may be ended by notice without any reason to the other party 30 days in advance of the date of termination.

For legal purposes this means notice to terminate effective 30 days after the next rent is due. For instance, if rent is due on the first of the month, notice by either landlord or tenant to the other party to terminate given on the fifth of October, begins to be effective on the first of November and the tenancy ends on the first of December. Also, if rent is not paid within fourteen days of the due date, the landlord may evict in substantially the same way as under Section 11.

Section 14. A landlord who furnishes heat, hot water, gas, electricity, other utilities or services who wilfully or intentionally fails to do so when required and any landlord who wilfully or intentionally interferes with the tenant's quiet enjoyment of his premises may be fined not less than $25.00, up to $300.00 or may be imprisoned up to six months, plus damages including attorney's fees. It is also unlawful to transfer a utility account to the tenant's name without informing the tenant.

Section 15. Any lease provision which provides that a landlord is not liable to a tenant for injuries caused by the landlord's negligence is against public policy and void.

Section 15A. A tenant cannot waive the requirement for lawful notices and any such waiver, if signed, is void.

Section 15B. No lease provision which states that a landlord may enter the tenant's premises except to inspect, repair or show to new tenants or a buyer is valid. A landlord can get a court order to enter premises he believes are abandoned. No landlord can collect a security deposit in excess of two months' rent nor charge more than the cost of a new key or lock nor any interest or penalty for failure to pay rent until 30 days overdue.

A landlord shall pay 5 per cent interest at the end of each year on any deposit held as security. Any security deposit shall be returned within thirty days of the termination of a lease or tenancy. Interest shall be added and deductions, if any, must be itemized and may include damage caused by tenant, unpaid rent and tax increases if known and between Holyoke and Amherst off rte.

Valley Advocate, Oct. 9, 1974

Coming to UMass is a man by the name of Ralph Graham, who recently has played most of the big clubs in New England and is embarking on his first national tour. So far he has met with rave reviews of both his album, Differently (Sussex SRA 8033), and his live show.

Graham's music is a mixture of all that is right in music, drawing strongly from soul and rock camps together, while maintaining a very strong personal identity. He sees himself as something of an innovator, what music biz biggies like to call a "cross over," or somebody who can appeal to anybody.

A full sound, strong backing band, as well as Graham's own visual presence, promise to make his Oct. 16-19 date at UMass a memorable occasion. Also appearing with Ralph Graham is the band Fate, whose single "Darlin" of Beach Boys fame is about to be distributed nationally. All in all, a chance to hear some newand different music which promises to be excellent.

Come and have a good time, and remember, the weekend is long enough for

Prisoner of Conscience week to be observed Oct. 13-20

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Amnesty International will observe its 1974 Prisoner of Conscience Week from October 13 through 20. During this period, Amnesty seeks to focus international attention on the plight of hundreds of thousands of Prisoners of Conscience throughout the world -- men, women, and children who have neither used nor advocated violence, but have been incarcerated solely for their beliefs. These 13 cases have been chosen to emphasize the injustice and cruelty experienced in over 100 countries by the 3,450 prisoners currently under adoption or investigation by Amnesty groups. Subadi of Indonesia - Elsa Rudolfi of Chile - Abdul Aziz Al Mu'Ammar of Saudi Arabia - Vyacheslav Chornovil of the Soviet Union - Lazarus Nkala of Rhodesia - Bishop Chi Hak-sun of South Korea - Vladimir Makarov of Bulgaria - General Liber Seregni of Uruguary - Huynh Tan Mam of South Vietnam - Encarnacion Formenti Arener of Spain - Dr. Pablo Castellanos Caballero of Cuba - Martin Sostre of the United States, a Black intellectual who ran a bookstore.

Martin Sostre is a Black activist apparently framed by the police because of his radical activities, namely the selling of books that might inspire a radical Black consciousness and the using of his bookstore for gatherings of like-minded people.

In July, Arto Williams, a known drug addict, testified that he had bought heroin in Sostre's shop. Sostre was arrested for sale of narcotics and sentenced to a 40-year prison term. Williams has since tracted his testimony, the sole grounds for Sostre's conviction, and the police officer who apparently organized the frame-up has been dismissed from the Buffalo police force for misplacing a quantity of heroin.

During his imprisonment, Sostre has been subjected to harrassment and has been put in solitary confinement because he refuses to submit to rectal searches and shave off his beard. An appeal to have Sostre removed from the state facility where he is now being kept and where his safety is in jeopardy, has been denied.

minds matter
MITRE is a place which daily faces the challenge of minds over matter, and where, even more importantly, minds matter a lot. Since we're a nonprofit system engineering company operating wholly in the public interest and dealing with tough problems assigned to us by more than a score of governmental agencies, we know that our greatest resource is the human mind. And we know that the kind of mind we need also needs to know that it will be working on important problems with other professionals. What's more, we'll be quite specific in spelling out your assignment to you. All of this because you matter . . . and because at MITRE, minds matter.
We are currently seeking new graduates to work in command and control systems, information processing systems, electronic surveillance systems, communications systems, and environmental, health and other social systems.
If you're an EE, Computer Science, Math, Operations Research, or Physics major, you could be working on problems in telecommunications, voice communications, microwave and digital signal processing, educational information systems, radar design, propagation studies or advanced modulation, coding, error control and data compression techniques.
Or, you might want to get involved with solid waste disposal techniques, digital information systems, data handling and reduction, microprogramming techniques, data base structure, time sharing, text processing, management information systems, computer program design and development or evaluation of present day software for phase-over to next generation machines. These are just a few of the areas in which you might get involved at MITRE.
All of these positions require a minimum of a BS degree. If you have more than a bachelor's, that's even better. Almost ⅔ of our 750 technical staff members have advanced degrees.
All these openings are at our corporate headquarters at Bedford, Massachusetts (suburban Boston). If you are interested and think you can meet our standards, send us your resume. Better yet, we'd like to talk to you on campus. Sign up at your Placement Office. We'll be there on October 31.

Ma Bell to prosecute

"SHOPLIFTERS WILL BE PROSECUTED" is a familiar warning posted in clothing, department and grocery stores in an effort to curb thefts.

New England Telephone wants to curb toll call fraud -- another kind of stealing.

The company will seek prosecution of anyone caught billing calls to an unknowing third party or using an unauthorized credit card.

It is also illegal to publish the number or code of an existing, cancelled, revoked, expired or non-existent credit card or coding system which is employed in the issuance of such credit cards.

If convicted of publishing such credit card information, a person could face a $2,000 fine, imprisonment up to 12 months, or both.

"We don't want to have anyone prosecuted." Lorraine Maynard local business office manager said, "but fraudulent billing is stealing. People should understand that when they make fraudulent calls that they could be jeopardizing their career or their future. If we closed our eyes and did nothing, all telephone users would have to shoulder the added cost caused by these abusers."

"Most of these calls are made from coin telephones. In some locations we have been forced to remove all coin telephones because of high revenue losses. This is not only an inconvenience for many people, but our other customers have to absorb the losses."

This summer the telphone company introduced a new method of detecting fraudulent use of credit cards. The operator has immediate access to computerized information to check credit card numbers.

This new method -- along with the electronic detecting equipment already in use -- promises to make toll cheating difficult.

Do you need life insurance?

By ROBERT W. COOPER
Assistant Professor of General Business and Finance
School of Business Administration

In recent weeks, I have received a number of questions concerning the purchase of life insurance from students in my insurance classes and other students who have been approached by the agents of various life insurance companies.

Unless approached with care, the purchase of life insurance can be an unnecessarily costly and wasteful venture. For example, if you buy life insurance without first carefully evaluating your own personal needs for insurance protection, you may spend a considerable amount of money for the wrong types and amounts of coverage. Moreover, since the prices charged for the same types and amounts of insurance protection vary widely among life insurance companies, buying a policy without carefully comparing the costs for various companies' products may result in your paying thousands of dollars extra over the life of your policy for no additional benefits.

Even worse, the failure to properly evaluate the financial strength of a life insurance company may result in the purchase of insurance from a company that will be insolvent and thus, unable to pay the promised benefits at the time of your death.

Since the life insurance purchase decision is too complex to discuss in a short article, a discussion of the numerous factors to be considered by a "typical" college student (i.e., a student with no dependents and limited financial resources) in buying life insurance will be presented

ON: Wednesday, October 16
AT: 7:00 p.m.
IN: Public Health Auditorium, Room 329, Public Health Center

Some of the topics to be covered will be:

Determining your NEEDS for life insurance.

Why double indemnity coverage has no economic justification.

How to properly compare the prices of life insurance policies.

The meaning of a Best's recommendation and its proper place in the purchase decision

Food ecology could save money

By MARY LAWSON
Staff Correspondent

Students waste approximately $18,200.00 worth of milk and margarine per year in the Dining Commons, according to Marie Cappadona, assistant director of food services.

"This averages $2.00 per student and we could use the money for special meals or other needed improvements in the Dinig Commons," she said.

Cappadona said the four Dining Commons are conducting the second measurement of food waste in a series. Two Dining Commons - Franklin and Berkshire - collected the milk that students left on trays in the first measurement.

One building collected 16 gallons. The other collected 18½ gallons. This was just from lunch and dinner that day. Together students wasted 34½ gallons of milk.

"The total loss to the Food Service Department is about 69 gallons of milk a day for a total cost of $93.84," she added.

She said the situation was similar at Worcester and Hampshire Dining Commons where employees collected margarine patties. Worcester had to throw away 6 pounds and Hampshire 9½ pounds for the lunch and dinner. This totals at 15½ pounds. For the four dining halls this would come to about 31 pounds.

"With margarine patties costing .635 a pound, if no one wasted any margarine patties, savings which could be more wisely used, would be at least $20.00 a day," Cappadona said.

The directors, she said, chose milk and margarine for the measurement test because they always taste the same so there's no question of whether or not the students like these items each day. If they had selected meat or vegetables students could claim they threw them away because they didn't like the way the employees had prepared the food, said Cappadona.

"If students helped we could do a lot to control the price of the meal ticket and improve the services we offer. Food Services and students should all work together for the good of the department. We are all fighting inflation and should all try to come up with ideas.

"The Dining Commons are promoting good food ecology - the wise use of resources involved in operating the Dining Commons. They are putting up ecology posters in the Dining Commons and notices on the tables to make the students aware of their unwise use of resources."

Walkathon seeking sponsors

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

Sign-up and sponsor sheets for the Gamma Sigma Sigma - Alpha Phi Omega Heart Fund Walkathon will be available starting today on the Campus Center concourse.

Gamma Sigma Sigma and Alpha Phi Omega, the National Service Sorority and Fraternity will sponsor a Heart Fund Walkathon on Saturday, November 2.

Leaving at 10 A.M. (with sign-in at 9:30) the Walkathon will cover a twelve mile circular route from Haigis Mall (next to Whitmore) through South Amherst and back again.

Participants will be sponsored by anyone who will pledge to donate an amount of money for each mile that a particular participant walks.

A pair of sneakers will be awarded to the person turning in the most money collected from sponsors by November 12. Money will be collected on the Campus Center Concourse on November 7, 8, 11, and 12.

There will be a competition between dorms as well as the individual competition.

Sign-up and Sponsor sheets for the event will be available on the Campus Center concourse today, and October 17, 21, 23, and 25.

More information on the event can be obtained from Janice Ouellette at 253-3894, Ellen Crowell at 546-7367, and Lynne Miskewich at 546-8024.

LESC to begin research project

By ERIC WALGREN

UMass Students have been invited to participate in a Police Research Project sponsored by the Amherst Law Enforcement Study Committee. (LESC).

Established in 1973 by Amherst Town Meeting to make recommendations on police practices as they concern civil liberties, the LESC is composed of nine members representing a broad cross section of the community.

The Project Coordinator is Ken Garfield, of Hampshire College, and he is assisted by Eric Walgren.

The LESC has mapped out five research areas, which are:

1. Police-Community relations — From a sociological perspective, to research theories and practices concerning (1) the police relationship with various subgroups of the community who come into conflict with the police, and (2) the police relationship with citizens needing the services of police.

2. Police policy and procedures — From a legal perspective, to research law enforcement theory and practices that promise to give maximum protection to civil liberties.

3. Hiring and training practices — From a management perspective, to research theories and practices (1) of hiring that will assure a police department membership that is both professional and fairly represents various community subgroups and (2) of training that will assure adequate skills prior to active duty and expanded skills "on the job."

4. Civilian Boards — From a legal and sociological perspective, to research theories and practices to determine wheter a civilian board should (1) advise the police on policies and-or (2) review citizens complaints about police conduct.

5. Victimless crimes — From a legal and political perspective, to research modern theories and legislative practices concerning "victimless crimes" in the areas of sex and drugs for the purpose of reevaluating the meaning of the right to privacy.

By conducting research in their area of academic interest, students might (1) write a paper within an existing course or (2) initiate an independent study course under faculty sponsorship. The LESC plans to incorporate the research studies into its Report making recommendations to Town Meeting for legislation next May.

In addition, the studies may provide a basis for a direct working relationship between groups and the police, according to Garfield.

The LESC encourages students to follow their research into the committee's process, so making their academic work part of local reality. The maximum enrollment for academic credit is 10 students, although formal enrollment is not necessary.

The LESC hopes that the Police Research Project can unite common effort to improve the quality of life in the Town.

Interested students are encouraged to leave their name, address and phone with the secretary in the Legal Studies office in 112 Hampshire House at 545-2000 or 2001.

Asian roles - white's roles

The Women's radio show at WMUA is producing a half hour program with the cooperation of the Asian-American Student Association on White roles and Asian roles in American society. Asians in America are often laveled as foreigners automatically, but they have been here for 140 years. What is their role in relation to the dominant White groups and the progressive Women rights movements and other Minorities?

This show will be aired at 10:15, Thursday, Oct. 17, 1974. It will attempt to give the whole college community a glimpse of how Asian roles and White roles interact and what this mean to the rest of American society on personal and social levels.

provided by the lease, but may not include "reasonable wear and tear." Itemized bills must state the precise damage, the nature of the repair and the actual or estimated cost. Any money paid by the tenant that isn't rent is deemed to be a security deposit. If the landlord fails to comply with the foregoing a court may double any monies wrongfully withheld in an award to the tenant.

Section 15C. If a landlord intends to collect any real estate tax increase from a tenant the terms must be clearly stated in the lease including the basis (the tax before increase) and the prorata proportion that the tenant is liable for as well as a provision for refund if an abatement is obtained by the landlord.

Section 15D. A landlord who has orally agreed to sign a lease and if the tenant has signed it, must return a signed copy of the lease to the tenant within 30 days or be fined up to $300.00.

Section 18. Any landlord or agent thereof who threatens to or takes reprisals against a tenant for reporting or complaining of actual or alleged violations to appropriate authorities including any attempted eviction, rent increase or change in terms of tenancy within six months of such a report may be liable to the tenant for not less than one month's rent nor more than three month's rent or the actual damage to the tenant if it is greater, including reasonable attorney's fees.

Section 19. If a landlord has written notice of a defect in the premises from a tenant or appropriate authority and he has not repaired it in a reasonable time, the landlord shall be liable for any injury resulting from the failure to repair the defect.

Chapter 111 -- Section 127L. If a building is in violation of any health or safety regulation and the landlord has notice of such defect from an appropriate authority he must begin or contract to repair within 21 days unless a shorter time has been ordered by a court or the authority. If the landlord fails to do so the tenant or tenants may effect the repairs and pay for them or pay reduced rent and vacate the premises within a reasonable time. If the tenants pay for the repairs they can withhold up to two months' rent in repayment. Tenants may combine with all other tenants in a unit or complex in making the repairs and computing the two months' rent so long as all the tenants involved are affected by the defect. The tenant must permit the landlord access to make repairs and may be liable if more than the cost of repairs is withheld. The tenant may not invoke this section if he or she cause the defect. The landlord cannot require the tenant to make the repairs, but they may both agree to that course of action.

Chapter 143 -- Section 3S. A landlord must post a sign containing the name, address and phone number of a responsible and available person which all tenants can reasonably see. Failure to do so may result in a fine of $50.00 per day.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Tuesday, October 15

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Be quick about making arrangements for another to take over your part of the labor on a present project. Otherwise, you will cause a setback.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Keep to a prearranged schedule. Should you fail to do so, those dependent upon you as a guide may be forced to fall by the wayside.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Without exception, appointments must be kept. Now is an excellent time to demonstrate to others your willingness to work hard and long.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Concentrate on those activities which can — if you let them — take your full mind. Another's interest in you may become more obvious.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Avoid worry. Keep clear of those who would disturb you with questions you either cannot or don't wish to answer. Keep calm.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The wise Pisces will take on problems as they arise rather than wait for what he considers an "appropriate" time for action. Accept another's aid.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take care not to mistake the issues about which others on the home front are arguing. Otherwise, you may find yourself on the wrong side.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You would do well to take your own and another's problems seriously. When solutions are found, you will have plenty of time for relaxation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You must not become overanxious about up-coming events. Prepare yourself well for what is to come; then relax and be confident.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A day during which you would be better off taking no one into your confidence. Prepare for coming events well in advance and you invite success.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Conserve your energy this morning. You will need to be able to call on all your forces in the afternoon without fear of being ignored.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Problems on the home front are to be taken as seriously as those that have to do with your career. Take care not to underestimate a child's influence.

VITA meeting to be held tonight

VITA, the Volunteer Income Tax Program, will be holding an organizing meeting at SBA 120 tonight at 7:30.

According to its organizers, VITA, enables its participants to learn the fundamentals of the federal tax code in order to prepare the forms of fellow students and low-income groups in the community. Last year, it was estimated that the program saved $28,956 for those who would have otherwise gone to an independent tax preparer.

Student participants can receive from 1-3 academic credits in the program.

The program consists of: a series of colloquia sessions instructed by previous VITA volunteers to give the student a broad understanding of the tax code, a short series by the IRS and Massachusetts tax authorities on actual form preparation, and of course, the field work itself where the student can apply his newly acquired skills.

The VITA program was originally implemented by OUTREACH where William Burke and Richard Sockol steered it from infancy into the program it is now.

This year is a transition period spokesmen say, where the program is being transfered to the Accounting Department. This effort is being supported by Professor Anthony Krzystofik, chairman of the department, and Professor John Anderson, a veteran tax expert at the school of business.

The actual operation of this year's VITA program is the joint responsibility of its coordinator, Nate Gordon, a graduate student in accounting, and four administrative assistants, all students--Richard Finkel, Craig Kaplan, Steve Sandler, and Keith Seidman.

Series continues deadlocked

By IRA MILLER
UPI Sports Writer

OAKLAND — The Oakland A's, still a little troubled by Reggie Jackson's leg problems, hoped to turn the home field advantage into a winning one when the world series resumes here Tuesday night.

"We've won one, and they've won one," Jackson said Monday. "But now we're home for three. I hope we win a couple here and then--let's see."

The defending champion A's and the Los Angeles Dodgers traded 3-2 victories the first two series games at Los Angeles.

Jim "Catfish" Hunter, Oakland's 25-game winner who saved the opener in relief, will oppose left-hander Al Downing, 5-6 this season, in Tuesday night's game. All three games in Oakland will begin at 5:30 p.m. PDT, so they can be telecast in prime time in the east.

Oakland was held to six hits in each of the first two games by the Dodger's two top starters, Andy Messersmith and Don Sutton, each time with help from Mike Marshall.

The lack of hitting is a big enough worry for the A's, who also managed a total of only five hits in the final two games of the American League playoffs.

But Oakland was outhit and outscored by the New York Mets last year and the Cincinnati Reds two years ago and still won both world series.

A bigger factor as the series goes along could be the play in right field of Jackson, a superb outfielder when he's healthy, but presently hobbled by a pulled hamstring muscle in his right leg.

The problem has been that in each of the first two games Jackson was slow in getting to balls hit down the rightfield line, an area where he's strictly on his own.

On Saturday, Jackson took a long time getting to a single down the line by Bill Buckner, allowing Dave Lopes to make it from first to third with ease. Then Jackson couldn't pick the ball up, and Lopes scored.

Sunday, Bili Russell dropped a pop fly single down the line to set up the first Los Angeles run as Ron Cey ran from first to third, knowing that Jackson would never be able to catch the ball.

"I couldn't have gotten to that one even with a good leg," Jackson said, but that's something no one will ever know for sure.

Even at 80 or 90 per cent of efficiency, manager Alvin Dark still will keep Jackson in the lineup because he needs his bat.

Jackson had a homer and single in the first game, and doubled to help the A's to their two runs in Sunday's defeat.

People were also talking Monday about the dramatic finish of Sunday's game, when Marshall picked off pinch-running specialist Herb Washington for the second out of the ninth inning and just about ended the game right there.

Some thought it was a poor spot to use Washington, without doubt the least experienced player ever thrust into such an important spot in the world series. Dark, however, indicated he would continue to use Washington--who had no baseball experience before the A's signed him this year solely as a runner--in the series, experienced or not.

Hunter, 25-12 with a 2.49 era this season, had a perfect 3-0 record in the last two series. He was the winner in the A's 2-1 pennant clincher at Baltimore last Wednesday, and was employed for five pitches to strike out Joe Ferguson for the final out in the series' opener.

Downing, victim of Hank Aaron's 715th home run last April, was a spot starter for Los Angeles this year, completing only one of his 16 starts.

UPI Telephoto

Getting an eye is Oakland A's Catfish Hunter, scheduled starter in tonight's third World Series clash in Oakland between the Dodgers and Athletics. The Dodgers evened the series in Los Angeles Sunday afternoon with a 3-2 win after the A's had won Saturday's opener 3-2 with the help of a Reggie Jackson homer.

Portland "stormy" - no pay

PORTLAND, ORE. [UPI] - There was talk today of Portland storm players boycotting Wednesday night's World Football League game with the Hawaiians here because they were not paid last Saturday, but one player said the chances were "slim."

"We did not get a paycheck last Saturday," the player said, "but Ron Mix (Storm General Manager) told us at the time it was not because the owner (Bob Harris of Toronto) didn't have the money. It was just a temporary problem of 'liquidity' and that it would become available in the next few days."

There was a meeting of players Sunday but less than 10 talked about not playing the game and insisted on a showdown with Harris before the game, the player said.

"Most of the players at Sunday's meeting were joking about the situation and not really worried," he said. "The general consensus is that we'll play."

He added another meeting would be held Tuesday and "hopefully we'll get to meet then with Harris or Mix and have this straightened out."

Portland contracts call for players to be paid every week. However, a week ago players received post-dated checks "and then Saturday we didn't get paid at all," the player said.

It is the fifth time a WFL team was reported to have missed a payroll.

Championships more than bats and balls

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Sports Staff

At times one has to wonder if it's not the "all new, star studded, Match Game '74" or a group of "What's My Line" mystery guests.

I refer, of course, to this year's version of the baseball World Series between the Oakland Athletics and the Los Angeles Dodgers. It seems that every time the television cameras scan the stands they pick out a Hollywood celebrity or three. Just about all of these folks are Dodger fans (Liza Minelli, Jack Carter, Walter Mathau) and one starts to ask himself why the Oakland A's don't have some of the above-listed famous characters sheering them on the greater heights.

It seems that the A's have their own share of famous characters in the clubhouse. During the regular season, Oakland catcher, Rav Fosse iniured his back in an attempt to separate outfielders (and A's teamates) Reggie Jackson and Bill North who were having a private disagreement.

The day before the start of the World Series, pitchers John (Blue Moon) Odom and Rollie Fingers got into a skirmish when Odom informed Fingers of some unpleasant thoughts about the later's wife. Fingers, whose head was knocked against the side of a shopping cart which was in the A's locker room, received eight stitches to the back of his head while Odom twisted his ankle as he two wrestled each other to the floor. (Luckily for the American League Champs both are able to pitch, and have pitched, thus far in the Series.) The day of Oakland's first game victory in L.A., a woman tried to get the autographs of some of the A's. When she was refused by all but Jackson (remember his from his dealings with North?), she told Reggie that he was "a lot nicer than his friends." Jackson then best summed up the A's feelings for each other when he replied while jotting down his John Hancock, "Lady, on the Oakland A's there are no friends."

> "...(series) is a confrontation between the good guys and the bad guys, clean against dirty..."

The Series between Los Angeles and Oakland shapes up not to be a battle between the National and American Leagues, but a confrontation between the good guys and the bad guys, clean against dirty, Snoopy versus the Red Baron.

The Dodgers are the type of team that would help the proverbial little old lady across the proverbial street; the A's are the kind of club that would run down that same little old lady while a boy scout was helping her to the other side of the intersection.

Even the teams' managers are different; Walter Alston, skipper of the Dodgers, is a stately 61 years of age and has been the Los Angeles manager for 21 of those 61 years, Oakland manager, Alvin Dark, is in his first year as A's head man and was hired to the Oakland job by the same man who fired him from his last managerial assignment-eccentric A's owner, Charlie Finely.

In Los Angeles, the excitement is over which celebrity will throw out the first ball; in Oakland the question is, which Athletic will throw the first punch.

Golfers tie Yale for ECAC title

By RICH SEVIERI
Sports Staff

"IF we have to thumb a ride to the Nationals at Ohio State, we'll do it," said UMass golfer, John Lasek.

To Lasek and his teammates, the NCAA golf championships represent the final hurdle. They had won the right to attempt that final hurdle by tying Yale for the 15th annual ECAC golf championship at Forsgate Country Club in Heightstown, New Jersey.

UMass and Yale tied for the team title with 307 totals. The four out of five best team member scores were used in the 18-hole tournament.

Howard Terban continued his sensational shot making and posted the low score for UMass with a 74. Joe Artman and Tom Toski had a pair of 77's. And John Lasek, a model of consistency all year, had a 79 for the 307 total.

Steve Sherrill paced the Yale squad with a 73.

The UMass players felt that the fifth team member score that is normally used to break tournament ties should have been employed.

"They do it in all the other tournaments," said John Lasek. "You want to have one winner in a tournament, especially when your're playing for the Eastern championship."

Joe Prisco, ECAC district golf chairman, was unavailable for comment as to why the teams fifth team member scores were not used.

Rick Olson was the Minutemen's fifth scorer with an 82. Mike Sargeant was Yale's with an 85.

Olson, fresh from his New England individual championship, was not disappointed by his score.

"As long as the team won, it doesn't matter what I shot," said Olson. "We've proved we're the best in the East. I believe we've earned a shot at the national title next spring."

Dartmouth's Jerry Daly rolled in a four-foot birdie putt on the first hole of sudden death to win the individual championship. Daly and seven others had tied at 73 over the regulation 18. Howard Torban was low medalist for UMass with a 74 for seventh place.

The 6650 yard, par 72, Forsgate Country Club layout was ripped apart by the collegiate golfers in Wednesday's practice round. On Thursday the pin placements were changed making approach shots difficult. If the green was missed, the ball would roll into one of the many strategically placed traps. These changes along with a strong wind on Thursday sent scores soaring.

Temple, with 12 golfers on full scholarships, finished third at 309. Indiana University shot 312 to finish fourth. Buffalo was fifth at 313. Dartmouth was sixth at 316. Army, Harvard, Cornell and Niagara rounded out the field. All teams qualified for the ECAC championship by winning or placing second in regional tournaments the week before.

UMass golf coach, Fan Gaudette, pointed to the team's depth and overall attitude as the main reasons behind it's tremendous performance this fall. The trophy ease in Boydon's lobby has 3 new additions, all won by the golf team this season: the Toski Invitational trophy; the New England golf championship bowl; and now the ECAC trophy.

"We're number one on the east coast," said Gaudette. "One of the reasons is that these kids stay together, and get along together great. There are no individual stars. Each and every man can carry the load."

All that remains for the UMass golfers is that one last hurdle, the nationals at Ohio State.

Stingley stung; to miss Bills

FOXBORO, Mass. [AP] - Darryl Stingley, wide receiver for the National Football League New England Patriots, has a broken left forearm and will miss Sunday's game against Buffalo, the team announced Monday.

A spokesman said Stingley had undergone X-rays Monday, and that his arm was in a cast. He called speculation that the receiver would miss the whole season "premature."

"I don't think you can jump to any conclusions," the Patriot spokesman said.

Stingley was hurt in last Sunday's game against the New York Jets, which the Patriots won 24-0, when he collided with teammate Steve Schubert and defensive backs Rich Sowells and Roscoe Word. Stingley and Schubert were running what was supposed to be a crossing pattern.

All four walked off the field under their own power.

Three other players who received minor injuries Sunday will play next week, the Patriots said. They are linebacker Bob Geddes, who sprained his knee, and two running backs with sprained ankles, Mack Herron and rookie Andy Johnson.

Stickers stumble, 2-0

By LINDA MACKLER

It would be nice to blame the loss on the poly-Turf. Or on the weather. But the blame really lies with Springfield College, who forced UMass to play their kind of game and ultimately defeated them, 2-0.

"I'm not saying Springfield is the better team," Coach Albert said of Saturday afternoon's field hockey game at Benedum Field. It's just that the team who played better today won."

In bringing their record to 3-1, the women's field hockey team played their worst game this season. It was a sloppy and congested attempt, the second half worse than the first. UMass had only six shots on goal compared to Springfield's twenty.

The players had immediate difficulty adjusting to the speed of the turf. Springfield picked this up and quickly placed UMass on the defensive, which threw the offense off and destroyed their passing game.

The UMass players panicked and hung back, waiting for the ball to come up to their sticks. They started rushing their plays and set their timing off. There never seemed to be an available pass receiver around.

"There was no lack of hustle or desire," Coach Albert said. "We just did not play an intelligent game."

"But," she continued, "Bridgewater State had better watch out. We are not a losing ball club. The players are down and disappointed now, but they won't stay there."

The poly-Turf did not affect the junior varsity's game at all, as they were able to slightly even up the score and come up with a 2-2 tie.

They continued their excellent season's play with outstanding defensive performances by Olivia Lovelace and Nancy Ryder.

The forwards did a very nice job and according to Coach Albert, "the team was able to co-ordinate an intelligent passing game."

The two teams will be playing one more away game at Bridgewater State College and then the home audience can look forward to four games in a row directly behind the Northeast Physical Education Building starting on Thursday, October 18th.

Face tough Westfield today

Booters bombard B.U., 4-1

By BEN CASWELL

Forwards Mohammed Othman and Tom Coburn sparked the UMass Soccer Minutemen to a well-played 4-1 victory over the Terriers of Boston University on Saturday.

Early in the game UMass had some good scoring chances with Coburn just missing goals on two occasions, but it was not until Othman came into the game that the Minutemen finally got on the scoreboard. After 20 minutes of play in the first half Othman hit Coburn with a quick pass past the B.U. defense that Tom fired into the upper right of the net. Less than three minutes later Othman and Coburn again combined for a score with Tom doing some fancy footwork out in front before beating the goaltender to the lower left.

The play then settled into a somewhat ragged passing game by both teams until 34 minutes had gone by. It was at that time that Tom Coburn turned his scoring talents to assisting as he hit Bill Macdonald with a pass from the right wing that Macdonald turned into the third UMass score. Bill fired a shot that caromed off of someone out in front and skipped past the B.U. goalie along the ground to his left.

B.U.'s inexperience in their starting line-up showed on clearing plays that the Terriers were having trouble with. The Minutemen controlled the play almost completely in the first half and when the period ended they held a 3-0 lead.

The second half showed no real surprises as the Minutemen still controlled the play. The only UMass scoring was again provided by Coburn and Othman only this time in reverse with Mohammed getting the goal and Tom the assist. B.U. averted a shut-out very late in the game when they were able to beat goalie Paul Peloquin after some good action out in front of the net.

Coach Al Rufe commented concerning today's Westfield game that, "if we play our game, we'll beat them. And if we can get this one than we will really be on our way."

QUICK SHOTS – Westfield State tied Springfield College 1-1 last Friday. S.C. is rated 17th in the nation. Co-captain, goalie Carl Vercollone saw his first action of the season at the end of the first half Saturday and looked sharp as did other substitute goalie Paul Peloquin in the second half. Buddy Butler another sub-goalie also looked sharp only at a forward position where he almost scored a few times.

Murtaugh back for another

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) – Tobacco-chewing Danny Murtaugh, proclaiming himself physically fit and anxious to take a shot at another national league title, Monday signed a contract to manage the Pittsburgh Pirates again next season.

There had been speculation that the 57 year-old Murtaugh, who led the Pirates to world championships in 1960 and again 11 years later, would resign because of the hectic pace of managing, but he squelched the reports with the surprise announcement on the evening of the third game of the World Series in Oakland.

"I have decided to come back and health is not a determining factor," Murtaugh told a news conference. "I have been told by my physician I can do anything I wish to co and I wish to manage."

Minutemen hold fort; eke out Boston U. 21-14

By STEVE SARACENO
Sports Staff

The fledgling quarterback throws a sideline pass. Intercepted. Touchdown. UMass receives the kickoff, goes nowhere, and gets off a bad punt. Boston University completes three straight passes and it's first and ten at the thirteen. And the Terriers trail by only seven with a minute left.

That's it folks. The Patented UMass Second Half Blues are about to cause ultimate collapse for the second time in as many weeks.

But then something funny happened, Ma. The guys in the red said, "Stop!".

And in so doing, the Minutemen gained a 21-14 eeker over BU Saturday, in a game that, save for the last frantic succession of events, was every bit as spine-tingling as watching fossils form.

Brian McNally, at the helm in lieu of Mark Tripucka's third quarter injury, threw from his own 23-yard-line with less than 5 minutes remaining, and it backfired. "The ball was underthrown," said the sophomore later, "and the strong safety (Gary Guerin) came over and picked it off." Guerin returned it all the way.

Then, a bobbled UMass kick return and three plays later, John Ramboli got off his only bad punt of the day, and it put BU at their own 40.

Enter Terrier QB Mark Ryll, who had earlier replaced injured starter Greg Geiger (quarterbacks were dropping like flies), with three straight completions – two to tight end Paul Stone, and one to split end Peter Kessel.

The Collapse is near. Girders of Alumni Stadium are trembling. Women and children first. Grab the parachute and jump from the top row.

But then the defense took the weight of the game on their shoulders and the only collapse was that of the BU hopes.

With third and nine at the 12, Ryll was sacked for a six-yard loss – smothered by a charge of Minuteman defenders led by linebacker Dennis Kiernan. So, it was fourth and game to go. The secondary, which had already stopped (thanks to John Van Buren, Bob Levine, and Dave Croasdale) 3 fourth-down tosses by Ryll into the end-zone in the fourth quarter, was tested again.

Ron Harris and Levine, fazed not in the least by Ryll's play-action, had split end Jim Sturgis covered as the pass sailed untouched through the end zone.

"Our defense came of age out there today", said a relieved Dick MacPherson after the game. "It was great for the kids. They rose to the occasion".

UMass scored first when Tripucka hurled an 11-yard touchdown pass to Gary Mika, who momentarily bobbled the ball. They made it 14-0 when Keith Lang scored from the one, topping off a 78-yard drive that featured the bizarro of all bizarros when Jerry Mondalto ran 59 yards with a Tripucka fumble.

Jerry Mondalto proves he is not above accepting charity as a fumble by Mark Tripucka landed where Jerry could pick it up and zip 59 yards to set up UMass' second TD by Keith Lang.

BU came back with a 78-yard drive of their own to make it 14-7 at the half. Geiger hit Steve Richards with an 8-yarder in the end zone.

When Tripucka exited with a minor knee injury in the middle of UMass' customary second-half lethargy, things looked bleak for the Minutemen.

But McNally led the team 59 yards to paydirt, with Jim Torrance (63 yards on the day) going the final 27 on a quick-opener. That made it 21-7, and the Mac-Men appeared headed toward a comfortable, if wholly uneventful, win over the Terriers ... that is, until the traumatic, dramatic final period happenings.

Neither team looked good overall. The Terriers moved the ball fairly well, but couldn't go in for the kill, as evidenced by their fourth-down, fourth quarter frustrations. The Minuteman secondary was much improved, and the defense still hasn't allowed a ground TD, but the offense was hindered again by the lack of a passing attack.

McNally's only completed aerial was the TD interception, and Tripucka threw for only 38 yards before he departed. The total offense came again mostly on the ground, with Mondalto, Torrance, Lang, Rich Jessamy (injured slightly in the first half) Ramboli, and the two QB's garnering a sum of 256 yards rushing.

"I'm not displeased about our play", said MacPherson, "I'm just happy that we won it. We really needed this one badly".

Harriers outrun William and Mary

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

How does a coach tell his runners they lost to the defending IC4A champions after a preliminary announcement that they had beaten the seventh-ranked team in the country? That was the unenviable task Coach Ken O'Brien was faced with, Saturday afternoon in Yonkers, New York, as a miscalculation by meet officials marred a paramount team performance.

The UMass harriers, not nationally ranked going into the five team meet, defeated William and Mary, the nation's number five cross country team, 26-31, but Manhattan bested the Minutemen runners 27-28. There were no winners or losers in the meet, as far as UMass, William and Mary and Manhattan were concerned, as all three teams went 3-1 on the afternoon. William and Mary topped Manhattan 29-30, while Syracuse compiled one win against three loses and UConn absorbed four losses.

The scores were tabulated on a dual-meet basis, as coaches and spectators huddled around meet officials, who were slow in assembling results. Tension and concern grew as everyone waited for the final word. After a lenghty debate, it was announced that UMass had beaten Manhattan 28-29. Coach O'Brien gave his runners the victory sign, and after several exultant screams, they went off to warm-down (a post-meet jog to prevent the muscles from tightening), thinking they had won the meet. Meanwhile, a re-check of the score gave Manhattan a 27-28 win. The runners fell from a state of elation to disbelief in a matter of seconds when they were told of the change in score, but the overall performance of the team was very impressive.

The harriers proved that they can compete with the best in the country, running well in rugged Van Cortlandt Park, which was inhabited by a spectrum of purple, blue, green, gold, orange and red sweatsuits. Hundreds of high school and college cross country teams gathered on what began as an overcast day, but the sun broke through the clouds and the New York smog for the main attraction – the showdown between four of the top teams in the East.

Pete Squires and Tony Colon of Manhattan captured the first two places in the meet, but UMass countered by taking the next three places. Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin and John McGrail finished second through fourth, respectively. McGrail beat Bob Duggan of Syracuse by four seconds. Thomas was timed in 25:13, while teammates Gillin and McGrail ran the course in 25:25 and 25:35. Tom Wilson showed improvement, placing fourteenth in 26:02. John Scheer came through as the team's fifth runner, finishing twenty-second. Other UMass finishers included Tom Maguire, 24, Devin Croft, 25, Chris Farmer, 29, and Frank Noto 30.

UMass will get another shot at Manhattan in the IC4A's, but the most important result of Saturday's meet is the fact that Thomas and company have improved markedly and are a step ahead of last season. With a little improvement and performances like those in Yonkers on Saturday, there's no telling how well the UMass harriers will do in the NCAA meet scheduled for November 25.

Bill Gillin looks at ease here, but he might have been thinking of the three runners who passed him; he placed fourth Saturday.

Ford raps Congress on spending

KANSAS CITY, Mo. [UPI] – President Ford, calling on Americans to make more anti-inflationary sacrifices, struck back at Congress last night for refusing to adopt his economic proposals aimed at curbing prices increases and easing the energy shortage.

Ford's denuciation came at the start of a four-state campaign swing through the MIdwest, his most intensive political effort since he took office.

"Some have said that instead of asking Congress and the nation to bite the bullet, I have offered only a marshmallow," Ford said in an address to the Future Farmers of America.

"Well, I had already asked the Congress to postpone for three months a 5.5 per cent pay raise for federal government employees which would have saved 700 million taxpayer dollars. Congress wouldn't even chew that 'marshmallow.' They haven't yet shown much appetite for the other 'marshmellows' in my latest package.

"But if they don't like my menu, I may be back with some tough turkey."

In asking for more personal sacrifice, Ford said Americans are "the world's worst wasters" and laid down a list of 12 inflation-fighting sugestions for everyone - including planting home vegetable gardens and cutting down on the use of credit cards.

All but two of the 12 suggestions were compiled by his Citizens Action Committee to fight inflation, which is headed by financial columnist Sylvia Porter and includes Ralph Nader.

At the Muhlebach Hotel in downtown Kansas City, Ford was greeted by dozens of FFA members in their distinctive blue cordoroy jackets. Virtually every one of the youngsters had a camera and flashbulbs popped as the President shook hands briefly in the lobby before retiring briefly to his suite upstairs.

see comment, page 9

The Hotel Marque carried a sign, "Welcome President Ford - WIN," capitalizing on the administration's anti-inflation slogan.

The city's oval auditorium was virtually full more than half an hour before the President began his speech.

From the podium hung a huge blue curtain bearing a white lettered sign of "Welcome Mr. President," In the backdrop was a long line of multicolored flags.

White House officials billed the speech as nonpartisan and Ford formally asked the three major television networks to provide live nationwide coverage, his first such request as president.

Sargent activates State National Guard

Compiled From Wires

BOSTON – Gov. Francis W. Sargent mobilized the Massachusetts National Guard yesterday and asked President Ford to send federal troops "to insure the public safety" in racially-troubled Boston where violence erupted again on the 23rd day of a court order to integrate the city's schools.

Officials said 450 Guradsmen were enroute to key armories in and around the city of Boston.

At the White House, Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Ford's position against use of federal force remains unchanged.

"He believes law enforcement is a local and state responsibility," Nessen said on behalf of the President. "...Federal troops should not be sent in until local and state resources have been exhausted."

Nessen said Ford was aware of the governor's request, but that a specific response had not been made.

A spokesman for Mayor Kevin H. White refused to comment on Sargent's request. But he said the mayor has opposed the calling out of the Guard in his city.

The governor said, "I don't want

Senate, commuters elections today

By LYNN DOLINSKI
AND LINDA BROWER
Staff Reporters

The Student Senate and Commuter Assembly elections are being held today and tomorrow.

Student Senate elections will be held between 4 p.m. and 8 p.m. in the dormitories and Greek houses while commuter balloting, which includes two important referendums, will be held between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge on the first floor of the Student Union Building.

Craig Ghidotti, Chairperson of Governmental Affairs, is in charge of the senate election. He says there are 168 candidates for the 114 positions. His election method assumes a semi-autonomous procedure with each dorm operating by itself.

The Head of Residence or Dorm President will place the ballot sheets and boxes in a central location. Each dorm votes only for its representative (s), commuters for their representatives, Third World for their senators, and so on. The only unfilled positions are one Southwest dorm representative and 13 Third World Representatives.

The Commuter's ballot will contain two important referendum questions and the names of 15 nominees who are running for the eight seats in the executive council of the Commuter Assembly.

The nominees are: Bruce R. Allen, Charles Atwood, Barbara Bagley, Martha S. Esquivel, Keith J. Gustartis, and David J. O'Connell (class of '75); Joseph Beals, Jim Cummins and Susan D. Mackey (class of '76); John O'Keefe, Karen Mangen, and Paul Sliwa (class of '77); Paul Duffiui, Kenneth S. Irwin, and Frances Taylor (class of '78).

See related story, page two

All commuters may partake in the electing of their eight executive council members. Larry Gendron, president of the Commuter Assembly encourages all commuters to take part in the elections and to become involved in the Commuter Assembly committees.

The eight executive council members, once elected, will have the responsibility to see that this year's budget of $66,620.00 is allocated for programs that are of direct benefit to commuters.

Gendron says, "In the last year, the Commuter Assembly has come into its own; prior to that there was little or nothing done by the assembly." He went on to say that in the past year the Commuter Assembly, through its housing, transportation, and ways and means committees have helped organize a day care program, ran the Off-Campus Housing Office during the summer, developed a Colloquia Program, and have been involved in the Food Stamp Program.

They have also assisted in funding the evening and outreach bus service which includes Belchertown, South Deerfield, South Amherst, and all evening routes. Last year $25,000.00 was encumbered for this service which covers only half of the total cost. However, it can't be used unless a majority of the commuters elect to have it spent.

The first referendum question will ask commuters to vote either yes or no for the allocation of $25,000.00 for the evening and outreach bus service, contingent upon the ability of the Commuter Assembly to have some input into scheduling and routing of this bus service.

The Second Referendum Question will deal with what is called the "Conflict of Interest

New graduate towers plan January opening

By LINDA BROWER
Staff Reporter

The two new Graduate Towers 'B' and 'C', enclosed by North Pleasant Street and Governor's Drive, are rapidly nearing completion.

Paul Meade, staff associate in the Planning Office, said "I would hope we'd be able to use them second semester."

When the original plans were drawn up in 1969 by Campbell, Aldrich and Nulty Architects, there was no controversy by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts as to the dire need of the two tower buildings. The money for the buildings was appropriated to combat the growth of 1500 students a year. The actual construction on the Graduate Research Center Phase II was started two years ago. Phase I, long completed, consists of the low rise Graduate Research Center and Tower 'A'.

The 11.5 million dollar complex is the work of Franchi Construction Company. Both buildings 'B' and 'C' are composed of 16 levels. The original Greaduate Research Center was conceived in order to provide classroom and office space for the, at the time, rapidly expanding Chemistry department.

In addition, a space problem arose withing the Physics and Math departments. The Physics department had outgrown Hasbrourk and it was thought that Tower 'C' could house the Theoretical Physics division. The Applied Physics would remain in Hasbrouke. The math department, too, was cramped for space in Arnold House. Therefore, parts of the buildings were designed for math courses in mind. The buildings include office space as well as Chemistry, Math, and Physics classrooms.

Facilities in the towers include 19 classrooms alone on the first three floors of each of Tower 'B' and Tower 'C'. The classrooms will be a general university facility as well. Contrary to popular belief, there will be undergraduate and graduate classes held in the towers.

The buildings themselves have not been accepted by the university. This is only a precautionary measure by UMass. In this fashion, the university has continuing leverage against the contractors to see the "everything" is done right including the last details such as sewerage and plumbing. The builidings must also receive an Exemption Certificate Sewerage Band that will allow them the usage of the filtration processes in the town of Amherst.

University officials say these two towers will be the last major building projects for some time. Instead, the university will begin to renovate and remodel old, established buildings, they say.

Candidates debate nuclear power, unionization

By SANDY CARLIN
Staff Reporter

State Representative James Collins, D-Amherst, and his Republican opponent William Atkins, also of Amherst, say further investigation into nuclear power is needed. The men are running for the Fourth Hampshire County District seat in the State Legislature.

They made their remarks during a live debate Monday night on WMUA's Focus, moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski, to a panel of three reporters.

In other key issues, both men said students here would have the right to unionize, but like nuclear power, careful though must be given to the issue. The candidates also said a UMass hockey rink should be constructed.

The first question for debate dealt with the candidate's feelings about the present UMass budget request. The candidates both agreed that the budget needed to be 'carefully scrutinized' and that the UMass trustees had 'hastily approved the budget.' Collins said the budget 'must reflect what is needed to provide quality education.'

The next question was directed to Atkins who was asked what distressed him most about the politics of Rep. Collins. "I have fifty years of experience of living in the town of Amherst and I know the needs of the people," he said. He also said area representatives should be given a two thirds veto power over the County Commissioner.

Collins voted against this bill and responded by saying County Commissioners should be held accountable for their positions. If you allow a two-thirds veto you create more bureaucracy and less accountability."

Another question asked of the candidates was whether private educational institutions should be given state funds. Atkins said private institutions should not be state funded because it was "the perogative of every parent to decide between public and private education for their children."

Collins said he did not favor state funding for grade one through 12. He said, however, he favors an expanded student loan program to give people the economic availability to go to college." Both candidates also agreed on the issue of the proposed hockey rink for Hampshire County during the debate. They said the hockey rink should be constructed and that a separate rink for UMass should eventually be built..

The question of whether or not students had the right to unionize was also proposed. Collins and Atkins agreed that the overall concept of unionization was good, but careful thought had to be given by the students in preparation of such a policy.

A question was also asked concerning the minimum hour teaching law for UMass professors. Atkins said, "I would like to show the legislature where they are wrong because many teachers have been unjustly criticized." Collins said the law, "does not serve any great purpose" and favored its repeal.

During the debate the idea of building a UMass veterinary school and law school was brought up. Collins and Atkins were both in favor of such an endeavor.

The final question of the debate asked each candidate why he had registered in his particular party. Collins said, "I feel that the Democratic part stands for helping the working and poorer people in the nation." He also said, "I believe that the Democratic party is the most responsive to the people." Mr. Atkins responded saying that the Republican party took a more conservative look at government and issues.

In a closing statement Mr. Atkins said, "I feel I know the value of a dollar. I am concerned with inflation." He also said," I am honest, careful and though in my decision making and not afraid to talk to my constituents."

Collins closed saying, "I can provide an openness and honesty in my position. I am now conducting a door to door campaign and am limiting campaign contributions and my personal campaign expenditures. I believe that government can be honest."

Black martial arts demonstration planned

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

One of the largest gatherings ever of all Black martial artists to discuss relating the martial arts to the needs of the Black community is planned October 20 from 5 - 9 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium.

Experiencing discrimination in some tournaments sponsored by Europeans and attempting to solve problems such as: increased drug addiction; racists; police brutality; un-equal and sub-standard educational facilities; poor housing with sky-rocketing rents; 4th grade food for grade A prices; increased inflation and dire depression which is making the Black community look like "dodge" city. Black martial artists more than ever feel responsible for providing a positive alternative to chaotic situations.

With a call, "Unity for the Black Nation", Black martial artists will attend the 1st Afrikan Martial Arts Conference to discuss: 1) Martial Arts Life Style and the Third World 2) Authentic Martial Arts vs. Commercial 3) Unification of Afrikan Martial Arts Federations and Associations 4) National Afrikan People's Martial Arts Tournament 5) Afrikan Martial Arts publication-communication.

Some of the Martial artists-schools who will attend are: Kenny (Muntu) Robinson from Ohio, 2nd degree Black Belt, representing the National Black Belt Karate Association, 1973 Mid American Grand Champion, 1974 Mid West Olympic Grand Champion; 1974 United Tae Dwoon Do Heavyweight Champion, Okinwan Karate Do jo Okinwan Goju-Fred Goodridge, instructor; Lron Dragon Kalii K. Griffin, Sensi, 4th degree Chinese Kempo, Springfield, Mass.; Budo School, Westville, Mass.; Dragon Horse, Boston, Mass.; Melvin Hall, 2nd degree Black Belt Goju Ru, Amherst, Mass; Afrikan Institute of Martial Arts, Al Jihand, system featuring Mark Essex and Liveration of Guinea Bissua (250 moves); Kata, Philadelphia, Penn.

All other invited guest artists will be: Moses Powell; Karriem Allah, 9th degree Black Belt (founder of the K.A. system); Little John Davis; George Cofield.

Pass the work on about this historical event. Admission is free. Bowker Auditorium has 900 seats, let us have a packed house.

Tobacco crop extends throughout local Connecticut River valley

By JOHN J. KIMBALL
Staff Reporter

Up until a few weeks ago throughout the area you may have seen fields of tobacco with white weather protecting canopies covering them. This type or brand of tobacco is known as Connecticut Valley Shade Tobacco. Cultivation of this crop for our area purpose occurs as far north as Hatfield and south into the state of Connecticut.

The two companies which operate the farms in this valley are Culbro and Consolidated Cigar. Years ago the tobacco of this area was used primarily for cigar wrap. Now due to modern technology the crop is used stock and all in "the homogenizing process". The plant is now used for the cigar tobacco itself.

The growing seasons for the crop is quite a long one. Early in April Puerto Rican farmhands, many of which come from the island begin early preparations for the many months of labor ahead. These crews work the land until the last leaf is picked, cured and hung in the barn to dry. There is work to be done as late as December 1, if the weather permits. The migrant workers also disassemble the white canopies which are stored in the barns for the winter months.

During the summer months for about a ten-week period non-union workers, high school age boys and girls are brought up from the coal mining sections of West Virginia, Central Florida and Southeastern Pennsylvania. The first three weeks of the job, the boys sucker the plants or tend them. The girls do miscellaneous jobs. For the next seven weeks or so about one half of the boys (the older ones) pick tobacco leaves. The remaining boys haul the tobacco to the barns where the girls hang the harvest. Most of this work is salaried on a piecework basis. When the ten week period of the summer terminates, the boys and girls return home to their native states.

Survey shows likes, dislikes

Southwest life called not too 'residential'

By MICHAEL J. MASSI
Staff Reporter

"If Southwest is supposed to be a residential college, it certainly isn't living up to it right now."

In a recent survey of Southwest residents, this view was expressed by a number of people.

Sixty-five Southwest natives were interviewed by telephone to find out what the residents like and dislike about the area, and what can be done to make it more compatible.

Responses were varied. "I really enjoy the parties," one freshman girl said, "because they seem to go on all the time." A junior said, "Parties are the mainstay of my dorm. Without them, no one would know anyone else."

The most frequent answer from more than one-third of the residents, was that good people live here. A sophomore living in Collidge said, "There are so many friendly people here that you feel good."

But a senior from Kennedy said he preferred the women to the men because, "They're friendlier and that makes me feel good." Others said they liked Southwest because "it's close to everything and yet far enough away so that you don't feel like you're living at school."

Paradoxically, the very things that people like about Southwest are also the same things they dislike about it. "I can't stand the goddam noise," says a sophomore from JQA who also said she "thoroughly enjoys a good part. "There is too much noise on this campus as it is, do we have to listen to it at three in the morning too?" Well, if you don't then "tell them to move to Northeast" said a defender of the Southwest ideology. Yet the dislike of noise was a big factor in the response of most people who said they enjoy partying. And another dislike was "I can't stand inconsiderate people," and "the majority of people here are inconsiderate."

The theoretical number-one hate of many people, the Dining Commons, was not mentioned but once, and that in response to good things about Southwest. "The dining commons are great, but Berkshire is better than Hampshire." Thievery and alienation were given as symptoms of a sick Southwest, while those who contended the patient was well said the general atmosphere and newness of the buildings as compared to other, older areas were good signs.

Junk thrown from windows, expecially from the towers, was considered a display of immaturity and dangerous by many of the polled. "(It) really pisses me off," said one graduate student from Prince. "It's not only extremely dangerous, but it's frightening to think that you may be hit by the junk they throw out." "Firecrackers are the worst," said a sophomore from Washington. "They could deafen you."

In response to suggestions for improving the community, a vast majority, almost 82 per cent felt Southwest should have a bar of their own.

"A local bar would be a great idea," said a freshman from Patterson, "as long as it isn't anything like the Blue Wall."

"Yeh, the Blue Wall sucks," said a junior from Pierpont. "If there's a local bar here, it should be like the Blue Wall. Just "make it for the Southwest residents and their guests." suggested a sophomore from Moore.

A number of people want to see cultural activities held in Southwest, the majority preferring art and crafts shows, with a scattering of ideas such as a library, use of Hampden for a Southwest movie theater, and distinguished speakers. "I'd like to see Chancellor Bromery come out here," one person said, "because all we know about him is what we read in the Collegian."

"I guess you could say this," philosophised a resident of Melville. "You could say that this area isn't a residential college because activities are restricted to certain dorms or certain floors, like floor parties. What has to be done," he said, in summing up, "is for activities to be held on a Southwest-wide basis. Involve everyone, from every dorm, from every floor. Get everyone together more ofter."

Taone group returns; sponsored by Ahora

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA
Staff Reporter

Taone Group held a Latin music festival yesterday afternoon in the Student Union Ballroom.

It's the second time that the musical group has visited UMass. In both occassions Ahora has sponsored them.

According to Roy Brown Ramirez, the Puerto Rican-American that leads the group, Taone has performed in different countries such as the Soviet Union, East Germany, Puerto Rico and Eastern part of the United States.

After the campus performance the group left for MIT in Cambridge, and will then go to Chicago.

Asked why only six members of Taone Group came, Brown Ramirez said "The another six members are making a tour in Mexico".

Many Americans attending the concert enjoyed the music but couldn't understand the lyrics that were sung in a high-speed Puerto Rican Spanish.

Commuter candidates face election today

Some 7700 commuters will have the opportunity today and tomorrow to elect eight people to the Commuter Assembly's Executive Council. The Collegian talked to some of the candidates.

Tom Coffey, Commuter Assembly Resource Person: "We have had difficulty with obtaining weekend bus service in the past. We have had to approach the representative of the bus service for approval...A minimal amount of people have expressed the desire for a weekend bus service...The decision is really up to Whitmore."

David Klein, Commuter Assembly Treasurer: "Thirty-eight per cent of the commuters have not left their address with the commuter office."

John O'Keefe, a candidate running on the coalition slate: "I would like to see an active Tenants' Union comprised of legal aid, other tenants' groups and eventually become part of the State's Tenants' Union Association to share knowledge and expertise for the benefit of the commuters and tenants in the Valley."

David O'Connell, a candidate running on the coalition slate: "They (Executive Council) are not responsive to the commuters at large."

MassPIRG plans support of anti-nuclear question

MassPIRG will hold a meeting tonight at 8 in Room 803 of the Campus Center to discuss the anti-nuclear power referendum question that is on the November ballot. MassPIRG plans to canvass and sponsor letter writing in support of the referendum.

The meeting is open to the public, and will be preceded at 7 by a meeting of the Board of Directors of MassPIRG.

MassPIRG is funded by the $2 checkoff that appears on the student bills.

Distinguished feminist seeks renovation of UMass courses

By PATTY MORIN
Staff Correspondent

If, in the near future, students open books to find stickers on the covers that read: CAUTION: THE SEXISM IN THIS BOOK IS DANGEROUS TO YOUR HEALTH, it is most probably a result of the visit to UMass this year, by distinguished feminist, Wilma Scott Heide.

Reevaluation of course materials is only one of the many innovations that Heide, Behavioral Scientist, Author and Lecturer, plans to bring about as guest lecturer of the School of Education's Humanistic Cluster. She will be working with the Woman's Caucus of the School of Education, and the Affirmative Action people (who she believes must become all of the University Community) and others interested in creating feminism as a central dimension of any humanism. She hopes to bring other feminists to UMass for seminars, happenings and all-day get-togethers. Heide will be a Guest in Residence at Wellesley College, simultaneously.

Heide has a list of Academic and Professional credentials a mile long, the most impressive of which include a visit to Sweden as a guest of the government as part of their Opinion Builders program. Twice president of NOW, the National Organization for Women, Heide is also a member of the National Policy Council of the National Woman's Political Caucus, the National Equality Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), and serves on the editorial board of Social Policy magazine. She is a former Human Rights Commissioner of Pennsylvania.

In a cordial but firm manner, Heide explained that the Feminist Cause is actually the Common Cause of all.

"I don't see sexism as a one sex movement. It is a whole value system involving men, women and children. Every time each of us refrains from doing something because it is too masculine or too feminine, we are inhibited, oppressed. Feminism means to liberate the masculine and feminine in all of us. It is our human right to develop and contribute our talents whatever our race, sex, religion, ancestry, age. Human rights are indivisible," Ms. Heide said.

Heide has designed feminist-humanist alternatives for top government officials which would end discrimination against women (and men) in all areas of government and business, professions, and organizations.

At UMass this year, Heide's most basic objectives are:

—to raise feminine consciousness among students, faculty and the Board of Trustees.

—to integrate the Affirmative Action group into University life.

—to establish feminism as a bonafide occupational qualification to be an educator, administrator, or journalist at UMass.

—to organize a Feminist Critique Group to examine departments, courses, course materials, and administration practices including budgeting etc.; the result to be recommendations that would be top priorities of the University.

—to change the language at the University, strike all he's, him's etc. from school catalogues and change all course titles that contain the words, Man or Mankind, e.g. Man and his Environment.

"Language not only reflects behavior but is behavior. Language contains the power to create or eliminate images. These conceptions I consider basic," said Ms. Heide.

A guest of the University's Distinguished Visitors Program, Heide wants to see the University speak out on many issues feminists are raising. She would expect that the University would not do business with discriminators, (e.g. certain textbook publishers), and make University businesspeople accountable for such actions. Otherwise, she said, the University is funding illegal practices.

Senate holds elections

Clause". As Gendron puts it, "It is basically to protect the money of the commuting students from being taken over by a special interest group. The clause, if favored, would require all commuter assembly executive members to report their affiliation with other groups and also require them to abstain from voting any funds towards groups that they belong to."

Gendron said the assembly committees were open to all interested commuters, even if they weren't elected to be on the council. He added that the only way for the decisions towards funding to be more representative is to allow more people to become involved in the committees.

Defense gives opening statement

Ehrlichman portrayed as victim of deceit

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A defense lawyer charged yesterday that President Richard M. Nixon "deceived, misled, lied to and used" John D. Ehrlichman, his No. 2 White House aide, throughout the Watergate cover-up "to save his own neck."

"In simple terms, Mr. Ehrlichman had been had by his boss, the President of the United States," said William S. Frates, Ehrlichman's lawyer, during a two-hour, 15-minute opening statement to the 12 jurors in the Watergate cover-up trial.

Thus, Ehrlichman joined former White House Counsel John W. Dean III as accusers of the former president. Dean was scheduled to take the stand as the prosecution's first witness.

Ehrlichman; former White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman; former Attorney General John N. Mitchell; former Assistant Attorney General Robert C. Mardian; and Nixon re-election lawyer Kenneth W. Parkinson are on trial for conspiracy in the alleged attempt to conceal top-level involvement in Watergate.

With the jury of eight blacks and four whites out of the room, Judge John J. Sirica set a hearing for Wednesday afternoon on whether Nixon, an unindicted co-conspirator in the case, should be compelled to testify.

Ehrlichman and chief trial prosecutor James F. Neal both have subpoenaed the former president, but Nixon's doctors say he is too ill with a phlebitis ailment to make the cross-country trip to Washington.

Ehrlichman sternly faced the jury as Frates strode about the room and boomed out his accusations against Nixon and Dean.

Frates said that time and again, Ehrlichman recommended a full disclosure of the facts of Watergate - "let it all hang out."

"Richard Nixon prevented Ehrlichman's disclosure of the facts over and over again," Frates said.

"Richard Nixon disceived, misled, lied to and used John Ehrlichman to cover up his own knowledge and activities while publicly stating that John Ehrlichman was one of the finest public servants he had ever known," Frates said. "He was deliberately withholding information from him, covering up to save his own neck."

Ford reluctantly signs campaign reform bill

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday signed "with reservations" the most far-reaching political campaign reforms in the nation's history.

The sweeping reforms, a direct result of the Watergate scandals, will go into effect in 1975 and are certain to revolutionize political campaigns for federal offices.

Major provisions of the bill:

GENERAL ELECTION FINANCING — Beginning with the 1976 elections, the Republican and Democratic presidential candidates can receive $20 million each from the federal treasury for the general election. They can choose either federal funds or private contributions but cannot mix the two. Other party candidates can receive a proportionate share of the $20 million based on election results.

PRIMARY FINANCING — Candidates to become eligible for public financing must first raise $100,000, with $5,000 from each of 20 states. The government will then match the first $100,000 and every private contribution of $250 up to a ceiling of $5 million.

CONVENTION FINANCING — The Republican and Democratic parties can receive $2 million each from public funds to finance their conventions.

CONTRIBUTIONS — Individuals are limited to overall contributions of $25,000 in a single year and no more than $3,000 to an individual candidate — $1,000 in the primaries, $1,000 in a runoff, and $1,000 in the general election. Organizations can contribute $5,000 to a candidate in each the primary, a runoff, and the general election. Presidential candidates can contribute $50,000 to their own campaigns, Senate candidates $35,000 and House candidates $25,000.

SPENDING — Presidential candidates are limited to $20 million in the federal election and $10 million in the primaries. Senate candidates can spend eight cents times the voting age population or $100,000 in the primaries and 12 cents or $150,000 in the general election. House candidates are limited to $70,000 in the primaries and $70,000 in the general election.

Trade restrictions may cause poor Soviet-American relations

MOSCOW [UPI] - Communist party General Secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev warned yesterday night that Soviet-American relations may be seriously affected unless the United States lifts trade restrictions against the Soviet Union.

In his strongest speech on the subject, Brezhnev said attempts to prevent the Soviet Union from getting most-favored-nation trade status are "utterly irrelevant and unacceptable."

Brezhnev's blunt warning came during a dinner in the Kremlin which he gave for U.S. Treasury Secretary William E. Simon and members of the U.S. USSR Trade and Economic Council

Referring to Sen. Henry M. Jackson's amendment to deny most-favored-nation status unless the Soviet Union eases its emigration policies, Brezhnev said:

"Unless we do away with these negative aspects now, then the development of cooperation may be seriously arrested."

Brezhnev said that "demands on questions totally unconnected with the area of trade and economics and lying completely within the domestic competence of states are utterly irrelevant and unacceptable."

Brezhnev's remarks appeared aimed to some extent for home consumption since Soviet officials in Washington have been negotiating on some of the conditions demanded by Jackson. His speech was reported at length on the main television news program.

Brezhnev said Soviet-American relations could not be determined by "the sellish designs of certain individuals or narrow political groups whose mentality has not been freed from the outdated legacy of the cold war."

He said discriminatory laws dating from cold war times "impede export of our goods and limit to some extent the possibilities of financing the export of your American goods to the USSR."

He complained that export credits "are sometimes allowed but sometimes frozen indefinitely."

Ford wins major confrontation with Congress

House sustains veto of Turkish aid cutoff

WASHINGTON [UPI] - House opponents of U.S. military aid to Turkey failed yesterday to override President Ford's veto of an immediate arms cutoff, but warned they would continue to fight such aid because of Turkey's use of American weapons on Cyrpus.

"It's a deadlocked situation," said Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal, D-N.Y., after the House actually voted 223-135 against the veto. That was 16 short of the two-thirds majority necessary to override Ford's Monday veto.

Rosenthal and other critics of aid to Turkey met over lunch after the vote and he conceded they might be willing to quiet their cry for a quick cutoff if the U.S. bans transhipment of arms from Turkey to Cyrpus.

They met with chairman George H. Mahon of the House Appropriations Committee to discuss compromise possibilities.

The veto vote was a slim victory for the executive branch over Congress, which must get a two-thirds vote of both the House and Senate to kill a presidential veto.

Many lawmakers have assailed continued aid to Turkey because that country used American tanks, planes and other equipment in its attack on the Mediterranean island.

Opponents of the Turkish aid also maintained the $6 million in military assistance now in the pipeline for Turkey would only make Turkey stronger on Cyrpus, where it is maintaining an occupying force, and less willing to negotiate a peaceful settllment.

But the President Monday vetoed the cutoff rider, which Congress had attached to a government agency funding resolution, saying an immediate cutoff would "irreparably harm" chances for a permanent peace between Turkey and Greece over Cyprus.

"It would, as well, imperil our relationships with our Turkish ally and weaken us in the crucial Eastern Mediterranean," said Ford.

The House Appropriations Committee arranged to begin drafting new legislation to provide temporary funds for foreign assistance and the departments of Agriculture, Labor and Health, Education and Welfare,

Ford called the cutoff "reckless" in his veto message.

"Instead of encouraging the parties involved in the Cyprus dispute to return to the negotiating table, an arms cutoff to Turkey could mean the indefinite postponement of meaningful negotiations," Ford said.

Mansfield responds adversely to Ford's economic program

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Sen. Mike Mansfield, responding for Democrats to President Ford's anti-inflation program, said yesterday the government has not confronted the nation's economic emergency and seems "to lack the capacity to do so."

In a gloom-filled television speech, the Senate Democratic leader repeated his call for controls "as needed" on wages, prices, profits and rents and for rationing the energy supplies. Many fellow Democrats oppose both.

Mansfield's speech, taped in advance, was broadcast a week after Ford stood before a joint session of Congress with his program of heavier taxes, voluntary fuel conservation, trimmed government spending and tax incentives to spur investment by business.

"The nation is in an economic emergency," Mansfield said. "I think you, the people, expect government to confront that emergency decisively and to act on it in the general interests of the people. We have not done so and even now, seem to lack the capacity to do so."

The Montanan was critical of Ford's energy proposals.

"We have let prices find their own level," Mansfield said. "In a society grown universally dependent on petroleum, it is the cruelest form of rationing. The burden falls heaviest on those with the least income.

"To compound the problem, Congress has been asked for more decontrol on energy, which can mean only higher and higher prices and more and more inflation," he said.

U.N. admits PLO delegation to debate Palestinian question

By United Press International

The Palestine Liberation Organization yesterday hailed as "an historical victory" the U.N. General Assembly decision to admit a PLO delegation to its debate on the Palestinian question. Israel denounced it as an illegal move that would disrupt Middle East peace efforts.

The reaction came as Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger wound up his seven-day, seven-country Middle East-North African trip during which he said he found "positive tendencies" for further peace moves in the area. Kissinger's last stop was Morocco.

"We consider the U.N. decision an historical victory for our people," PLO Information Director Majed Abu Sharar said in Beirut. "This decision and the wide international support for our rights will be a strong incentive to continue our struggle."

The PLO is the umbrella organization for much of the Palestine guerrilla movement.

An Israeli Foreign Ministry statement said Monday's U.N. vote inviting Palestinian participation in the assembly debate next month "serves to disrupt the movements to peace that are now in full momentum and strikes at the U.N. charter in view of the declared purposes of the PLO.

"The decision that was accepted is illegal and does not bind Israel, just as any other country would reject a resolution whose significance... strikes at the foundations of its existence," the Israeli statement said."

The pro-guerrilla Beirut publication Al Moharrer headlined its story, "International victory for the Palestine question and big defeat for American, Israel and the Jordanian regime."

The U.N. resolution was approved by 105 votes against 4, with 20 abstentions.

In an interview, Sharar dodged questions on whether Palestinian guerrilla action would continue during the PLO's diplomatic offensive.

In Cairo, a foreign ministry official said the U.N. decision "constitutes implicit recognition of the legitimacy of the PLO as representative of the Palestinians." Egyptian officials expressed confidence that the PLO would get the kind of resolution it wants during the U.N. debate and this would enable the PLO to participate eventually in the Geneva Arab-Israeli peace conference.

Cattle slaughtered to protest low prices

By United Press International

Angry Wisconsin farmers shot down calves with revolvers, slit their throats and threw their carcasses into a huge trench yesterday in protest against soaring feed costs and sagging livestock prices.

The execution began as scheduled at Curtiss, Wis., a hamlet west of Eau Claire in west central Wisconsin.

The slaughter was organized by the Wisconsin branch of the National Farmers Organization. Steve Pavich, Wisconsin NFO president, said more than 500 animals might be slaughtered by nightfall.

Farmers elsewhere in the country have also threatened to organize cattle slaughters in symbolic rebellion of the squeeze in which they find themselves. The Wisconsin farmers were the first to act.

Pavich was asked if it would not be better to make the slaughtered animals available to packers for donation to the poor.

"Sure, that would be better," he said, "but we talked to two different packers and they told us they didn't have time to handle them. This is the next best thing.

"I'm tired of rhetoric and a lot of farmers are tired of it, too. We need to bring to the attention of the public that there is a problem out here in rural America and something has to be done about it."

Law enforcement officials said apparently no laws were violated.

Asks Ford for federal help

Sargent mobilizes National Guard troops to deploy" the Guard. "But I've got a larger concern with the commonwealth.

"We have witnessed innocent people pulled out of cars and beaten...children, white and black, stoned on their way to and from school. And today, stabbings and further violent disorder.

Sargent said that under an 1871 federal law, a small contingent of specially trained riot-control federal troops can be ordered into a state by the President. The governor said he is using that statute to request the federal assistance.

An aide to Sargent said the 1871 law was approved by Congress to assist the south in reconstruction after the Civil War.

Steve Teichner, a legal aide on the governor's staff, said the law is aimed at preventing a conspiracy to obstruct justice or prevent the implementation of federal law — in this case the federal court school desegregation order providing for busing.

The governor's action came after black and white students fought in classrooms and corridors at Hyde Park High School. Seven white students and a white teacher were injured. The school was forced to close early.

Sargent said "for the present" guardsmen will remain in the armories, but he emphasized, "If federal troops are denied or delayed and if the safety of the public requires, I will not hesitate to order national guard into the streets of Boston."

Sargent said he took the action after consulting state Commissioner of Public Safety John Kehoe and reviewing reports on the violence at Hyde Park. Kehoe had been in touch with the FBI and "there is an indication that the situation could be very much worse," Sargent said.

"It is clear that the situation is increasingly volatile," the governor said. "I have determined that the public safety can no longer be assured solely by local police or local law enforcement agencies, even with the additional reinforcement of State and Metropolitan District Commission police which I ordered into the city last week."

The most serious injury at Hyde Park High School was a 15-year-old white boy who was stabbed in the stomach. He was in stable condition at Carney Hospital.

Another 15-year-old boy was treated at the hospital for a mild concussion, cuts and bruises after he was hit on the head with a chair.

Business teacher Richard Costello suffered minor head injuries when assaulted by blacks as he came to the aid of a white girl being attacked by black girls in a lavatory.

House Judiciary member asks U.S. aid in Boston

WASHINGTON [AP] — Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., called on the U.S. Justice Department yesterday to commit full resources to the Boston school desegregation efforts.

Edwards, chairman of the Civil Rights and Constitutional Rights subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee, made the appeal in a letter to J. Stanley Pottinger, assistant attorney general in charge of the department's Civil Rights Division.

Edwards asked "the department's involvement in quelling the devastating violence in Boston and in posecuting those who impede the enforcement of law in that city be total."

Edwards expressed grave concern over what he called the department's decision to leave all peace-keeping attempt to local authorities. Mayor Kevin H. White has asked for federal intervention in maintaining order during Boston's desegregation action.

The congressman said the Justice Department's decision "amounts to a shirking of responsibility."

"There is no question but that all who are committed to the concept of equal education opportunities would hope the Justice Department would aid in making that concept a reality without the needless sacrificing of the lives and wellbeing of children," said Edwards in a statement.

New England students pay more for college

BOSTON [AP] — New England college students continue to pay more for their educations than their counterparts anywhere else in the country, according to the New England Board of Higher Education.

A report by the board's director of research and development, Robert L. Melican, also found that inflation in education costs in New England is out-pacing other regions.

Melican reported that students in the six-state region now pay an average of $70 more per year at public institutions than their peers elsewhere. At private colleges, the cost differential is $441 per student, compared to private college students elsewhere.

The college report also predicted that within four years, the average private college annual cost will be about $5,500 per student and slightly more than $3,000 at public institutions.

There has been an annual cost increase of about 25 per cent for regional private college costs in the past four years, according to Melican's report.

At public institutions, the four-year cost increase has been even greater-almost 35 per cent, Melican reported.

A private college education cost about $3,580 in 1970 and is now up to $4,480. Public college education costs have risen from $1,830 to $2,470 in the past four years, the report said.

The study said that among the six New England states, average total college education costs "are fairly uniform in the private sector but vary cinsiderably in the public sector."

Massachusetts has the lowest average costs for state residents attending a state college or university, while Rhode Island and Vermont have the highest average total costs for state residents attending state schools, the Melican report said.

Chelsea fire kills three

CHELSEA [UPI] — Three persons were killed early yesterday and several firemen were overcome by smoke when fire swept a three-story brick rooming house near Chelsea Square, just one day after the first anniversary of the $52 million-plus 1973 Chelsea fire which left 3,000 persons homeless.

Twenty-six persons escaped from yesterday.

The "great Chelsea fire," which broke out a year ago Monday, swept 18 blocks - or about one-tenth of the city. Damage was estimated variously at between $52 million and $100 million. No lives were lost in the fire, but some 3,000 persons were left homeless.

Calls report 'fiction and distortions'

NORML challenges Eastland marijuana claims

The National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML) has challenged the recently released Report of the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security. In the Report's introductory remarks, the Subcommittee's Chairman, James O. Eastland, claimed the use of marijuana represents "a trend towards national disaster."

The Mississippi Democrat said if the current rate of marijuana use continued, Americans might find themselves "saddled with a large population of semi-zombies."

NORML Director Keith Stroup called the Eastland Report "the most amazing piece of self-serving fiction and distortions to come out of the Congress since the McCarthy hearings in the early 1950's. The Subcommittee Report in no way represents a consensus of scientific opinion, either government or private. The Report is an embarrassment to those seriously interested in the problems of drug use and abuse in our society, and a disservice to those who are objectively attempting to determine the possible harmful effects of marijuana."

"Propaganda of the proportions of the Eastland Report can only have tragic and brutal consequences," Stroup continued. "Unfortunately, some of the law enforcement community may respond to the Report by increasing arrests of marijuana smokers. The plain truth," Stroup concluded "is that the criminal law has not worked and will not work where marijuana is concerned. The result can only be harmful and costly to both society and the individual."

In challenging the Report, NORML made the following observations:

- Senator Eastland flatly refused to permit anyone to testify unless they shared his views about marijuana's potential for harm, and the resulting six days of hearings were an admitted one-sided presentation. The Senator says in the Report's introductory statement, "We make no apology, therefore, for the one-sided nature of our hearings -- they were deliberately planned this way." (p. V)

- Much of the testimony attempted to connect the use of marijuana with Communism and "the new left." Senator Eastland apparently wanted to depict marijuana as a devious Communist plot in order to justify jurisdiction for the Internal Security Subcommittee, itself an anachronism of the McCarthy era.

- Senator Eastland showed overwhelming concern about exaggerated marijuana claims, but de-emphasized the clearly demonstrated serious harm from alcohol and tobacco. "...The dangers of cannabis (marijuana) are much closer to the dangers of heroin, in scope and quality, than they are to the admitted but far more limited dangers of coffee or tobacco -- or, for that matter, alcohol." (p. XVI) From the Senator's statement, his concern for public health apparently stops at the doorstep of the powerful tobacco and liquor lobbies.

- The Seantor summarized his fears about marijuana in the following paragraph:

"If the epidemic is not rolled back, our society may be largely taken over by a 'marijuana culture' -- a culture motivated by a desire to escape from reality and by a consuming lust for self-gratification, and lacking any higher moral guidance. Such a society could not long endure." (p. XII)

This is in stark contrast to what the bi-partisan National Commission on Marihuana and Drug Abuse (Shafer Commission) had to say after an intensive two-year study of the effects of marijuana on society. Their conclusion:

"When the issue of marijuana use is placed in this context of society's larger concerns, marijuana does not emerge as a major issue or threat to the social order... The fundamental principles and values upon which the society rests are far too enduring to go up in the smoke of a marijuana cigarette." (p. 102, Marihuana, A Signal of Misunderstanding)

Rocky wants to talk

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Nelson A. Rockefeller yesterday asked two congressional committees to hold immediate hearings so he can explain recent disclosures that have threatened his vice presidential nomination.

The request followed disclosure that Rockefeller's brother Laurance financed a book derogatory to Nelson's 1970 oppent for governor, and that Nelson Rockfeller made nearly $2 million in cash gifts to aides and former aides.

"My nomination is being tried in the press," Rockefeller said in a statement issued by his New York office, "and not before the appropriate committees of Congress, without my having the opportunity to present all the facts.

"This is being done on the basis of selective leaks from my income tax returns and gift tax returns, all of which were submitted to the committees in confidence."

Veto overridden

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House voted by a large margin yesterday to override President Ford's veto of legislation granting $7 billion in federal funds to bail out the financially troubled railroad retirement system.

The vote was 360 to 12, which was 112 more than the votes needed to override.

The House vote was the first time that Ford has lost a veto challenge. The Senate is expected to vote to override, probably today, thus enacting the legislation.

Kissinger returns

RABAT, Morocco [AP] — Henry Kissinger headed home Tuesday with assurances from several key Arab leaders that they will back his Middle East peace strategy and try to stave off another hike in oil prices.

The latest to give such support was Houari Boumedienne, the president of Algeria and one of the most influential and radical Arab leaders, U.S. officials reported. Earlier assurances came from Egypt's President Anwar Sadat and King Faisal of Saudi Arabia.

After a three-hour meeting with Boumedienne on Monday night, Kissinger reported, "I told him of some of the positive trends I have found. His advice was very helpful and his attitude very understanding."

Seat belts silenced

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The House yesterday passed and sent to President Ford a bill outlawing seat belt interlock systems, which prevent starting an automobile until the belts are fastened.

Continuous buzzer systems are also outlawed by the bill, okayed in the Senate last week. The only device which could be required to tell a driver his seat belt is not locked would be a dashboard light.

National interest or corporate protection?

By BOB FOSTER

Watergate brought to America the realization that corruption and deception could be an integral determinant of the outcome of domestic politics. In fact, what had been a political fact of life on the state and local level was finally uncovered on the national level. Most suspected such corruption, but few realized its magnitude. People had become familiar with local "ticket-fixing" and kickbacks for construction contracts on the state level. But not since the Teapot Dome scandal had the Federal powers been wounded by such deception. Thus, scandal and politics have become virtually synonymous in contemporary dictionaries of political jargon.

With such a background of domestic half-truths and twisted testimonies, only the most naive could have been shocked by the recent disclosures of clandestine and not-so-clandestine activities in Chile. The corruption and rationalization that has tormented the domestic machinations of politics has finally crept into the international workings of our government. Or so it seems.

Such an assertion of domestic corruption overflowing into international corruption may be false upon careful analysis. Indeed, it may be quite the opposite. America has often been caught attempting very "un-democratic" expeditions into foreign sovereignties for decades. The justification of certain wars (i.e. - Vietnam) often lies in protection of American interests abroad. Note, it is a protection of OUR interests. The interests of the country that we "protect" seem only a sidelight to the primary directive: protect American business! Thus, we have leadership that justifies wars and tinkering with foreign economies and governments as in the "national interest." Such was the case of Chile. It was one of the many victims of the American "national interest."

The concept of "national interest" has been carefully stolen from the political philosophers and used to justify virtually every recent error of judgment in government. Yet, few have noted this theft. Most have observed this transformation of a philosopher's concept to a politician's scapegoat with the dull-eyed reaction of apathy. Something must be done about this linguistic larceny. Soon, the taking of YOUR freedom may be justified by the "national interest."

Re-examination of the concept is therefore the order of the day. In a country built upon the tenets of freedom and justice, we cannot allow the privileged few to twist our minds by rationalizing totalitarian politics with equally tortured concepts of national needs and priorities. We must determine for ourselves the meaning of "national interest." For the collection of OUR interests and only such a collection can be considered a national interest. No singular interest can truly be defined as "national" interest. On occasion, the singular interest of a corporation may be synonymous with the collection of the people's interest. But more than likely, they will conflict.

By redefining the term and disallowing its use as a justification for covert, anti-democratic operations, we could save a bit of America's rapidly dissipating integrity. Leaders would no longer be able to rationalize. Instead, they could be held accountable for specific actions that seem to violate the basic traditions of our country.

Orwell taught us that language is a powerful tool. In the hands of the corrupt or naive politician, it carries the potential for destruction. Examine the words of those who justify actions such as Chilean repression. Beneath the rhetoric of national interest, you may discover the reality of political opportunism and the interests of powerful corporations.

Reflections on the pond

To the Editor:

The sun beams through the crisp autumn air while a gentle breeze caresses the brilliantly colored foliage of the trees. With its' many unique features, the campus pond lures me to the edge. Gazing thoughtfully out over the water, I behold the liquid reflections of the Babel-like library, rippling placidly. The pines cast their deep and solemn shadows upon the brilliantly duplicated sky. Goldfish scurry about in numerously populated schools, silently passing through the murky depths without a worry [or have they?]. Gradually I become more relaxed and casting a penetrating stare across the obscure waters, I search the reflections with intent. The image of the library suddenly appears somewhat distorted. Fixing my eyes upon the image, my examination detects a piece of driftwood. No, not one but two! Three! Four! It begins to dawn on me that there is a great deal more to this pond than I had ever perceived before. Not only does this wood float majestically upon the waters, but it too lies inert along the weed enshrouded banks. There are even small conglomerations of these abstract forms randomly scattered by the Fine Arts Building end of the pond. Looking still further, I sense the fascination, the mystique if you will, generated by the resplendent, swirling oily resins enveloping portions of our pond. These resins display remarkable properties of reflection as they disperse light in a sparkling display of prism-like rays. Considering, for the moment, the many perspectives I have just beheld, these creative resins are gifted with the most aesthetic value of all.

Moreso than the brilliant sunlight, the reflected buildings, the deep shadows, the murky depths, the chains of goldfish, and the artistic conglomerations of driftwood, I respect these oily substances because they are not confined. They can spread their mystical radiance without limitations. By far the hypnotic effects of the resins have captivated my attention above all else. But after my brief stay at the pond, I must be off to my 11:15 class. But I am assured that these peculiar art forms will continue to glorify our campus pond. Likewise, I am certain their value to the pond can, and will, draw more attention from other admirers like myself. We must be prepared for the day when this pond is destined to be a classic representation of our campus as a whole.

Reply to Tripoli

To the Editor:

Please, Mr. Tripoli, "leave the course for a more tolerable alternative." I, for one, relish the prospect of smaller classes in my "structured" [to use a School of Edism] curriculum, which your proposal of university student behavior clearly portends. Further, I have been a "force in determining my own education" via my individual course selection during pre-registration, the only hindrance being the eminently predictable bureaucrat-computer snafus [After all, Whitmore is merely this decade's best example of how the job-creating, profit-taking techniques of "planned obsolesence" can be applied simultaneously to the Education Conglomerate and once-fashionable efficiency. "That which Lederle hath wrought, let the Woodses, Bromerys, and Allens [2] tear asunder."].

True, I am a consumer, but rather than seeing myself as a "child", I consider myself a student here "to be educated by those qualified to do it."

The next part of your column is, to say the least, terribly confusing. What is "real education?" Further, what are "the needs of the students?" And who shall have the right to determine for students what "their needs," are? I've always considered my personal needs, at least here at a university [after all, it's not a half-way house], to be an education. As a student, anything else becomes secondary.

Rather than professors "basing their teaching methods on repressive educational theories straight out of the Neanderthal Age [?]", I would suggest that educational theory, technique, and curricula at the university level were formulated during the Renaissance and have constantly adapted to serve the "needs" of both students and scholars through the centuries. But, since you ambiguously refer to the "Neanderthal Age", I would further suggest that during that particular era [I'm sure you meant the "Dark Ages", when teaching and learning, other than in monastaries, were temporarily out of vogue in the western world.], that Ed.D. was the only degree available and was "earned" on the "Modular Credit System." However, during your aforementioned "Neanderthal Age", "The Modular Credit Theory of Higher Education" was carried to its logical conclusion. Neanderthal bureaucrats and students [You see, education had passed out of the hands of the "reactionary" professors and into the hands of those who imagined themselves the most immediately affected.] argued that, since it is predictable that every human being will "do" certain "things" [monosyllablisms were very popular] on their arduous trek through "life", i.e., acquire boodles of "life experiences" [both "facilitated and non-facilitated", as Dean Dwight Allen might say], each of which would be worth at least some fractional part of a "college credit", an Ed. D. would be granted each being immediately after birth [sic]. "Pre-natal experiences alone, are worth twenty credits", they argued. And so it was. Each child was recognized as clearly possessing unlimited, innate "personal abilities" and seemingly boundless "personal knowledge of all things" [things were always "personal" then]. But, best of all, and you can really appreciate this, Mr. Tripoli, all the professors were, if you will, "in the unemployment lines." And that's why they call it the "Neanderthal Age". Mindless notions of "educational relevancy" like yours only serve to usher those days back in.

Memory lapse?

To the Editor:

Isn't it strange how men caught in a lie sound so similar to each other? I mean to cast no aspersion on the veracity of Mr. Witkowski, but on the other hand cannot help feeling a sense of deja vu while reading Witkowski's statements wherein he says, "We can't either of us recall meeting about that [overtime pay]", and "I don't know what happened up there. I was never involved in it." Nixon's advice concerning lapse of memory seems to have found one more staunch supporter.

Giving up the causes

"In high school, it was Women's Lib for the ladies. 'Go to college, have a career - I'll never get married.'" My friend picked up her draft.

"Did you know that Becky got married this summer?" I asked. "And did I tell you that I saw Diane last week in Boston? Not only is she married, but she's got a two year old son!" I blew at the froth in my glass and looked out the window at the pond. "She said she's happy."

My friend put down her beer and began to speak. "Just be thankful that you weren't at his wedding on Saturday. It was Scarlet O'Hara and Rhett Butler, tying the string at Tara. All the pot smoking freaks looked uncomfortable in their tails." She laughed. "It was a show piece, a fairy tale."

"When I think back," I began, "perhaps it was the logical next step in the Great American Dream. First, there was the sporty car and the fancy clothes. Then came the color T.V. Now, he's getting married. If mortgages weren't so hard to come by, they'd live in a suburban house and have two kids and a dog."

"Why is it that they seem like traitors?" Jan asked. "Maybe they really love each other."

"I guess I'm a hypocrite," I went on. "I preach - 'hey, I'm open minded', and here I sit feeling that an old friend has sold out. It's more than the marriage. It's the whole way of life. It's absurd! Did you know that John bought a color T.V.? He's color blind!"

"I bet that most women here are getting an education so that they can be better wives".

"You've got to understand that it's easier to sell out. I bet that most of the women here are getting an education so that they can be better wives for their educated husbands. Why not? There certainly won't be enough jobs to go around, the way the economy is going. Success for a woman in our society is to marry a successful man. And this is a supermarket of eligible, potentially successful males." She sat back with a sigh, and finished her draft.

We paid our bill, and took an elevator down. I looked at the mass of students that waited to get into the Blue Wall.

"Whether people marry or not isn't going to have much impact on the world," I said.

"Not to people that are starving in Africa," my friend replied. "I bet in ten years you'll be married with two kids. What else can we do?"

We walked in silence. "Want to get high?"

"I don't think so," I replied.

We walked outside into the cold night air, and I plunged my hands deep into my coat pockets. "I tried working on that Political Science today, but I gave up. Instead I went for a ride in the Berkshires and shot slides of the foliage."

My friend snorted, "Life just goes on and on."

"Yeah", I replied, "S.O.S. - It's the Same Old Shit!"

Another pep talk

President Ford's anti-inflation speech to the Assn. of Future Farmers last night in Kansas City was nothing more than a homey pep talk to the American people.

Ford urged traditional budgetary restraint on American households and asked all citizens to "pay as much down and pay off as quickly as possible" in purchasing durable goods.

But in reporting the recommendations of his personal anti-inflation task force — including conservative syndicated consumer columnist Sylvia Portor — Ford also told his audience that he will push for budgetary restraint in federal expenditures.

"Balance your family budget and expect your government officials to do the same," Ford urged, telling his mid-West audience they can expect the wishes of one letter-writer to be fulfilled — cutting federal spending to the bone.

In twelve recommendations to the American people, including energy consumption and use of recycling programs, Ford implied that inflation is the public's fault — that somehow if we all tighten our belts, sacrifice a little and save money inflation will be won — or rather WIN.

The trouble with the President's recommendations is that they are nothing new. Economists have been telling us for years that the way to beat inflation is to cut federal spending, save more and spend less.

They have said since the thirties that the way to tackle crippling stagnation in the industrial sector is to boost consumer demand by encouraging more spending by consumers.

Never before has the United States been in both inflation and economic industrial stagnation at the same time. The pity of the President's speech is that he does not seem to realize that by beating inflation with decreased federal spending, he will only exacerbate the industrial recession by withdrawing federal spending which supports major industries.

It is significant that the only major recommendation delegates to the Ford-called inflation summit over two weeks ago could agree on was that budget-cutting will not cure recession. But that is what Ford wants.

The observation of CBS Television commentator George Herman last night after Ford's pep talk is poignant. Herman said that the fundamental flaw in the government's approach to the economic crisis is that it is the fault of the consumer.

Perhaps it is time to consider alternative explanation for the current woes. Perhaps it is not the consumer, but the system which needs overhaul. But such critical re-examination of the country's basic system of private enterprise is probably beyond the reach of a former Congressman from Michigan, the home state of the largest oligopolies in the U.S. — the auto makers.

It is sad that the American people will have to sit by and wait for years while Gerald Ford learns the hard lesson of economics that it took President Nixon three years to fathom before he imposed wage-price controls — you cannot solve radical economic problems with traditional classical economic approaches.

And simultaneously falling production and increasing prices is a situation that conservative economists like Milton Friedman, Herbert Stein and Alan Greenspan can't accommodate in their frameworks.

"What this country needs is a good one dollar, five-cent cigar.

DRINKING BUDDIES

Correcting institutions

By RICHARD WRIGHT

Correctional institutions in this country are coming under increasing fire in recent years. Criticism and commentary have been focusing on the main questions of what the purpose of corrections is and the manner in which the process should be handled.

The first problem is determining whether the purpose for incarceration is to punish or to rehabilitate the offender. Part of the complexity rests in the viewpoint that some forms of punishment are rehabilitative in and of themselves. Then the issue of matching the sentence to the crime hovers in the next strata of confusion. What punishment is necessary in what cases? Or, what rehabilitation is required to restore the inmate to a functional level in society? Indeed, can such rehabilitation be accomplished? For as many variances available on these questions there are an equal number of champions supporting their legitimacy.

This brings up the most recent exhortation of the correctional change theories: community rehabilitation. This little package proffers the opinion that only through an integrated procedure of re-assimilation into the main stream of society can we expect past offenders to find the road back to a normal life. As far as it goes, that is a rather logical extension of the idea that incarceration provides the controlled atmosphere necessary for dealing with someone who needs some rehabilitation in order to function positively in society. The drawbacks to this concept are but too obvious and disheartening.

First, the institutions are absolutely void of planned rehabilitation procedures. As new facilities replace old ones, the changes are in hardware almost exclusively, with little forethought to the correctional aspects of incarceration. Instead, the burden of rehabilitation is being foisted on a paranoid, disbelieving community, who at best can present the slimmest impression of confidence in furloughs and release projects. The prisons offer little internally in programmed change for the inmates, so the answer is sought outside its walls in an even less well equipped community environment. The charade of community level rehabilitation has got to be backed by the general public's money, as well as its good will first, or else the rehabilitation game will continue to be as ineffective as it has always been.

Only if corrections receives the kind of broad support possible from a positive approach by the community, government, and professional corrections people, can the process become one of change and rehabilitation - rather than containerized chaos. Commitment to an effective correctional process is necessarily an expensive proposition. But the expense of our failure to deal with it, with the full measure of our know-how and enthusiasm, will continue to result in high recidivism among convicts, bloated enforcement bodies, and increased public discontent.

The Uncle Jerry Show

By VICKI VAN RENSSELAER

It was like the kick-off of a Green Bay Packer pep rally. There he was, the President of the United States, exhorting all Americans to join in, what now is destined to become, America's newest of national pastimes, "Whipping Inflation Now"!

No one can say that being the President of the United States during the post-Watergate era, is the easiest job in the world. As a matter of fact, even under the best of circumstances, the job is (bluntly stated), "thankless"! However, this does not excuse President Ford from utilizing the intolerable set of tactics he has chosen to employ in confronting, what amounts to, the gravest series of crisis besetting this nation since the 1920s and 1930s.

To openly encourage the American populace to indulge in outright escapism, by conjuring up the, supposedly, well-worn American myth, "that pom poms and booster buttons can chase any contemporary woes away," is indicative of irresponsible thinking, to say the least! It amounts to a lot of "sound and fury, signifying nothing".

Undoubtedly, President Ford meant well. After all, we all know that there's nothing more "American" than the President of the United States choosing a meeting of "The Future Farmers of America" at which to inform each American as to how he, or she, can "prep" for the "big game" against Public Enemy Number One...INFLATION!

But I would venture to guess that after a few weeks of jumping on the ol' bandwagon, most Americans will wake up to the fact that combating inflation requires a more "sane" (do I dare use the word?) approach, and that President Ford's current proposals are being enacted at the average American's expense, while the rich get richer and Big Business continues its unabated pattern of profitable growth.

This much can be said though, President Ford has definitely bought the American people a form of psychological reprieve from confronting reality. So, my advice to all is to, "live it up", before the party's over!

U.S. reluctant to hurt relations

Turkey serves as important eye on Russia

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Behind the reluctance of the Pentagon to comment on the report of a new Soviet missile cruiser blowing up in the Black Sea last month lies some interesting background.

Although the Soviets certainly know the United States has electronic gear so sophisticated it could probably pick up the explosion of a speedboat-and get a satellite picture of it-the Pentagon doesn't want to report it can do so, or exactly from where it eavesdrops.

A lot of that equipment, including radar that can "see" over the horizon, is in Turkey.

And that is part of the reason, in turn, that the United States "tilted" in favor of Ankara during the Turkish Cyprus confrontation even though the Turks broke the spirit and letter of the NATO treaty by using American arms to invade Cyprus.

Aside from Norway, which has a few miles of its border touching the Arctic tip of northwestern Russia, Turkey is the only NATO ally with a real view - the underbelly of the Soviet Union.

That includes some 1,000 miles of coastline along the Black Sea, a sizeable body of water of some 164,000 square miles, and a mountain border with Soviet Georgia and Armenia.

Another reason Washington is so reluctant to cut off arms to Turkey and risk yet another rupture in the NATO defense line is the presence of Soviet supported Syria and unpredictable Iraq to Turkey's south, and oil rich Iran to the southeast.

Bluntly, Turkey is more important to the Pentagon and State Department than Greece and that is why President Ford is risking congressional-and popular-ire by his veto of arms aid cuts for Ankara.

From Turkey, the United States can keep a good eye on the Soviet Black Sea fleet, including the movement of missile loaded submarines west through the Bosphorus to the Mediterranean.

And a monitor on everything from Soviet space and missile shots thousands of miles inland, to detection of underground nuclear explosions and even in flight conversations between pilots of the Soviet air force.

Greece's loss to NATO is not regarded as trivial.

It may mean also the loss of U.S. air and naval bases on Greek soil, although those are governed by a bilateral and not an Atlantic alliance agreement.

But weighing it all up, the decision makers in Washington have come to the conclusion that Turkey-regardless of its unpleasant actions in Cyprus-stacks up more blue chips in the nation game plan than Greece.

Fuel crisis likely again

An Associated Press survey shows that as cold weather approaches there are natural gas shortages in most areas. And the possibility of a nationwide coal strike has forced the federal government into contingency plans to shift coal supplies.

While there are no indications that last year's campaign to turn down thermostats will be repeated this year, there are indications costs will go up.

RALPH GRAHAM

between Holyoke and Amherst off rte.

Coming to UMass is a man by the name of Ralph Graham, who recently has played most of the big clubs in New England and is embarking on his first national tour. So far, he has met with rave reviews of both his album, Differently (Sussex SRA 8033), and his live show.

Graham's music is a mixture of all that is right in music, drawing strongly from soul and rock camps together, while maintaining a very strong personal identity. He sees himself as something of an innovator, what music biz biggies like to call a "cross over," or somebody who can appeal to anybody.

A full sound, strong backing band, as well as Graham's own visual presence, promise to make his Oct. 16-19 date at UMass a memorable occasion. Also appearing with Ralph Graham is the band Fate, whose single "Darlin" of Beach Boys fame is about to be distributed nationally. All in all, a chance to hear some newand different music which promises to be excellent.

Come and have a good time, and remember, the weekend is long enough for

Free bus leaves Saturday

Clark sponsors natural energy conference

Environmental Action has arranged for a bus on Saturday and Sunday, October 19 and 20, to go to Clark University in Worcester which is hosting an Application of Natural Energy Conference then.

The Conference will be an exposition of how-to-do-it plans, materials, and devices which use natural energy sources--like solar heating, wind power, biogas; etc. There will be speakers, and manufacturers who will display their systems, kits, and plans.

Dr. Karl Boer will talk on "Solar I: A Solar Heated and Powered House."

A talk on "Using Existing Materials in Solar Installations and Problems of Applying Solar Technology in the Construction Industry" will be given by Prof. Shawn W. Miller.

Biogas Genergation will be discussed by Prof. Lingappa of Holy Cross University.

Windworks will have a slide show and demonstration on wind power.

Richard Delaw of Solar Sun Stills, Inc. will describe "Control of Condensation and Light in Solar Stills and Greenhouses" through slides and discussion.

Tyco Corp. will bring a show and discuss their solar cells.

Solar Therm, which imports Israeli solar water heaters, will have a display.

Kalwall Corp., which makes solar collectors, solar walls, and solar collector covering materials, will display there.

Henry Clews of Solar Wind Corp. will discuss his commercial units and a new kit he hopes to manufacture.

Secondary heat recovery systems will also be displayed.

These are only a few of the speakers and exhibitors which will comprise the conference. There has been an attempt at balancing the conference between speakers who are involved in developing the applications of natural sources of energy, and exhibitors who have products and services to sell.

The free bus will leave UMass. from the front of Hasbrouck Lab. at 9 a.m. on Saturday and at 11 a.m. on Sunday. They'll be returning about 6 p.m. both days. Only the free transportation to and from Clark University will be provided and there will be sign-up sheets for the two days in the Environmental Action office at 426-D Student Union.

Saturday, October 19

TOUR LEAVES UNIV. OF MASS.	8:15 AM
Leaves Amherst Center	8:05 AM
Leaves Smith College	7:45 AM
Leaves Mt. Holyoke College	7:30 AM

Here's a special full day excursion to points in southern New Hampshire scheduled at the very peak of the colorful fall foliage season, and at a most attractive price. Artists and camera fans should bring along all of their gear on the bus, as you'll have ample opportunity to put them to use at specifically planned stops.

Some of the highlights of this tour include: a complete tour at the Anheuser Busch (Budweiser) Brewery in Nashua, with free samples and a visit to the Clydesdale Stables, a sunset hayride in picturesque Jaffrey, heart of the Monadnock region of the state, a visit to the unique Cathedral of the Pines in West Rindge, and a chance to photograph some covered bridges.

Opportunities will be provided for both luncheon and supper stops. Return to the colleges is slated for about 9:00 PM.

FDA studies Dalkon Shield

Intrauterine device causes abortions, deaths

By NANCY HEINE
College Press Service

No one has ever known exactly how the intrauterine device (IUD) works to prevent pregnancy. But the serious side-effects of one of these devices — the Dalkon Sheild — are now a matter of public record.

It has been responsible for 209 septic spontaneous abortions and 11 reported deaths.

On June 27 of this year, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) called a halt to the sale and distribution of the Dalkon Shield until it could investigate the matter further. Studies were conducted and hearings held in August for that purpose. The facts are now in, according to Mary C. Kelly of the FDA's press office, and a statement on FDA findings and conclusions were supposed to have come late last month.

The story goes that over 2000 years ago, camel drivers inserted stones in the uteri of their female camels to prevent conception and birth over long journeys. Not until 1970, though, did the IUD come into wide use among women. Alarmed by Senate hearings on the dangers of oral contraceptives but still desiring birth control, large numbers of women in the United States gave the device a try. During this time the Dalkon Shield gained popularity among women who had never been pregnant. Hyped as the "IUD that's changing current thinking about contraception," the Shield claimed to have a lower rejection rate than did other IUD's for these women.

The first Dalkon Shield ad, which appeared in medical journals, based its claims on a single study done by Hugh Davis, Shield co-inventor and medical consultant to A.H. Robins Co., manufacturer of the device. The ad claimed a pregnancy rate of 1.1 per cent, an expulsion rate of 2.3 per cent and a one year continuation rate — that is, the number of women who continue to wear the Shield for one year — of 94 per cent.

But the study was not conducted on women who had the device in place for one year. It was conducted on 640 women for 3,549 "woman-months of use."

Dividing woman-months by the number of women involved, the average insertion time was only 5.5 months.

In a later ad the A.H. Robins Co. recommended that a patient use another form of contraception along with the Shield for the first three months of use. An irate physician, testifying before the House Hearings on Medical Devices noted that this ad made claims based on a guarantee covering little more than two months of time during which the Shield is the only form of contraception recommended.

While these ads were being published, A.H. Robins had in its files at least 10 independently conducted studies showing the pregnancy rate as high as 4.3 per cent and continuation rates as low as 41 per cent.

David Links, Director of the FDA Office of Medical Devices, wrote at this time that besides "mild puffery" the ads for the device seemed "reasonable and accurate."

Meanwhile reports of heavy bleeding, painful insertion, uterine perforation, higher than expected pregnancy rates and pregnancy complications began coming in from women using the Dalkon Shield as well as other IUD's. A physician's survey by the US Center for Disease Control revealed that IUD use led to more than 3500 hospitalizations during the first six months of 1973.

Then, in May 1974 A.H. Robins sent out letters to 120,000 physicians advising them that six deaths and 36 septic abortions appeared to have been caused by the Shield. By June reports of more deaths and abortions forced the FDA into action. Sale and distribution of the Dalkon Shield were halted.

In July the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) told its 3000 federally funded family planning clinics to stop inserting the [illegible]alkon IUD. But it had already be[illegible] phasing them out for the past tw[illegible] years because information from their abortion clinics indicated that the Shield had a higher pregnancy rate than had been advertised.

On August 21st, the FDA opened a two day public hearing to gather facts and professional opinions about the Shield. Physicians testified that 1 out of every 25 IUD pregnancies occur outside of the uterus and must be aborted. They added that 209 women had suffered septic (or infected) spontaneous abortions during Dalkon Shield pregnancies and that eleven had died of the resulting blood poisoning.

Over the Labor Day holiday, members of the FDA Special Advisory Subcommittee met to assess information gathered at the hearing. But the final verdict will not be out until the end of September.

Because the FDA regards the IUD as a "device" rather than a drug, it hasn't the authority to require pre-market testing of the contraceptive. Neither can it require the reporting of adverse reactions associated with the device, the registration of IUD manufacturers nor the attachment of warning labels to each IUD package.

Increase in women workers raises rights issues

NEW YORK [UPI] — More women than ever before are holding jobs outside the home so nothing could be timelier than a look at the working woman's rights under federal law.

The U.S. Government has packaged it neatly in a booklet because of the "great increase in the number of women in the labor force. Within one decade — 1963 to 1973 — the number of women workers aged 16 and over increased by nearly 10 million, or 40 percent, when it climbed from 24.7 million to 34.5 million.

"The number of men workers increased by only 15 percent during this period."

It should be pointed out immediately that federal legislation on rights apply to the men as well, however.

Not only are more women working, but they tend to work for longer periods of time — many for a stretch of 20 to 25 years after their children have entered school.

"In addition, many women in their 40s and 50s returning to the labor force are unaware of their rights," said the booklet, just released from the Women's Bureau, the U.S. Department of Labor.

On getting a job, for instance, the bureau points out there now are about 400 apprenticeable occupations in the skilled trades. Your nearest employment service or state department of labor can help you on the list and how to go about apprenticing.

One section is devoted to "You have a right to complain if". These include if an employer's advertisement for employes carries a sex label; an employer refuses to let you file an application but accepts applications of others;

A union or employment agency refuses to refer you to job openings; you are fired or laid off without cause; you are passed over for promotion for which you are qualified; you are paid less for comparable work;

You are placed in a segregated seniority line; you are left out of training or apprenticeship programs.

MassPIRG assists in obtaining Massachusetts public records

By DONALD J. PARSONS
MassPIRGintern

This column, which details work by the student-funded Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, will appear weekly in The Collegian. Parsons is a UMass student.

MassPIRG reports

Civil Service test results; tests of community water supplies; results of building inspections; and state licensing practices, these are but a few of the 'public records made or received by public officials' which belong to you, the public, and should be readily available for our reference. The sad fact remains that these documents have not been available for public scrutiny, and little has changed in the post-Watergate era.

In 1973 MassPIRG, along with other citizen-action groups, exerted pressure at the state level to ensure that in theory "public records" would truly be public records in fact. The Massachusetts legislature reacted with the Freedom of Information Act, a state law detailing the rights of citizens to gain access to public documents.

As part of its strategy to get this law enacted, MassPIRG students had conducted an investigation into the availability of documents by requesting a series of them from various government agencies. The fact that the students met with little success in the field was one of the principle reasons they met with success in the legislature — they had documented a real and important problem.

This investigation has been repeated recently to see what effect enactment of the law has had. Unfortunately, little has changed. In its report of September 27, 1974 MassPIRG reviewed the results of the two surveys and drafted recommendations as to how the Act could be given some teeth. The Berkshire Eagle uncharacteristically devoted an editorial to this report praising MassPIRG for its perceptive treatment of the weaknesses of the Act.

The major problems with the act, as detailed by MassPIRG attorney David Burwell in his testimony before the Assistant Secretary of Administration and Finance, are its:

a) failure to deal with the problem of different government agencies treating the same or similar documents in disparate ways.

b) failure to designate classes of documents as public or confidential.

c) failure to establish an expeditious means of appeals in cases where individuals are denied access to documents.

Massachusetts Freedom of Information Act has been billed as a major step toward the goal of creating a society in which the public can monitor its state agencies. Unfortunately, it will require considerable tailoring and support in the form of additional laws if it is to operate smoothly as a vent for the free flow of public documents to citizens.

This "sunshine act of 1973" obviously sheds its beams on the public records held by UMass — Amherst, a state agency. Any student requesting information, from the University, designated as 'public record' is acting within the spirit of the Act. To assist you, MassPIRG is preparing a "Citizen's guide to the Freedom of Information Act." Informed use of this guide should facilitate your receiving all documents to which you are entitled by the law. Should you encounter further resistance, however, MassPIRG is there to see that your best interest is represented. Simply drop in at 233 N. Pleasant St., Amherst or call 256-6434, state your problem and you've got some friends you'll be glad you found.

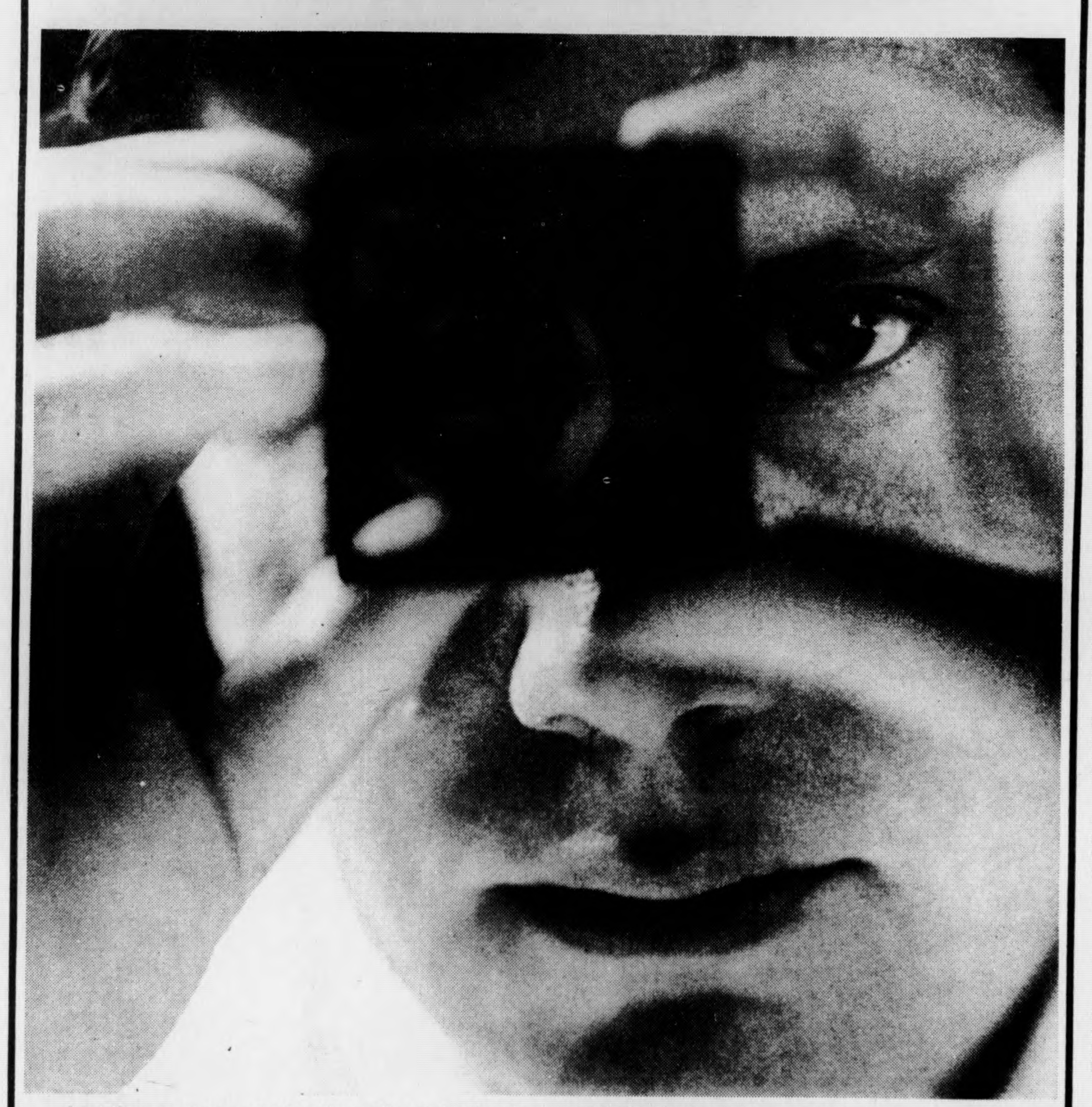
Jim Carroll enjoys working with a vicious killer.



Just three years out of college, laser technologist Jim Carroll didn't make senior research physicist at Eastman Kodak Company by acting timid. So when he had the courage to pit science against a dread disease, we backed him. Win or lose.

The medical community enlisted Kodak's help in training lasers on the war on cancer. We responded with a pair of 500 million watt laser systems. And left the rest up to Jim.

In time, the lasers proved unsuccessful in treating cancer, but we'd do it again if we had to. Because while we're in business to make a profit, we care what happens to society. It's the same society our business depends on.

Kodak.
More than a business.

Annenberg quits post in Britain

LONDON [AP] — Walter H. Annenberg soon will be packing his multimillion-dollar collection of French Impressionist paintings, saying goodbye to Queen Elizabeth II and probably leaving the post of U.S. Ambassador to Britain empty for a while.

After 5½ years as envoy to the Court of St. James, the 66-year-old Philadelphia publisher and philanthropist, says he cannot postpone his departure any longer while the United States seeks a successor. He has projects of his own he wants to start work on.

"I hear Her Majesty is disappointed that there will be no immediate continuity," the ambassador told newsmen. "If there is nobody here to take over from me by the end of October, it is conceivable there will be no ambassador before the end of November or even December."

Annenberg said he thinks it would be difficult for a career diplomat making $42,500 a year to be ambassador and keep up Winfield House, the immense ambassadorial residence in Regent's Park.

"He could do it with help from the government," Annenberg said, "but not in my style, with the fine wines, and the flowers in every room. Running the residence probably has cost me $250,000 a year. If the government came up with $75,000 to $100,000, it could be probably handily operated, but it would be on a different basis."

Annenberg said his successor could probably borrow paintings from Britain's National Gallery to fill the empty places on the walls where his Monets, Manets and Van Gohs now hang. Annenberg is taking them to his ranch in the California desert.

Annenberg says he will continue in control of his publishing empire when he returns to the United States, but his main project will be to try to establish a school for international communications and understanding. He also has commissioned a book on the decline and fall of the West — "like Gibbon's 'Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.'"

Leaving Britain, Annenberg says he fears an end is coming to the gracious style of living, "especially the dignified way of life in the world in which ambassadors move."

"There will be a shift in the way of life for people of affluence," he said. But those who are not affluent will be better off "and that's all to the good."

Girl bites off attacker's tongue

DENVER [UPI] — A teenaged girl dragged into an alley at gunpoint escaped from her assailant by biting his tongue in two as he tried to kiss her, police said Monday.

"About a third of his tongue was severed," said a police department spokesman. "He apparently hit the girl and ran away, bleeding from around the mouth."

Investigators said a man, identified as Eugene Carroll, 24, of suburban Denver was picked up after the 17-year-old girl reported the assault Sunday. He was held for investigation of attempted rape after he sought emergency medical treatment for a lacerated tongue.

The girl told officers who questioned her about the attack that the man who attempted to rape her "will be bleeding since I bit his tongue off."

SBA sponsors conference on accounting and auditing

The second annual Accounting and Auditing Conference at UMass Oct. 25 and 26 will present accounting practitioners with up-to-date developments in accounting and auditing.

Topics covered will include: unaudited financial statements, audit reports, initial engagements, equity accounting, and profit recognition in real estate.

Speakers will be: George S. Odiorne, dean of the School of Business Administration; Cornelius Harrington, executive vice president of the Third National Bank of Hampden County; John C. Connors, special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Boston; Fred Alexander, cpa and chairman of the professional ethics committee of the Massachusetts Society of CPAs; Gerald Glunts, cpa and member of the ethics committee, American Institute of CPAs; and William F. DiPesa, cpa and member of the Massachusetts Board of Public Accountancy.

Further information and registration forms are obtainable from the UMass accounting department, School of Business.

The Accounting and Auditing Conference is a program of the Accounting and Auditing Committee of the Massachusetts society of CPAs and the accounting department of the UMass School of Business Administration.

SBA club newsletter is available today

The Business Club in SBA (School of Business Administration) is currently publishing a newsletter that will be used to transmit relevant information to SBA students, faculty, and administration.

Information will include the functions and activities of the various departments, clubs, and services in the Business School. Publication is scheduled for once every two weeks, with the next issue becoming available today, at various points throughout SBA.

Although the "Undergrad" is an effort of the Business Club, all groups and individuals involved with SBA are invited to contribute.

Upcoming articles include interviews with recent graduates, career information, departmental policies, course additions and deletions, and possible alternatives to graduate and postgraduate work.

Anyone wishing to work on the staff of the "Undergrad" or contribute ideas, information, or comments is invited to come down to the Business Club room, ground floor SBA. The editor, Bob Hoffman, can be contacted at 546-7527

Freshman book here

All freshmen are requested to come by the Freshman Register table on the Campus Center Concourse from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. this week to see if they have a copy of the Freshman Register coming.

Alpha Phi Omega, who is distributing the Registers, has found that many perents purchased copies without telling students, so they are requesting freshmen to come by and check.

January ski program offered

The General Physical Education Program is again offering an Intersession Ski Program, this year in Cahmonix, France. The Program is open to all Five College students, faculty, staff and members of their immediate families.

The program will run from January 8-16, 1975, and will feature 20 hours of ski instruction and 10 hours of biomechanical analysis. Two credits will be awarded undergraduates successfully completing the course.

For additional information contact Peter Graham (545-2801) or The General Physical Education Office (545-2338). Early reservations are recommended.

Physical awareness group meets tonight

Sufi philosophy, music and dance will be the October presentation of the Psychical Awareness & Research Association monthly meeting, to be held Oct. 16, 7:30 p.m. at Farley Lodge, Farley is located on University Drive and the meeting is open to the public. Admission is by donation.

The evening's program will be conducted by Catherine Mariott-Blinder, owner and operator of the Good Home Restaurant in Greenfield and Molly Scott, famous entertainer, singer, actress, musician and songwriter whose career has included guest appearances on the Johnny Carson Show, the Mike Douglas Show, the Les Crane Show as well as active in principle roles in theater with Shelly Winters & Robert Walker. A year ago, returning from a trip to India, she brought with her indian instruments and songs which are a part of her musical repertoire.

Catherine Mariott-Blinder is an initiate of Pir Vilayat Kahn, spiritual head of the Sufi Order in Europe and the U.S. Her Greenfield restaurant features natural foods and provides a place for community gatherings where films and concerts are presented. She is presently working on a natural foods cookbook.

PARA is an organization, dedicated to investigation, exploration, and developmental type programs in the psychical and spiritual realm of man. An independent organization, founded in Feb. 1974, PARA has been holding its meetings on UMass campus monthly, all general meetings are open to the general public. For those desiring further information on the association, they may call Mrs. Kiely at 467-7244.

Wilson drafts economic plan

LONDON [UPI] — Prime Minister Harold Wilson and his Labor cabinet yesterday drafted a program designed to rescue inflation-squeezed industry and head off mass unemployment in Britain's worst economic crisis since World War II.

Government officials said the keystone of legislation to be presented to the new parliament Oct. 29.

Drafting of the economic program took place at the first formal meeting of the cabinet since the Labor party's narrow election victory last Thursday.

Later, Wilson held separate meetings with the councils of the 10-million member Trades Union Congress and the Confederation of British Industry to find ways of halting a growing tide of industrial bankruptcies caused by inflation and cash shortages.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Wednesday, October 16

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A day for exercising your creative powers. Don't hesitate to leave your own mark of excellence upon whatever you undertake.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Use your imagination if you would have your work be distinctive in any way. This is an excellent time for the conception of new ideas.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Caution is advised if you plan any trip far from home other than what may be entailed getting to and from work. Read traffic signs twice.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A problem of employment may annoy you more than you are willing to admit to co-workers. Take your questions to those in authority.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18) — If you would see a reconciliation between old friends take place, do your part; advise all parties of the wishes of individuals concerned.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Personal relationships may be more difficult than usual now. Do what you can to ease the way for another's success.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — An error of identification could cause you considerable embarrassment this morning. Take care not to take too much for granted.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Contacts made today and over the next few days are extremely important to the furtherance of your career. Don't overlook a silent partner!

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — The prudent Gemini insures the success of operations which must for the present remain a secret. Business associates may press for answers.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Where martial problems are concerned, keep your own counsel. Attempt to answer another's questions tactfully — if you answer them at all.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Contact a friend in need of solace. Now is the time to let another know that you can be counted on during times of stress, danger, or fear.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — The wise decision made now can mean the difference between good and ill health over the next few months. Make an effort to confide in an expert.

Congress committee says China has working birth control plan

WASHINGTON [UPI] - A Congressional report says China has developed a highly effective birth control program using mass-motivation techniques that would not work anywhere else.

The study released recently the House Committee on Foreign Affairs says China, the world's most populous contry, will likely become the first major developing nation to reduce population growth below 1 per cent per year.

"As for the value of China as a model for developing countries," the report said, "the answer in every field of development has become almost a cliche and holds true for family planning as well: China's experience is not transferable but there is much to be learned from it."

It said the motivating forces peculiar to the Chinese include the desire to please Chairman Mao Tse-tung and to get ahead in a society that makes birth control a matter of both honor and policy.

The 45-page study, titled "China's Experience in Population Control: The Elusive Model", was prepared for the committee by Leo A. Orleans, a Chinese research specialist of the Library of Congress who visited China in 1973.

It said China neither knows nor cares exactly how many Chinese there are. As a result, there is little of the hard statistical information Western analysts rely upon in evaluating birth control efforts.

Sideline scenario

starring Dick MacPherson

Photographs by Dan Smith

Text by Dean Tucker

Watching a football game from the sidelines is much different than watching it from the stands. You can hear the contact, see the tears, smell the work and hear the coach.

Ah, the coach. To some he is Dick the Fierce, to others less reverent he is Dick the Priest, but to watch him in action is a study in complexity beyond the dreams of Sigmund Freud...

Dick MacPherson

He's ugly. He's happy. He's a prince. He's a fool. Yes he is, no...he isn't. He's everything and everybody and within two hours he shows it to whoever watches him closely.

Coaches have images as public figures and they spend most of their time with the public keeping the image the public knows the image the public sees.

But coaches are people (although Lombardi and Rockne have been canonized since their death) and coaches despite all their image making usually show themselves at game time.

Not too many see coaches as people because they are in the stands getting drunk or high or playing kissy-face...or being distracted by the cheerleaders or the band...or watching the game as all claim to be doing. Or else they don't go to games and get their experiences with coaches from press conferences, or newspapers, or radio shows. Coaches have images as public figures....

Coach MacPherson from the sidelines is a different person than he is from anywhere else. Would he in his right mind yell at Ed McAleney as he did at Dartmouth? Only perhaps if he wanted to be folded like a Quarter Pounder Box...and discarded with the same ease? No, Dick MacPherson would not do that. But Coach MacPherson would.

In the Vermont game MacPherson is yelling, "Mark, Mark, Mark," who is sitting on a bench havinghadbeenkickedshitlessforthreequarters...and needing a rest. Would Dick MacPherson talk to an adult who is working as hard as 167 pounds can like he would to a three year old kid lost at the playground? No. Would Coach MacPherson do it? Yes. (And he gets paid too.)

I guess they call it schizophrenia, raised to the tenth power, with an aggression complex, paranoia, exhibitionism, tyranny, Messiah complex, vanity, pompousness, and all kinds of mean and terrible things.

But he smiles and cheers too...and in a jargon passes encouragement to the players on who's work his job depends. It is a strange life indeed. They hold the paycheck in a way...and he tells them what to do.

Dick MacPherson is a good man. Coach MacPherson...he is something else. He's crazy.

Coach MacPherson crazy? Sure, but only for two hours a week. Which leaves him hours behind Southwest, the Blue Wall, the Hatch and a lot of other campus institutions UMies see a lot more of. Dick MacPherson? He's OK.

Don Chaney; Celts to feel the loss

By MIKE BERGER
Sports Staff

Put yourself in this position. You are a rookie guard in the N.B.A. and tonight is the first night you are starting. Your teammate passes you the ball and you start to dribble up the floor. All of a sudden, two dangling arms strike from nowhere and snatch the ball away. Before you know it, the thief has sneaked away for an uncontested lay-up. You pray that there is an 8 x 10 hole somewhere in the floor so you can hide from the embarrassment. Those viperous arms belong to none other than Don Chaney.

analysis

Mr. Chaney makes a living creating situations like the one described. Chaney is a defensive specialist. Blessed with long arms and an extended reach, Chaney's forte consists of steals, blocked shots, and a consistent defense. Rumor has it that he was in the personal nightmares of Walt Frazier, Oscar Robertson, and Ernie DeGregorio.

Don Chaney's problem as a basketball player is that he is not a consistent shooter. Although Don is at a good height for a guard 6' 4", an excellent rebounder, and a good dribbler, Don does not display the "eye" or soft touch needed to shoot consistently.

What made the Celtics great over the years was not necessarily the fact that Red Auerbach assembled the best basketball talent available. A supreme prerequisite according to Red is the attitude of the player. He must be a team man, one who would pass the ball to another player, regardless of whether he was black, white, a superstar, or the last player on the team. Don Chaney exemplifies that kind of attitude.

As a rookie, Don was lucky if he could execute a layup - an offensive fundamental of basketball. Over the years, Don has worked extremely long and hard on his offense. The hard work paid off last spring.

One might say that the championship was earned through the heroics of John Havlicek, JoJo White, Dave Cowens, and Paul Silas. But in my opinion, Chaney personally defeated Buffalo, New York, and Milwaukee with his defensive containment of great offensive players like DeGregorio, Frazier and Robertson. Moreover, I saw a great display by Chaney in offensive and defensive rebounding, and timely shooting (including 20 ft. bombs).

However, Don has decided to jump next year to the land of the Red, White, and Blue, Dr. J., and the three point play - the A.B.A.

You are probably thinking that Chaney is just one of those athletes whose sole purpose in playing professional ball is to make as much money as he can.

It will be true that Chaney will make more money with the A.B.A. than the Celtics. But there are certain other intangibles that come with playing with the Boston Celtics.

The "Duck" is well liked in Boston by the fans and the media. It's easier to play beside guys who share the same team attitude and character. Boston has the youthful talent to compete for a championship for the next two or three years. With a championship comes money and recognition both personal and as a team.

Will the Celts miss Chaney? Yes and No. They will miss his defense since he is the best defensive player on the team except for Havlicek. Offensively, Paul Westphal, Kevin Stacom and Glenn McDonald all have the potential to consistently score points since all are better shooters than Chaney.

Celtics out a couple

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Celtics pared down to the limit of 12 players Tuesday by placing on waivers free agents Byron Jones and M.L. Carr.

Jones, a fourth round draft choice from the University of San Francisco in 1973, was cut for the second straight year. Carr, a Guilford College graduate, joined the team last week. The two were expected to play in Europe this season if they cleared NBA waivers.

The Celtics will have four new faces Friday night when they open the season at Boston Garden against the Buffalo Braves.

Former ABA veteran Jim Ard will play center in the absence of injured Dave Cowens and fifth round draft choice Ben Clyde will fill in at forward in place of injured Phil Hankinson. Rookie guards Kevin Stacom and Glenn McDonald, the the team's top two draft picks, also will see action.

Termites in Busch Stadium

ST. LOUIS, Mo. [UPI] — Busch Stadium, pride of St. Louis and home of three professional sports teams, has termites, it was revealed Tuesday.

The stadium is only eight years old, but its owners confirmed there were termites in the offices, that the area under the stands behind home plate were infested, and that the bugs might even have worked their way through the ground to the astroturf.

The termites were first discovered in a closet in one of the offices on the stadium's ground level. In a nearby storeroom, the termites had eaten through some cardboard boxes, and finally the space under the stands behind home plate was found to be infested.

Glennon F. Walsh, Executive Vice President of Civic Center Redevelopment Cor., owner of the stadium, acknowledged the discovery of the termites but described the problem as "negligilble."

However, Chester W. Robinette, president of the exterminating firm which was called in after the first discovery of termites, wasn't so sure.

Big weekend for UM water polo

Columbus Day weekend was hardly a vacation for the UMass water polo squads. The men played a total of three games and the women played two.

Last Saturday, the men beat R.P.I. 12 to 7, again displaying their strong offense. Henry MacLean scored 5, Ron Boucher 4, Kevin McGinn 2, and Duncan Lomas 1.

The next morning at 7:00 a.m. both the men's and women's teams were up and on the road for Boston College. The men met both B.C. and Bowdoin in B.C.'s unusually shallow pool. They lost in a protested game to B.C. 7 to 5, but came back to beat Bowdoin 5 to 3.

The women also had quite a day in Boston, handing defeats to both B.C. and Wellesley in two of their best games of the season. The B.C. game especially, saw good heads up play, a lot of passing, and aggressive swimming. The final score was 6 to 3 with goals by Kathy MacDonald (2), Debby Hoxsie (2), Jane Welzel (1), and Jeannie Abrahamson (1).

Gorillas victorious, 23-2

The old saying "scoring at will" was put into practice by Garber's Gorillas last Sunday in a scrimmage game against Springfield college in which the Minutemen trounced S.C. 23-2.

UMass showed some very fine passing and playmaking for so early in the year and the midfielders and defense looked very strong.

After losing some of the players that the Gorillas did from last season it would seem that this would be a rebuilding year. But after seeing their performance against Springfield and seeing the personnel that they have this year it appears that that will definitely not be the case.

Sayonara Orlando

SAN JUAN, P.R. [UPI] — Orlando Cepeda, recently released by the Kansas City Royals after catching on as a designated hitter late in the season, will play in the Japanese Leauge in the 1975 and 1976 season, it was revealed Tuesday by local sports sources.

The sources said Cepeda had signed a $250,000 contract to play with one of the Japanese teams during the two years.

Booters nip Westfield, 2-1

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

Tony King, who replaced Bill Belcher when he was injured late in the game, scored with just 3:45 left to give the UMass soccer team a 2-1 victory over Westfield State yesterday.

The major story of the game though was that UMass scored all three goals in the game but unfortunately one of them was kicked into their own net.

Early in the first half, UMass' Dean Lungu gave Westfield State a 1-0 lead, while attempting to clear the ball out of the front of the goal, he actually kicked it past a shocked Mark Hanks for a Westfield score.

King saved the day for both UMass and Lungu with his late game heroics. With both teams seemingly settling for a tie, King picked up a loose ball right in front of the Westfield goal and fired it past the outstretched arms of the Westfield goalie. Mohammad Othman received credit for an assist on the play.

King may not have even been in if Bill Belcher hadn't been injured late in the game. Belcher limped off the field and King made the most of the opportunity. The UMass bench erupted, almost running out onto the field.

Westfield broke out of their game apathy after UMass went ahead but their late game charge was held off by UMass to preserve the victory.

"It was a tough game," said Coach Al Rufe. "They're a good team." Westfield was rated number 8 in New England and UMass was ranked number 10 but that probably will change after yesterday's game.

It wasn't exactly the type of game that you would expect from the number 8 and the number 10 ranked teams in New England. The play was sloppy and lacked excitement for the most part.

Westfield showed the obvious effects of a letdown after their key 1-1 tie with nationally ranked Springfield College. As one Westfield player said, "I guess we figured that since we tied Springfield, we didn't have to try against UMass."

Westfield indeed didn't play as though they deserved their high rating. Their play wasn't spirited and their game consisted of a series of poor long passes. Early in the game, they had the better chances to score but their refusal to shoot, and to pass instead hurt them dearly. Only in the last four minutes did they wake up but it was too late.

After a slow start, UMass controlled the second half of play. Many excellent scoring opportunities were missed. Mohammad Othman kicked a shot that the goalie just managed to deflect over the crossbar. He missed an open net from right in front when his shot just went wide. Tom Coburn made a great play but couldn't quite finish it off as he faked the goalie but fired the ball 6 inches wide.

Mohammad Othman who has come off an injury, scored the first official UMass goal. Tom Coburn outraced the Westfield State goalie to the ball to the left of the goal passed it to a wide open Othman who headed it into an unguarded net.

Westfield State's synthetic turf didn't seem to bother UMass much. It is thicker than the usual synthetic turf which causes the ball to bounce not as high and to roll faster, said a Westfield State official.

Neither goalie was severely tested throughout the game as UMass' goalie was credited with only three saves and the Westfield goalie was credited with six.

"This win really puts us in good position for the rest of the season,," said Coach Rufe. "If we can beat Rhode Island in our next game, we'll be all set for Connecticut." Connecticut was the pre-season favorite to win the Yankee Conference.

QUICK SHOTS: UMass is now 5-1 on the season and Westfield drops to 7-2-2. Mike Parsons made a great save, blocking a Westfield pass right in front of the UMass goal headed for a wide open Westfield forward. Winning the Westfield game has to be the biggest win for the Minutemen thus far this season even if it was not the best played game of the year. Mohammed Othman continues to spark the team with his scoring antics. UMass' next contest is Friday versus the University of Rhode Island in Rhode Island.

Oakland wins 3rd game, 3-2

OAKLAND [UPI] — The Oakland A's defeated the Los Angeles Dodgers 3-2 in the third game of the world series last night because Joe Ferguson, who doesn't care where he plays "as long as I get my four swings a game," was in the wrong place.

Ferguson, who had played right field for Los Angeles in the first two series games, was switched back to catcher so the Dodgers could get another lefthanded batter, Willie Crawford, into the lineup in right.

The move was a failure, even though Crawford hit a ninth inning homer for the Dodgers' final run.

The difference in the game was an error by Ferguson — one of two he made, tying a series record for catchers — that led to two unearned runs by the A's in the third inning and put them ahead to stay.

This was the third straight game in this first — ever all — California World Series decided by a 3-2 score — The A's won the first and the Dodgers the second — and put Oakland on top in games, 2-1. The fourth and fifth games will be played here Wednesday and Thursday nights.

Ferguson had shared the catching job with Steve Yeager this season but Yeager, who is a better catcher, played there the first two series games while Ferguson was in right.

Ironically, Ferguson had spectacular moments in each of the first two games. He prevented an Oakland run in the first game with one of the best throws from the outfield in series history, and hit a two-run home run in the second game.

But last night he was not spectacular.

With the game scoreless and two out in the third inning, Ferguson couldn't handle a little chip in front of the plate by Reggie Jackson.

He bobbled the ball for an error and Oakland's first run scored on the play. Joe Rudi followed with a single to make it 2-0.

Oakland got its third run in the fourth, Dick Green coming home on a single by Bert Campaneris, and Ferguson let the throw from center get by him for his second error.

That made Ferguson the first catcher in more than 40 years to make two errors in a World Series game.

Before the game started, Ferguson was asked about the move from right back to catcher, and he said "I don't care where I play as long as I get my four swings a game," but his four swings didn't accomplish much either — two strikeouts, a walk, and he reached on an error.

Jackson reprimanded for row with scribe

OAKLAND [UPI] — Reggie Jackson, Oakland's outfielder, was reprimanded and threatened with suspension by baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn Tuesday as a result of his run-in with a sports writer.

Kuhn's action came moments before the third game of the World Series between the Oakland A's and Los Angeles Dodgers and was an outgrowth of a stinging denunciation by Jackson directed at Murray Olderman, 52, a sports columnist for a feature syndicate, during the A's off-day workout at Oakland Coliseum Monday.

The reprimand and suspension threat was conveyed to Jackson by one of Kuhn's aides, Joseph Reichler, baseball's director of public relations.

Reichler approached Jackson as the A's cleanup hitter was warming up with fellow outfielder Jesus Alou near the Oakland dugout and told him Kuhn was "very disturbed" over published reports of his threat to keep Olderman out of the A's clubhouse.

"The commissioner doesn't want anything like this ever to happen again," Reichler told Jackson. "If it does, there's going to be a problem, a very serious problem, and I think you know what I mean by that."

Jackson nodded because shortly after Monday's episode, Reichler had told him he would risk suspension if he ever did the same thing again. Reichler made it clear to Jackson on Monday he was speaking for Kuhn.

Happy tenure for QB Mark Tripucka

Mark Tripucka likes UMass. He likes the social life, the people he's met, and the athletics. Especially football.

"I've had a helluba time playing football here," Mark said. It's a fine school and I've made friends here."

"When I was a freshman, this place was so big. But afterwards, when I made friends, it wasn't so big", Mark said. That was about the time Mark was backup behind Piel Pennington. He was the backup his sophomore and junior years and sat out last year with an injured leg.

Collegian
sports

During the year off Mark rested his leg. "The doctor told me to rest the leg until it was healthy after I stretched it by playing basketball and running. During spring practice I hurt myself by overstretching the leg," Mark explained.

Mark was taken out of Saturday's BU game, but not for the same injury. "I had a cyst in my knee and it popped when I was hit. It hurt at the game and until Monday or Tuesday. I'm alright now."

The pain of the cyst is almost as much as the loss against Vermont. "It's all uphill now," said the senior quarterback. "We have to beat both Rhode Island and UConn to get a share of the Beanpot. The loss to Vermont killed us."

Mark took over the starting job after Fred Kelliher was hurt on the second series of downs in the Villanova game. "Freddie played better than me in the pre-season, then all of a sudden I was starting."

"The Yankee Conference is competitive. Some people said that we were going to kill Maine. We still have to practice as hard. They may not tackle or hit as hard, but nobody is going to lie down and die."

Mark was 5 for 10 for 38 yards in the BU game, but he realizes the passing game is not like last year. But Mark counters that "statistics don't mean a thing. We beat Dartmouth but they had statistics. We had better stats than Villanova, but we lost".

"Last year," Mark continued, "the team got most of its yardage in the air. This year we got it on the ground. The total offense is about the same as last year and the record is the same after five games — 3-2."

Mark has no future plans other than a possible teaching job, but he does have a "past".

The 23 year old senior is from Bloomfield, N.Y. His father was Frank Tripucka who played quarterback for Notre Dame and in the NFL.

Dean leads off Watergate testimony

WASHINGTON [UPI] — John W. Dean III testified yesterday that Richard M. Nixon's closest aides — John N. Mitchell, H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman — were involved in a consuming flurry of cover-up activity after the Watergate break-in.

Chief trial prosecutor James F. Neal chronologically led Dean, Nixon's former counsel and the government's lead-off witness, through the meetings surrounding the June 17, 1972, break-in. It was expected the subpoenaed White House tape of Dean's Sept. 15, 1972, conversation with Nixon would be played Thursday afternoon in historic courtroom drama.

Dean, who is imprisoned at the Ft. Holabird, Md., federal facility after pleading guilty to his part in the cover-up, is expected to be questioned by the prosecution in the Watergate conspiracy trial for the rest of the week with cross-examination taking several more days. His wife Maureen was seated next to Mrs. Haldeman.

Mitchell, the former attorney general; Haldeman and Ehrlichman, former White House aides; and Kenneth W. Parkinson and Robert C. Mardian, former re-election aides, are in the 12th day of their trial.

Dean testified that:

—At a June 19, 1972, meeting, he reported to Mitchell, Mardian and former deputy campaign director Jeb Stuart Magruder, who also is in prison, that Ehrlichman "had taken charge of matters at the White House."

"What 'matters'?" Neal asked.

"Determining what had happened and how to deal with it," Dean replied, adding that Mitchell had replied to his report with an expressionless, off-the-cuff remark, "Isn't that wonderful."

Ken Dean opposes student control

Dorm life negotiations deadlocked

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

A deadlock has been reached in negotiations between Ken Dean, director of Residential Life, and representatives of the Student Senate to determine the powers of the new Residential Life Policy Board.

The board will consist of 21 students and have jurisdiction over the entire Residential Life system including dining commons and dorms.

The board was established to give students direct input to the director of Residential Life.

One of the student negotiators, Matt Burns, complained; "Right now Dean can spend our money. We can't hire him. We can't fire him either. We have absolutely no control over any decisions he makes."

Dean says he wants to "work with the students" in making policy decisions. However he sees "no need" for giving the Board governing powers.

The Board is part of the reorganization of the Residential Life system passed this summer. The composition and the exact function of the Board were deliberately left unspecified by the special committee that prepared it.

Last Wednesday negotiations were terminated because both groups felt they had compromised as much as possible and still couldn't reach an agreement.

The basic disagreement is that Dean wants the Board to be a "joint policy board" making decisions jointly with his office. The Student Senate reps insist on a student "governing board" which will run the Residential Life system.

In order to break the deadlock the Student Senate will write up a proposal for a Policy Board constitution. If this proposal is approved by the various Area Governments it will go through the governance process.

Graduate Senate hears Bromery's projected plans

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph Bromery told graduate senators that he hopes to spend more time looking at and addressing himself to campus issues. Bromery indicated that he plans to be much more visible on campus this year.

In an address to the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) Monday night, the Chancellor clarified the present situation regarding the proposal for graduate student grievance procedures.

Bromery explained that William E. Searson, general counsel to the President's Office, is currently examining the document for any legal concerns that may arise from its implementation. Although the Chancellor has accepted the proposal as an interim document, he is waiting for further clarification of the concerns of the President's Office before he can officially accept the document as University procedure.

The Graduate School Grievance Procedure will provide graduate students with a clearly defined series of steps that can be used to settle disputes concerning academic matters, TA-RA problems, and other issues that might arise.

Graduate students may bring formal complaints against the University if they feel 1) unjust or arbitrary disciplinary action has been taken against them, 2) the University has harmed them through its failure to follow customary and usual procedure, or 3) they have been deprived of a constitutionally protected right.

According to Bromery, it will only be a matter of days before these procedures can be used, unless Searson comes up with any real legal constraints.

The Chancellor stressed that he shares President Robert C. Wood's concerns about the inequities that exist amongst the various graduate departments. He reassured graduate senators that, according to the Board of Trustees, there will not be a duplication of graduate programs at the Boston and Amherst campuses.

When asked by a senator how he intends to evaluate the performance of the individuals working within the bureaucracy of the Amherst campus, the Chancellor replied that although he is receiving input from Zena Tillona, his staff assistant, as well as from the vice-chancellors, he welcomes any specific feedback and information that students can give.

Bromery acknowledged his awareness of the incompetency of many individuals working within the University. "But", he declared, "after twenty years of dealing with bureaucracies, I realize that there is still the human component. There are people who can be retrained or better utilized in another position. I intend to exhaust all possibilities before putting people who have been here for many years into the street."

Residency law may face test

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

The Student Organizing Project (SOP) will sponsor open hearings on housing and food services Nov. 4-8 which may lead to a lawsuit challenging mandatory dorm residence.

The SOP, which was founded to organize a student union on campus, is staging these hearings to expose the various problems of on-and off-campus living and provide a forum for all groups involved to present their cases.

Themes of the sessions, to be held in several residential areas, will include the financing, governance, and environmental quality of housing and food services for UMass students.

The hearings will investigate the impact of an all voluntary residence hall system on the university and the surrounding community.

Another major topic will be the constitutionality of the mandatory dorm residence and meal plans.

These hearings have been endorsed by all Area Government Presidents, the Student Senate, Southwest Assembly, and Commuter Assembly.

Student Senate President Rick Savini described the hearing as having two main functions: to make information available to the residents and "to help us make decisions on weather a suit should be brought against the university."

SOP is encouraging any individuals or groups interested in testifying to contact them at 5-2415 or 428 S.U. building.

Food Services Director Arthur H. Warren says that students will probably be paying more for their meal tickets next year.

Labor cost, theft may trigger hike in dining commons fee

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

First in a two-part series on how students are creating their own fee increases — and how they can be avoided.

If costs continue to rise at the current rate, students can expect the price of meal tickets to go up next year, according to Arthur H. Warren, Director of Food Services at UMass.

The price of a 10-meal plan ticket was $284.75 last year and the price this semester is $308.25, an increase of $23.50 over the previous year. The increase is the same for the 15-meal plan.

"The cost of labor has gone up 6 percent this year and will increase by another 6 percent next year. The minimum wage has also gone up," said Warren when asked about the price hike.

There are some built-in expenses in the price of a meal ticket. Students carry the burden of paying for all utilities connected with the dining commons. Included are costs for labor, electricity, food, trucks for food transport and a standard mortgage of approximately $900,000 a year on the D.C. buildings.

"Other schools such as Westfield State and Hampshire College can serve more food for the same amount of money" noted Warren when citing the huge chunk of money the mortgage payment takes out of the Food Service budget annually.

Another factor which seriously affects costs is the problem of theft. According to Warren, more food is being taken from dining commons as well as plates and utensils. Since just the beginning of this semester, $4,000 has been spent on replacing knives along.

"Students think they are ripping off an outside concern so they take silverware, china, break windows. The students end up paying. They don't realize they are stealing from themselves," said Warren.

Wasting of food is another big financial loss. There are no exact figures available on the amount of food that is wasted per year, but an experiment conducted recently by the Dining Commons in which wasted margarine and milk were collected proved that a substantial amount of food, and therefore money are being thrown away daily.

When asked what could be done with money saved if students wasted less and if the incidence of rip-offs were to go down, Warren said that the savings could be used to offset price increases and possibly the price of the meal ticket could be stabilized for some time rather than increasing at a steady rate.

Dorm-life issue deadlocked

The governance process can take as much as seventy days. It involves having the proposal voted on first by the Graduate Senate, the Faculty Senate, and finally by the Chancellor's Governance Board.

The Chancellor's board will have the final say on whether the constitution is implemented.

Burns said the reason students couldn't compromise any farther is becuase the Student Senate only empowered them to negotiate for "a board which operated in a line relationship to the director of Residence Life."

Dean gave two reasons why the board couldn't be a governing board. First, not all the residence hall funds are provided by students; Some come from the state. Secondly, he claims it would interfere with "managerial rights". By that he means that management must have final say on "all matters affecting the budgeting of the institution."

Burns said the problem is that administrators "don't want to recognize the fact that students as a group can make responsible decisions about their lives."

Burns told the Collegian that while the governance process is going on the Board will begin acting with the powers that Dean wanted it to have. Dean contradicted this saying as far as he knew the Board would only be set up during the process.

Bromery addresses Grad Senate

In response to a question about the specific duties of teaching, research, and service assistants, Vere Chappell, acting dean of the Graduate School, replied, "Though there is a standard contract, it's not very specific. Each department appends a list of specific duties which is completely arbitrary."

Acknowledging that this arbitrary list of duties often leads to problems within departments and grievances on the part of graduate assistants, Chappell said, "The Graduate School Grievance Procedure provides a mechanism for students to talk to faculty members about their grievances. I hope that the use of this procedure will prevent these problems from arising."

Chappell noted that the joint committee of Student Affairs-Financial Aid will attempt to clarify and define the rights and responsibilities of the graduate students and the University in reference to all three categories of assistantships.

Graduate student committee chairperson, Robert Jorgensen, extended an open invitation to all graduate students interested in working with this committee. He can be contacted through the GSS office, CC 919, 5-0970.

Highly-placed sources in the Graduate Student Senate have informed the Collegian that a new movement will soon surface within the UMass-Amherst community which will attempt to re-examine and redefine the role of student governance. Questions concerning effectiveness, areas and limits of power and control, general direction and goals, and the overall desirability of maintaining the present structure of student governance will be addressed throughout the current academic year.

Provost Robert L. Gluckstern will highlight the next GSS meeting. The allocation of GSS funds to the Collegian and the Student Senate Transit Service will also be discussed.

Environmental program 'a first for UMass'

Spring semester brings Earth School to campus

By JERRY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Earth School, an off-campus, residential program in environmental studies will be conducted by the Institute for Man and His Environment during spring semester in what is a first for UMass.

Open to sixteen students from the Five Colleges, the three part program will "provide an intensive introduction to interdisciplinary environmental studies." Applications will be accepted until November 7. More detailed information will be available at an introductory meeting Monday night, October 21, in the Campus Center.

"The program started at Hampshire, as most programs of this type do, but when it didn't make it, we picked it up," said Dennis Trager, a doctoral candidate in Environmental Studies, who is sponsoring the program along with Mark Cherniack, a doctoral candidate in Future Studies.

Innovative programs such as this usually involve a lot of time and money which Hampshire is able to deal with, whereas for UMass this is a relatively rare thing. Trager said this is why it's so exciting.

Approved for credit by Outreach, the School of Education, and Hampshire College, Earth School will begin with a three week camping trip to the Southeastern U.S. Time will be spent at the South Carolina Shore, the Okefenokee swamp, the Florida everglades and the Florida Keys while environmental awareness is studied.

The second part of the program will zero in on the study of eco-systems while the group lives on a 200-acre farm in Pittsfield. When this phase is completed the group will apply what they've learned to study social issues concerning the environment and how they are handled through municipal and ecological agencies.

While living in Pittsfield there will be workshops approximately twice a week conducted by visiting professors from the Five Colleges. Approaches used will not only be scientific but also artistic, philosophical, and personal.

Specific approaches and areas of study will depend on the makeup of the group. Those accepted for the program will make a sort of retreat in late November to determine these specifics and form some group identity.

Cost of the program will be $1400 but some financial aid is available. At present Trager is trying to make arrangements for work study to be applied.

OSWALD TIPPO

Botony colloquium will explore processes of synthesis in autumn foliage

By KATHY SHEEHAN
Staff Reporter

The Autumnal colors of the seasonal foliage are signs of death and decadence, according to UMass Botany professor, Dr. Oswald Tippo.

"The process of disintegration is the thing that produces all these fine colors," Tippo said.

A Botany Colloquium being given today at 4:30 in Room 203 Morrill will study this phenomenon. Dr. Kenneth V. Thimann from the University of California, Santa Cruz, will be lecturing on how leaves grow and age.

At the colloquium, students will learn that the appearance of yellows, reds, golds, and browns in the leaves of the trees is caused by the prominence of these color pigments instead of the green pigment, chlorophyll.

Because the presence of chlorophyll is a necessary step in food production of trees during the summer, its green pigment is prominent in the leaves during that time.

However, throughout the summer growing season, the chlorophyll is constantly disintegrating at the same time. Raw materials must be conducted up to the leaves from the ground through tubes in the leaf stocks to replenish the chlorophyll.

In the Fall, the green pigment becomes scarce in the leaves because the conducting cells in the leaf stocks become blocked, preventing raw materials for chlorophyll production from entering the leaves. Why the conducting cells become blocked every Fall is a mystery to botanists today.

With the chlorophyll absent, the green color disappears, and other pigments, previously masked by the green dominance, begin to show up. These pigments include carotenoid (yellow), anthocyanin (red), and tanin (brown).

The bright sunny days and the cool nights that are characteristic of Autumn increase the appearance of the normally invisible red, yellow, and brown pigments, and give us the best display of Fall foliage.

The cold nights slow the transportation of sugar from the leaves. The remaining sugar in the leaves helps produce anthocyanin, the dominant Autumnal color.

Thought influences experience, claims Christian Scientist Linnig

By DAVID SAND
Staff Correspondent

"What we see and experience is the result of the content of our thinking," Roy Linnig recently told an audience in the Colonial Lounge in a talk entitled "Commitment: A Christian Science Approach."

Linnig, a full time practitioner of Christian Science since 1953, said efforts to help others and alleviate suffering will be more effective as thinking is shifted from "material modes of thoughts" to an understanding of spiritual reality.

"You must be perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect," he declared, quoting Jesus from the Moffit translation of the Bible.

He explained that Jesus saw spiritual perfection as a present reality and that as we also begin to understand this, our bodies and environment, or whatever needs healing, will respond to our change in thought.

Citing several examples, Linnig stressed prayer or "the conscious effort to understand spiritual reality" results in tangible and effective solutions to problems. He spoke of an instance in which, through his own prayer, he was healed of a growth on his hand.

He urged the audience to "buy, borrow, or steal (not really)" a copy of the Christian Science textbook, Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy which, as he put it, "will answer questions you haven't even thought of yet."

The lecture was sponsored by the Christian Science Organization on campus which holds weekly meetings every Tuesday evening in the Campus Center.

Warns against "legislative dictatorship"

Ford campaigns for Republican candidates

LINCOLN, Neb. [UPI] — President Ford, swinging through middle America on a dawn-to-midnight campaign, said yesterday that Republicans must score well in the Nov. 5 elections to prevent "a legislative dictatorship" in Washington.

The President campaigned at the same time, for his new economic program, particularly his controversial income tax surcharge proposal, and sought to allay unhappiness of grain procedures and livestock growers that could hurt GOP candidates next month.

Ford received generally friendly receptions from a crowd of 8,000 persons at Sioux Falls, S.D., and an estimated 5,000 persons at an airport rally in Lincoln.

But he ran into clamorous opposition in Lincoln from a band of about 100 youthful demonstrators, including members of the American Indian Movement who all but drowned out his speech by pounding tom-toms and chanting "Vietnam, Wounded Knee; Nixon needs no amnesty."

The protesters carried signs demanding that the government honor past treaties with the Indians, and surged within about 50 yards of Ford as he finished speaking. Police kept them from getting nearer.

It was the President's most intensive day of political, traveling since he took office, beginning with a $1,000-per-person "coffee" reception in Kansas City, Mo., and ending with a midnight return to the White House after a speech at a $100 per couple fund raising dinner in Indianapolis.

Repeatedly Ford sounded the theme that inflation demands swift counter-measures such as those he has proposed.

"I need assistance to get these programs through the Congress," he said. "Every day that we wait is just one more day that we have allowed inflation to creep ahead."

He acknowledged that the political polls are "a little discouraging" and cautioned that Democrats were threatening to pick up enough strength to achieve a "veto-proof Congress."

"In effect, you will have a legislative dictatorship" unless Republicans reverse that trend, he said.

Ford testifies today before House panel

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford goes before a House subcommittee today to further explain his pardon of Richard M. Nixon and answer questions about the agreement giving the former president custody of his White House tapes and documents.

Ford's historic appearance before the judiciary subcommittee on criminal justice is to begin at 10 a.m. EDT and will be nationally televised.

Ford may answer all or most of the 14 questions posed in two resolutions of inquiry, which prompted the hearing, but several subcommittee members were prepared to go beyond the scope of the resolutions.

Rep. Elizabeth Holtzman, D-N.Y., who may emerge as the toughest questioner on the panel, said she is intent on asking about the tapes agreement, but declined to give specifics.

Before he resigned Aug. 9, Nixon signed an agreement with the General Services Administration giving him possession of the controversial tapes and documents which led to his fall from office, along with the right to destroy them within 10 years.

Holtzman said she wanted to know whether the tape agreement played any part in Ford's decision to pardon Nixon from any allegations of wrongdoing while he was president.

Nixon's testimony called indispensible

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Lawyers for Watergate coverup defendant John D. Ehrlichman argued yesterday that the testimony of Richard M. Nixon "is absolutely indispensable" to proving the former presidential aide's innocence.

The lawyers, who charged Tuesday that Nixon repeatedly lied about Watergate to save himself, asked U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica either to compel the ailing former president to testify or at least require that he be questioned under oath at his home in San Clemente, Calif.

In a legal brief filed in advance of a hearing on the issue Thursday, the attorneys said: "Defendant Ehrlichman submits that... Mr. Nixon's testimony is absolutely indispensible in this case." They said "Nixon will testify" that Ehrlichman had no knowledge of various aspects of the Watergate cover-up - including alleged efforts to use the CIA to block an FBI investigation of the Watergate bugging and discussion of offering executive clemency to the burglars.

Both the prosecution and defense have subpoenaed Nixon as a witness in the cover-up trial of Ehrlichman and four other former presidential aides. Nixon's lawyers have moved that the subpoenas be quashed on grounds he is too ill from phlebitis to travel.

Nixon was released recently from the hospital, and his doctors said he would be confined to his home for one to three months.

National Guard watches over quiet Boston

Compiled from wires

BOSTON — The guardsmen were marching inside the armory yesterday morning, their three-foot-long riot batons in their hands, the plastic visors of their helmets winking in the half light.

Rain beat down on the armory roof, and on the street in front of Hyde Park High across the city, where violence the day before had brought the National Guard into Boston.

Now everything but the rain was quiet at the school, as 250 policemen stood in their blue slickers to watch 350 students arrive for classes.

A heavy, driving rain, the first on a school day since the court-ordered plan began more than fivc weeks ago, kept the demonstrators and spectators off the streets.

So the 150 guardsmen marched in the cavernous hall of the Commonwealth Armory.

Another 300 were in Quincy, menacing in their riot gear, practicing the crowd control tactics they might have to use.

It was the first time the National Guard had been called into the city to quell a civil disturbance since the Boston police strike of 1919.

One of the guards was Mathew O'Malley of Beverly, who answers burglar alarms for a living.

Yesterday morning he was in his National Guard uniform, with the flak jacket, handcuffs, helmet and riot stick that had been issued, ready to answer a call from the governor.

O'Malley grew up in South Boston, seat of the strongest resistance to forced integration, and he sees things the way the people there see them.

"It's tense," he said. "You take people's rights away from them and they're going to be mad. People I know have no qualms about fighting against the law.

"But the law is unfortunately the law, and I'll enforce it if I have to. I wouldn't like going into a crowd in South Boston, but I'm not going to let them hurt me either. And I'm not going to let them hurt a child."

His friend Michael Carter comes from the Dorchester section of Boston and is black. He left his job training attack dogs when the muster call came Tuesday night.

Carter doesn't like the idea of wading into a crowd of blacks with his riot stick, but he says, "If I have to do it, I'll do my job."

He feels the same way about white South Boston and Hyde Park.

"It makes no difference," he said. "Color makes no difference to us. There's no black or white in here — we're all green here."

Ford veto killed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Congress overrode a veto by President Ford for the first time yesterday and passed into law a controversial $7 billion railroad retirement bill.

The Senate voted 72 to 1 - 24 more than the necessary two-thirds majority needed to kill any presidential veto. The single vote to uphold Ford's veto was cast by Sen. William L. Scott, R-Va.

The law, also okayed in a crushing 360 to 12 House override Tuesday, will restructure the Railroad Retirement System and pump $285 million into it annually for the next 25 years.

U.S. prisoners freed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Four Americans have been released from Cuban jails and apparently will return to the United States today, Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., said yesterday.

Javits, who recently visited Cuba and talked with Communist Premier Fidel Castro, said the four would fly to the island of Barbados late yesterday and then to Miami today. He said earlier the Cuban government had been holding them on drug-related charges.

A spokesman in Javits' office also said the four might face charges when they returned to the United States, but there was no immediate indication what those charges might be.

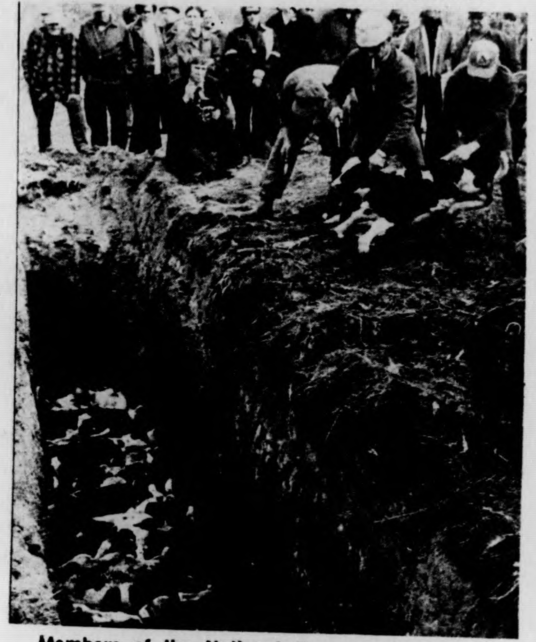
Ford raps slaughter

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. [UPI] — President Ford said yesterday he was disturbed by the "shocking and wasteful" protest slaughtering of calves by farmers in Wisconsin at a time when the nation is trying to increase its food supply.

In a statement handed to newsmen traveling with the President on a Midwest campaign tour, Ford said he recognized "the frustration that prompted the farmers to stage such a shocking and wasteful demonstration."

"But their action contributes nothing toward a solution to their problem or to the problem of inflation which we all face," he said.

Ford said he has requested a full report on the cost-price squeeze facing livestock producers and feeders and will hold a White House meeting within two weeks to seek a solution.



Members of the National Farmers Organization begin shooting claves with revolvers and dumping their carcasses into a huge trench to protest low prices. The farmers claim that they could not donate the carcasses because the slaughter-houses could not handle them.

Dean says defendants had coverup roles

—At a meeting with Ehrlichman June 21, Ehrlichman suggested that Dean "shred" some bogus State Department cables about the Vietnam war and a psychiatric profile of Pentagon Papers defendant Daniel Ellsberg, and "deep-six" electronic equipment, all of which had been found in the White House safe of E. Howard Hunt Jr., also convicted in the original trial.

"What do you mean, 'deep-six'?" Dean said, he asked.

"'Well, John, you drive across the Potomac on the way home. Just throw those in the river,'" Dean said Ehrlichman replied.

"Well, John, you drive across the river, too, so I'll bring it over to you," Dean said he replied.

Lovejoy will speak on nukes

Sam Lovejoy of the Alternative Energy Coalition (AEC) will speak on the dangers of nuclear power plants today at 12:15 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, under the sponsorship of the United Christian Foundation.

Lovejoy, who last spring toppled the pre-nuke weather tower of Northeast Utilities in Montague, was recently acquitted on a technicality in Franklin County District Court.

Lovejoy has attracted national attention as one of the first practitioners of civil disobedience in the area of environmental concerns. The half-hour talk, to which all interested persons are welcome, will be followed by a period of dialogue and discussion.

The United Christian Foundation (UCF), an ecumenical campus ministry located in Hampshire House, conducts regular Thursday noon forums on issues of concern to the campus community.

The shoe that works with your body.

This shoe is different from any shoe you've ever worn. It's the EARTH* negative heel shoe. The shoe designed to work in harmony with your entire body.

The heel of the Earth* shoe is actually lower than the toe. This allows you to walk naturally. Like when you walk barefoot in sand or soft earth and your heel sinks down lower than your toes.

The entire sole of the Earth shoe is molded in a very special way. This allows you to walk in a gentle rolling motion. And to walk easily and comfortably on the hard jarring cement of our cities.

But remember, just because a shoe looks like ours doesn't mean it works like ours. So to be sure you're getting the Earth brand shoe, look on the sole for our Earth trademark and U.S. Patent #3305947.

Your body will thank you.

Shoes, sandals, sabots and boots for men and women. From $23.50 to $42.50.

Selling education

By DUDLEY C. PHILLIPS IV

The University of Massachusetts runs a continuous sale of "educated people" to the American Society tailored by the legislature of Massachusetts, trustees, administrators, and multiple other interests. These interests, including their traditions, ordered this year's graduating class about five years ago, statistically. The university takes the credit and makes pretense to have serviced these graduating students and new servants of the society. There is even some vague notion that these students have received an education which is an extention of their interests.

There is a fundamental oversight in this way of viewing. The problem is that the students, taxpayers, and students who are taxpayers, have been paying the bill for student education. The university is now selling that education to the society. The concept is advertised as "the value of education", but it stands on the shoulders of student performance, product quality.

The university further pretends that this type of educational service is of two types: services to the society, by way of state prescription, and service to students. The educational policies, program, parking for commuters, planning, etc; are projects in which student wishes are not included. There are a campus-wide number of other examples.

The student, upon graduating, becomes the product he just got through paying for. The university sells a diploma to you so that it can sell you (and a concept of its service) to the society.

The administration loves to involve students in endless academic discussions on programs that they have already chosen for students. The powers of the university are ever willing to engage in non-action rapps right to the point of treating students as adults, self-governing adults.

To return to the position in the university's prospectus for student interest, is to be asking to be "put off". The tri-partisan outline for the governing of the university includes students able to effect policy: to determine their own education.

The university, guided by the administration and trustee purposes, takes our money, our buildings and programs, our work and sells it to the society as "education"; better yet, "training". The university becomes a training camp on this level. The university promotes the status quo of a type of society by training workers to support it.

If you have ever been inside a major corporation or worked in a factory, you may have been aware of a chain of command or an administrative hierarchy. The workers are paid for physical work. The names and positions differ slightly, but the descending paternal authority filtering down to the worker is typical.

The president of a university, acting under the directives of the state legislature and the trustees, institutes policies and delegates the actualizing to three vice-presidents, called chancellors in education. The "employees" in this sense, are the students in a university.

The first thing that becomes apparent is that students are not paid for their services in the way employees are paid. Students are "paid off" with a degree or credits and employees in factories and production companies are "paid off" weekly and at sixty-five years old.

The second big feature is that students are being "paid off" with a diploma (called "education"). He has earned the right to be marketed.

To the student, it may appear that he has choices. He has the alternatives he is given by the prescription for education. A student is not building his own future. His limits are set for him.

Once upon a time, this university wrote its purposes and attempted to see itself as a critic of society, not a tool in a process and submissive servant.

With the knowledge that it is provided that the students are one third the governing force of the university (on paper) to return the university to a tri-partisan system will take a redefinition which puts students in a position to determine their own education.

Although the effort will require "an academic study", (a further delay), the real problem is the bureaucratic comfort which has been generated by the existing administration and vested interests in the already existing systems. The added dimensions of professional pride and academic snobbery will show themselves for what they are.

The university counts on students not being their own persons; less than adults. The university intimidates students with potential denial of a degree and plies them with procedure. Both of these practices are paternalistic and represent no student interests.

If it seems that I speak of hypothetical abstractions of some uncommon condition, pick up a university handbook or housing and parking rules or curriculum mandates and you will be looking at your "employment contract" and "guarantee of service". If you are a student, you are paying for [illegible]

There are contradictions we experience as students that we did not create and do not have control enough to correct. We are students and very much a part of a progressive future. It can start here.

Letters to the editor

Deutsch full of sauerkraut

To the Editor:

During his lecture on nutrition last Wednesday night, Mr. Deutsch alerted his audience to the dangers of the Dr. Atkins high protein, quick weight loss diet. He also suggested that nutrition educators should stress the following to the general American public: 1. A lower protein intake which will still meet the needs of the body. 2. A higher intake of carbohydrates. 3. A decreased intake of fats and sucrose. I found this all quite enlightening.

I believe, however, that Mr. Deutsch did an injustice to his audience by referring to a government survey which purports to reveal myths concerning nutrition held by the American public. One of these myths, which this "scientific" survey exposes, is the belief that agricultural pesticides may endanger the public health. Mr. Deutsch, and those who composed this survey, imply that this is merely a false belief foolishly held by a majority of Americans. When Mr. Deutsch addressed himself to the question of pesticides, he not only revealed an embarrassing ignorance of the ecological implications of the problem, but also such an amazing indifference to the problem, that one might question his intellectual objectivity.

Mr. Deutsch was talking politics as much as nutrition in quoting this government survey. He was acting as a spokesman for the food industry, and like any industry its primary concern is profit. A questioner pointed out to Mr. Deutsch that the technology of the food industry is quite sophisticated, but it makes people feel that they have no control over their own lives and for this reason they reject the technology. Mr. Deutsch agreed and stated that this was a public relations problem for the food industry. Rather than using public relations as a panacea to this problem, I would suggest that people ownership of the food industry, i.e., socialism, would be a more rationale solution.

Finally, when someone lights up a cigarette after giving a talk on nutrition, I find myself becoming skeptical about their personal commitment to health.

Coalition slate speaks out

To the Editor:

The coalition slate for the Commuter Assembly has recently learned that several individuals have been riding buses and announcing that, "a vote against the incumbents is a vote against bus service". This is a lie! Coalition candidates have been meeting with transit service officials determining the cost for weekend outreach bus service. This is a primary plank in our election platform.

We have several questions to ask to incumbent assembly persons:

Why hasn't bus service for weekends been previously considered?

Why are the commuters expending large amounts of money refurbishing the Commuter Lounge, when the Campus Center Board's Space Committee may not even allocate that space next year to the Commuter Assembly? How many commuters know of, and use the Commuter Lounge?

Why do the Commuter Assembly officers pay themselves an outrageous $4000 a year in salaries?

Why has the Student Organizing Project, the Student Center for Educational Research, and the Veterans' Coalition taken the initiative in the field of tenant grievances? Why doesn't the Commuter Assembly have a Tenants Redress Committee?

We wish to have the Commuter Assembly work in harmony with other student organizations for the benefit of the commuter population, rather than becoming a bureaucratic entity of paid paper pushers.

Athletic fee: a lot for nothing

To the Editor:

I would like to add my comments to Mort Willis' letter [Oct. 15] concerning payment of an athletic fee. Today I asked at the Bursar's office what the $30 yearly fee covers. I was told that it covers attendance to athletic events. The money goes directly to the athletic department. My husband and I are both UMass students and do not plan to attend athletic events with any regularity. If there were an event that interested us, we would be happy to pay for that individual event at that time.

The athletic fee represents $60 which we pay yearly in return for nothing. In addition, as a transfer, I am required to pay a $20 physical education fee despite the fact that physical education credits are no longer required. When I asked the result of refusing to pay these fees, I was told that I would not be registered. "They've got you coming and going", the lady at the Bursar's office added.

If a majority of the 23,000 students at UMass refused to pay this $30 fee, for which we receive no benefits other than admission to athletic events, surely some action would be taken. This fee should be optional. The athletic department is profiting over $69,000 per year as a result of this fee. Does anyone else care enough to start a movement to make this fee optional?

Walkathon for the retarded

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter in hopes of contacting students, faculty, or others who are concerned about the needs of retarded individuals in state institutions, and who would be willing to provide assistance with a walkathon occurring on Oct. 20, on their behalf.

The Shriver Center Medical Program needs help raising funds to continue its current operation. This program provides additional specialized medical services to the 6,000 residents of the five state schools in Mass.: Belchertown, Monson, Wrentham, Dever, and Fernald, by transporting residents from their own schools to Shriver five days weekly for care in Ear, Nose, and Throat; Eye; and Dental clinics. So far, the program has provided over 4,000 clinic visits, and has performed over 200 operations.

Shriver's problem is that it doesn't have enough vehicles to provide transportation for these individuals to and from the Center. Their 1967 school bus has gone 150,000 miles, and their 1968 ambulance is also running on borrowed time. The Shriver Center is a non-profit corporation dedicated to research, training and service in mental retardation. 95 per cent of the Center's funds come from government grants. The Center has no endowment, and is operating at a deficit.

The program is now working, and making progress in improving medical care to the retarded, which can be appreciated when the vast changes in health and behavior resultant from such things as cataract removal, or cosmetic surgery to improve appearance, or just a general sense of being cared about are observed in these individuals.

This program needs your help to continue these services; your assistance as a walker or as a sponsor will be deeply appreciated by 6,000 people who need your help.

The walkathon will be on Oct. 20, starting in Waltham at 8:30 a.m., going through seven surrounding communities, and then back to Shriver. Walkers will be asked to obtain their own sponsors, and collect from them after the walk. The 25 miles is not mandatory; any distance walked will be appreciated. Transportation to the area is currently being arranged. If you have a vehicle, it would be helpful.

If you are at all interested in participating as a walker, sponsor, or general volunteer, or if you would like further information, please contact me: 323-4574.

FASST on campus

To the Editor:

The Vice-President of FASST [Federation of Americans Supporting Science and Technology] will be on Campus Sunday, October 20, from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. to answer any and all questions about FASST - its programs and what you can do to participate in them. After his talk, we will try to organize a U. Ma. chapter. We need only 4 other people to be a recognized student chapter and qualify to get speakers from all professions here at no cost, or have films, or many other activities. Please call 546-8983 if interested, and ask for John Moroney. Call me on Saturday or Sunday for room, or check the Campus Center bulletin board.

Criminality in Southie

Boston has become a battleground for human rights. Busing is no longer the issue there, if indeed it ever was. A few weeks ago the time at long last arrived, for Boston to demonstrate where it stood on a question that should have been answered several years ago. But back when America's attention was diverted to the South, our Northern communities escaped the responsibilities of putting the law into action. The South is the better for it, and the North, specifically and tragically Boston, is the worst. For now we are haunted by the specter of Selma and Birmingham. Day by day, this nightmare is turning into reality.

There are those who would have us believe that South Boston, or Hyde Park, or Roxbury, are in some way different from the rest of the nation. That there exists in these communities, particularly "Southie", a sense of tradition or neighborhood cohesion unknown anywhere else. And it is because of this, they say, that the violence and hatred exists. These same people are quick to point out that racism is not a legitimate issue, while cries of "nigger go home" are heard in the background. If anyone doubts that racism is at the heart of the violence in Boston, then let him imagine the same situation occurring if the busing were being conducted between two white neighborhoods.

What the seige is all about, is whether or not the traditions and prejudices of some Bostonians and their sympathizers are going to be allowed to stand in the way of a child's right to attend a decent public school. To be sure, it is a tough bullet to bite for people who have been attending the same neighborhood school for years. And it's not easy to say goodbye to school friends, get used to a strange environment, or welcome a new group to your school. But if there was ever a case to be made for the integration of public schools, it can be seen in the narrow minded approach to life that the students of South Boston and elsewhere are demonstrating. That very same "tradition" of closed society living is showing its result in the violent attitudes of adults and children alike.

And so we hear how tough it is for the people of Southie, and how the government is pushing them around. Well it is also tough to be riding in a damn yellow school bus that's being pelted with rocks. And it's not so easy to be called names as you walk up the steps of your new school. And it must be frightening to realize that it takes a couple hundred police to get you in and out of Southie safely. And it couldn't have been much of a joke for that Black man, Jean Louis Yvon, who drove through Southie at the wrong time last week, and nearly left his head on somebody's doorstep. And that good old tradition didn't protect that white girl from being raped the other night, either. So much for the good old times, and being picked on by government, and police brutality. In my opinion it was past time the cops tore up a bar in Southie, anyway.

It's frightening when you think about it. The arguments are the same as they were years ago. And it's all well and good, as it was back then, to say that not everyone is causing the trouble. And to say that sure, racism exists, but the majority doesn't feel that way. Or that the rock throwing, slogan hurling mobs contain the minority of residents. Yes, you can say those things about good old Southie, and the rest, but it doesn't mean a thing. It doesn't make anybody sleep better at night, either. The plain fact is that the situation could erupt into a catastrophe of even larger proportions any day now. The National Guard is on alert, and requests are ready to be enacted upon for Federal assistance. If Marshals or troops are needed, then so be it. There comes a time when people have to be shown that this is a nation of laws, and their time honored prejudices be damned.

Anyone who can mutter a good word for what is happening in Boston today has more than just his priorities mixed up. It's a criminal situation, that demands action. It also demands a sense of rage among those who consider themselves to be above such expressions of hatred and violence. Boston has no right to consider itself any better than any other city in this country. After the events of the past few weeks, Boston will have to come a long way to prove itself even the equal of any other city. It's people have done the city a gross of injustice.

I think the Black minister, on the steps of his Roxbury church, put it straight, when he said: "I spent 34 months in a prisoner of war camp during World War II, so that those people in South Boston could sleep in their beds at night. And no one is going to stop me from sending my daughter to school over there." Right on.

Educating minorities

Any Human being, needs an environment in which their personal and cultural values are accepted. Also if that environment has freedom, justice and equality, those individuals can make the best of themselves, as well as of the society in which they live.

Everybody in the country knows what is going on in Boston. And while President Ford thinks that now is not the time for school integration, Mayor White thinks that this was the correct and necessary time to implement integrated education.

One of the ethnic groups that have not participated too much in the integration school process has been the Spanish Speaking. Many people will think that they are not interested in the issue. But the situation is other. The 'liberal' Massachusetts have a high drop out rate among the Spanish Speaking population, especially the ones living in Boston.

Some people believe that the high drop out rate of Spanish speaking people is due to lack of interest in education. This is not true. The great majority of those drop outs are coming from, or they belong to a culture in which education is one of the most important aspects of life. Yes, many of those students that drop out of school, or simply don't enter into it, come from Puerto Rico, which is one of the few countries in the world that has spent more than a third of its national budget in public education.

Puerto Ricans living in Boston know about the values of education. It is part of their culture.

That high incidence of drop outs are expressed in the small amount of students from the Commonwealth able or prepare to receive a college education.

A Puerto Rican student from Boston University said that one of the biggest problems of the Spanish speaking when moving to the Commonwealth is the language. Many students because they don't know enough English are placed in lower educational levels, and instead of being encouraged to develop their education, they are frustrated, especially in students with better original academic background and higher intelligence.

Another of the problems is the attitude of the American schools toward other cultures and ways of life. Especially among the Puerto Ricans, because they have a greater sense of pragmaticism they feel proud of their Latin heritage.

The City of Boston in particular, and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in general, should implement a real and effective law to provide equal opportunity for education to the Spanish Speaking people. They should allocate more funds to the creation of programs, expansion of programs dealing with the education, job opportunities, etc., for a population estimated between 125 and 190 thousand.

The School system should spend more money in research to determine why the Spanish Speaking drop out of school, and what solutions should be made to correct that problem. Also, they should create bases for having more students in elementary and secondary education, in order to have more students prepare to enter in higher education levels. But, mostly, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts should maintain and encourage the cultural heritage of the people that come to this land as the cultural bridge of two continents. Obviously, all of the citizens will receive benefits if they take an affirmative step in the education of the Spanish Speaking population.

Singing in the drain

By DIANE UNGER

For those of you who still think that creativity in music started its climb with the birth of Bach, and plummeted with the abdication of the Beatles, you obviously haven't been living (and listening) here at UMass. Each interest group has always been well-represented in their musical endeavors, and lack of proper facilities has never strangled their enthusiastic voices.

Each year the Infirmary offers their throaty version of the alma mater "Streppe & Gout". This vibrant piece calls for instrumentation of two stuffed noses, one sore throat, and vasoline continuous. Auditions are held weekly - but make your appointment now, as spaces are filled on a first cough, first served basis.

Even the Department of Public Health has mustered up enough creativity to form their own chorale. Don't miss them at Christmas time when their entire crew of invalids tours the campus, carolling selections from the all-time campus hit, "Sting Low, Sweet Syphillis."

But still, the most remarkable development in the field of creative music must be accredited to the efforts of another ailing campus minority: the non-music major. Through their zealous persistence, ultimate use has been made of otherwise dormant dormitory facilities. To date, bathrooms, laundry rooms, and closets have been found hoarding these misplaced, but determined musicians. Of these, the closets have proven to be the least offensive of the practicing units (to those listening), although a number of wind players (may they rest in peace) had hinted of poor ventilation.

Those musicians found in those acoustical echo chambers (commonly called bathrooms) have found the flush-per-minute increasing at a remarkable rate as dorm residents hurriedly scurry back to the silence and security of their rooms. In various dorm polls it has been found that less time is being wasted in the john, and in the laundry room as well, where the musician must pit his tone against the frequencies of wash, rinse and spin. God help the lingerer who suddenly finds himself in suspended animation from the animated suspension of chords in a Kreutzer etude, or Accolay exercise. The possibility of his return to retrieve his wash in the same day is extremely low. The use of showers, too, has substantially slowed down and although the Amherst water supply is being conserved, Amherst air pollution is increasing.

But think of the suffering musicians. If you can tolerate twenty-four hour MUZAK in the dining commons; if you can tolerate roommates who (if they can play nothing else) know how to play the stereo at seven in the morning; and if you can still concentrate on the mating life of gymnosperms while brass trios emanate from in front of the Old Chapel, then WHY won't you let our muted musicians out of the closet!? And they wonder why we want the Fine Arts Center open already...

Kampus Kapers' Kris Jackson to give show

Famed, starving UMieland cartoonist Kris Jackson is giving a one-person show of an unusual sort Thursday in the Student Union gallery. The work will consist of drawings not done yet. He will draw and paint on the walls all day long. It should be interesting to watch the artist as he is actually producing the work, but probably won't be.

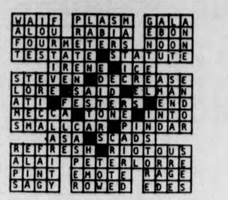
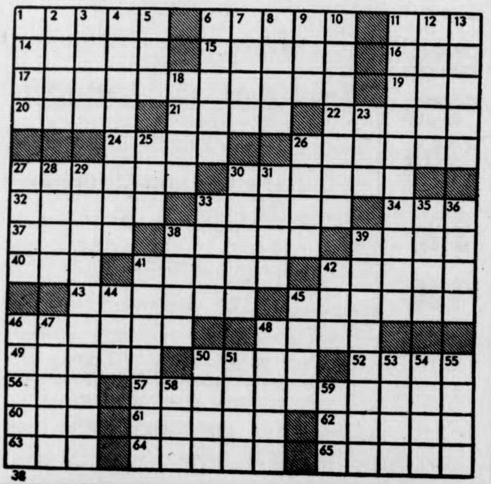
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved:





ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, October 17 — Born today, you are highly articulate and have no difficulty at all in expressing yourself via the spoken or the written word. You would make an excellent teacher, public speaker, politician, statesman, lecturer, on the one hand — and just as excellent a writer, whether academic or purely literary, on the other. Although women born on this date probably will be less inclined to exercise their talents than men, they can, if they choose, become extensively well-known through their own powers of expression.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Problems concerning personal relationships should become perfectly clear to you today. Don't attempt to solve all aspects at once.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Find solutions to another's problems by taking a leaf from a children's book. Listen carefully to what the young have to say about the situation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Today and every day for the next few weeks, be careful about the degree of your responses. Don't react with too little too late.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Be sure to leave plenty of time in your daily schedule for those matters others might neglect. Children lend a special air to the day's events.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Your usual activities may have to be suspended in favor of activities that better suit the current situation on the home front.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The wise Pisces will refuse to dip into financial savings at this particular time. You may need something extra in the way of money later on.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Though you may feel yourself unready to do so, you may be called upon today to make a final decision regarding your own and another's future.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Professional ventures call for thought if you are to make a success of the them. Time is on your side, as are your influential contacts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Protect your health throughout a day that may at times appear calculated to endanger your physical well-being. Think things through.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take any journey of some distance in short stages. Don't attempt to accomplish more than the available hours tell you you reasonably can.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Approach any problems from a rational rather than an emotional point of view. Neither tears nor laughter will take you far toward feasible solutions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Depend upon your own knowledge of the present situation and you will discover a way out in short order. Another's answer may be wrong.

Torrance picked as YanCon all-star

AMHERST — UMass fullback Jim Torrance, Rhode Island tri-captain Ray Braszo and Maine halfback Jim Hood have been selected as the Yankee Conference offensive, defensive and rookie players of the week following fine performances on the gridiron last Saturday.

Torrance, a 6'2 junior from Rye, N.Y., gained sixty-three yards rushing in thirteen attempts in a reserve role for the Minutemen and his twenty-seven yard run on the second play of the fourth quarter proved to be the game's winning touchdown.

Braszo, a 5'11 - 186 lb. senior defensive back from Homestead, Pa., was a key man in the Ram secondary which helped throttle the Vermont passing attack in a 14-0 Ram win and he had a key interception in addition to being in on six tackles.

Hood, a 5'11 - 185 freshman from Lewiston, Maine started the season as a defensive back but was pressed into service on offense on Saturday and responded with 117 yards in 17 carries and his running set up one touchdown and a field goal in the Black Bear's 23-9 win over New Hampshire.

Other nominations for the weekend included: Offense-Jim Dumont (Maine-HB) and Rich Remondino (URI-HB); Defense-Gary Calvino (UConn-DE), Scott Shulman (Maine-MG), Dennis Kiernan (UMass-LB), Mark Etro (New Hampshire-DB); Rookies-Ron Harris (UMass-DB) and Tony Kurnick (Vermont-MG).

Rugby ramblers wreck Tech

Last Saturday's match between the UMass Rugby Club and the Charles River Rugby Club helped confirm UMass as one of the formidable teams in New England. Having beaten M.I.T., the N.E. Champs the week before, the home club's intention was to show that the M.I.T. match was no fluke and to extend their win streak to 3, and they did, 10-0. The game was characterized by a good deal of rough, loose play, a style which suits the UMass.

This Saturday afternoon, UMass plays host to Williams College on the Boyden fields.

How Grantland Rice saw it

By RICH SEVIERI
Sports Staff

Out-lined against a gold-green October twilight in Oakland, the four horsemen rode again. "In dramatic lore they are known as famine, pestilence, destruction and death. These are only aliases." Their real names are: the hungry fans watching the game in the middle of their supper hour, Chuck on his mascot; and Reggie, Rollie, Blue Moon and Bill.

The Fall Classic, chapter three, the first of three nocturnal jousts at Oakland's own orange orchard was set to unfold. A ding-dong dandy of a donnybrook was destined to develop.

Catfish, that Carolina country boy with control, was towing the slab for the A's. The southpaw slants of "715" Downing for the kids from the city of the angels.

The Catfish gave the L.A. second sacker's whiskers a shave with the first pitch of the tussle. Dave Lopes dusted off his flannels and then banged a bingle to center. The lithe Lopes then copped the Keystone cushion and the hotcorner sack with the speed of light and his legs pounding like Granatelli-tuned pistons. He died there, 90 feet from the platter. The closest the Dodgers would get to ringing the bell till the eighth stanza.

commentary

The Catfish was no fireball flinger but a fancier of finesse as he whitewashed the Dodgers with goose eggs over the first seven frames.

The A's quickly solved the southpaw slants of "715", and gave him a thrashing in the third. North hit a one-base clout. Campy the Complainer crashed a shot to the Penguin. North was moving on the offering and faster than a speeding bullet he winged his way to third. Fat Sal got a free pass. Reggie, the Sardonic Slugman, hit his best Baltimore chop with the power of a locomotive, North breaking the ice. Rudi continued the rude treatment of "715" with a rope up the seam cashing in Fat Sal. "The sacks were saturated but no timely bingle was delivered to lower the pressure on the populated pads." "715" speared Fosse's lance out of the air to end the threat.

In the fateful fifth frame Green opened with a bingle. Catfish made the supreme sacrifice; he gave up his licks and moved Green to the keystone cushion. God rewarded the Catfish with the winning run when Campy conked the cowhide to center. The Toy Cannon, reduced to slingshot power by a sore wing uncorked an errant peg and Green put a yellow one on the board for the A's.

Fireman Charlie Hough doused the flaming hickory of the A's with an assortment of maddening moths. Backstopper Ferguson had a tough time even with the big butterfly net, but no damage was done. Iron Mike, the Dodger human pitching machine, was turned on to mop up.

Lithe Lopes laced a liner up the alley with an extra base label hanging from the stitches to open the eventful eighth. North, the fleet flyhawk with glue in his glove and wings on his feet, got on his horse and rode it down. The Dodgers had their hitting clothes on now, and Buckner bashed a Ruthian rap over the stockade in right, the first Dodger to dent the dish. Catfish headed for the bathouse. Fingers, a fair flinger with a ferocious fastball, followed.

Crawford crashed a circuit clout downtown to open the ninth and cut the count to 3-2. It was seat squirming time for the A's admirers. The Dodgers managed to get one more duck on the pond, but the sands of time slowly ticked away, out by out.

Fingers stands in the middle of the "four white beacons in the sea of green" and hitches up his pants and twirls his handlebar. He delivers, a twin killing follows. The sound of Taps echoes across the Bay. The bedazzled Dodgers are dead.

Holt hit leads A's, 5-2

OAKLAND [UPI] — Another of Oakland's late season acquisitions paid off Wednesday night when Jim Holt lined a two-run pinch single to spark a four-run sixth inning that gave the A's a 5-2 victory over Los Angeles and moved them within a game of their third straight World Championship.

Holt, obtained by the A's from Minnesota on Aug. 19, drilled a 2-2 pitch from loser Andy Messersmith to score Sal Bando and Reggie Jackson and snap a 2-2 tie.

The A's victory marked the first time in this series that a game was decided by more than one run, and it gave them a 3-1 lead in games over their intra-state opponent.

Oakland, which would join the New York Yankees' power teams of the late '30's and early '50's as the only winners of three straight series, can clinch the title here Thursday night in the fifth game.

The single by Holt was his second straight pinch hit in the World Series after he had gone hitless in 26 successive pinch hit appearances, but his sudden success shouldn't come as any surprise to students of the A's history.

Two years ago, Oakland acquired Matty Alou, Don Mincher and Ted Kubiak for the stretch run and all played key roles in the A's drive to their first world title.

Mincher, in fact, had a pinch single that turned the fourth game around just when it looked like Cincinnati would tie the series.

And last year, Mike Nadrews, Vic Davalillo and Jesus Alou came along late to help.

This year, the only player the A's went out of their organization to obtain for the stretch drive was Holt, and Wednesday night he finally produced like they had been hoping he would.

Los Angeles held a 2-1 lead on Bill Russell's two-run triple in the fourth when Messersmith walked Bill North on a full count to start the sixth.

North moved to second when Messersmith threw a pickoff attempt away for an error, and scored the tying run when Bando snapped an 0-for-15 spell with a bloop hit to right.

Manager Walt Alston went to the mound to talk to his 20-game winning righthander, but decided to leave him in — and that's a move Alston may regret all winter.

Messersmith walked Reggie Jackson on four pitches and Joe Rudi sacrificed the runners ahead. After Claudell Washington intentionally was walked to fill the bases, Holt — batting for catcher Ray Fosse — lined his winning single to right.

Joe Ferguson's throw home appeared in time to prevent Jackson from scoring the second run on the play, but Jackson slid under Steve Yeager's tag. The Dodgers put up a long argument, but got nowhere, and a minute later Washington scored the game's final run from third base on an infield grounder by Dick Green.

Los Angeles eventually removed Messersmith for a pinch hitter in the seventh, and Mike Marshall finished up with two scoreless innings, running his series totals in four games to six innings without allowing a run.

The pitching victory went to Ken Holtzman, the A's starter, raising his three-year series record to 4-1, although he once again failed to finish.

Holtzman — who hit a third inning home run for the first Oakland score — was lifted in the eighth after walking Jim Wynn and surrendering a single to new father Steve Garvey — his wife had a daughter, their first child, two hours before the game — with two outs.

Rollie Fingers struck out Ferguson to end the inning, then retired the Dodgers in the ninth with the aid of a brilliant game-ending double play started by Green, the second baseman.

Green dove to his right to smother a shot by Von Joshua, flipped to shortstop Bert Campaneris, and Campaneris threw to first to end the game.

The homer by Holtzman, a drive over the leftfield fence on a 1-0 pitch, was the first by a pitcher in the series since Dave McNally of Baltimore hit a grand slam in 1970, and Holtzman's fourth extra-base hit in his last five series at-bats.

Los Angeles went ahead 2-1 in the fourth when Garvey, the top series hitter with 7-for-17, hit a one-out ground single to right, Ferguson walked, and Russell belted a two-out triple to deep right center.

Vida Blue, who is 0-3 in World Series competition, will try for the clincher for Oakland in Thursday night's fifth game against Don Sutton, who beat Blue on Sunday at Los Angeles and has won 12 games in a row.

Hawks bop winless B's, 4-0

CHICAGO [UPI] — Chicago Black Hawk Veteran Stan Mikita scored twice Wednesday night to help goalie Tony Esposito to his first shutout of the National Hockey League season in a 4-0 triumph over the Boston Bruins.

It was the first win in three games for the Hawks this season. and the second defeat with one tie and no wins for the Bruins.

The Hawks wrapped up the game in the first period when Cliff Koroll scored on a power play and Mikita followed 37 seconds later with his first goal of the game, unassisted after he picked up a loose puck in the Boston end and fired a 45-footer past goalie Ross Brooks.

Mikita's second score came on a 15-foot drive on a power play in the last period after Jim Pappin also had scored for the Hawks.

Esposito stopped 29 Boston shots while Brooks saved on 28 Chicago tries.

Oakland changes signals

OAKLAND [UPI] - The Oakland A's held a team meeting an hour before the start of Wednesday's fourth game of the World Series to change their signs.

The meeting was called by third base Coach Bobby Winkles with Manager Alvin Dark and owner Charlie Finley sitting in.

A member of the A's, who asked not to be identified, said Winkles thought it was a good time to change the club's signs and there was no hint that it was being done because the rival Los Angeles Dodgers might have deciphered the signs after three games.

"It was very routine, nothing all that important," said the informant. "If I remember correctly, we did the same thing a year ago after playing three games with the Mets."

Bigtime Boston bigotry

The things that have been happening in Boston lately are appalling, but to me, not surprising.

Related to sports, Boston has been a racist city from the word go for years. It was only a matter of time unfortunately before all the violence and semi-anarchy that has recently prevailed did actually occur.

There are so many cases in point it's difficult to find where to begin.

In the area of professional sports Boston had been backward for so long that it is a wonder that leagues in the respective sports never took any action. That probably says something about the leagues themselves and where they are at.

First let's look at football. When the Patriots were in Boston they consistently had one of the lowest ratios of black to white players in the league. As far back as I can remember there were a few black players, mostly linemen or non-starters that played for the Pats in the pre-Jim Nance days. Before then who were the big stars? Gino, Babe, and Nick.

At this time in the league most every other team was being either led by a super black runner or had very heavy contributions from blacks at other positions. Of course at this time too the Pats were almost always out of any kind of title race by mid-season.

Hockey and the Bruins must be looked at in a different light because most of its participants were not from this country for so long. But when you look at hockey in conjunction with its other building counterpart, Basketball and the Celtics, then hockey takes on a somewhat different perspective.

The Celtics and Red Auerbach are the closest Boston ever came to non-racism in its professional sports. Auerbach saturated his team with Black players most likely more for talent reasons than for race reasons. Now is where the different look at hockey can be related. For what seemed like an eternity the Boston Bruins made last place in the National Hockey League their home while the Boston Celtics did the same with first place and National Basketball Association Championships. And for all of those years the Bruins continually sold out Boston Garden for every game while the Celtics usually played before two thirds of the crowd and just barely sold out their play-off games, things the Bruins didn't even have. Many people would say that happened because hockey is more popular than Basketball in Boston. Possibly that is the case but that certainly is not the complete reason as far as I am concerned.

Who remembers Bill Russell one of the all-time greats of pro basketball? Who knows that people in a certain town that he wanted to move into petitioned to keep him from buying a house in that town. Then when Russell was a television announcer people wondered why unlike most other players turned sportscasters he showed no joking favortism to Boston when they were involved in a broadcast that he was doing. He was just telling it like it really was, I guess.

Finally the Red Sox and baseball have to be one of the most intense contributers to racism in Boston than any of the other pro sports. Just think back to some of the players that have left the Red Sox over the years in some of their infamous "trouble-maker" trades. Earl Wilson, Joe Foy, George Scott, and Reggie Smith are all a few of the better known ones. Sox owner Tom Yawkey was and still is known to have trouble communicating with those types of players. You know, the ones with different color skin. I guess Yawkey can not relate to the fact that this is 1974 and not 1944. He is probably better off on his plantation in the Carolinas where he sought immediate refuge after the Sox elimination from the pennant race this year.

Sports are a big part of many peoples' lives, including many children. The examples that they set are learning and lasting ones.

The things that have been happening in Boston lately are most appalling, but definitely not surprising.

The hard sell

Behind the door with Marilyn Chambers

by Marian Prokop

Marilyn Chambers: if you know the name, it's either as the smiling young mother pictured on boxes of Ivory Snow or the star of such hard-core porn flicks as "Behind the Green Door" and "The Resurrection of Eve." Over the summer, the blue-eyed blonde former cheerleader toured the Eastern states in a Vegas-style night club act in which she sings, dances, and gyrates to pop-rock tunes backed by singers and a four piece band. The following interview with Marilyn Chambers, born Marilyn Briggs, and her manager-fiance, Chuck Traynor, also ex-husband and ex-manager of Linda Lovelace, took place in between her two nightly shows at Lucifer's in Kenmore Square, Boston.

Speaking with her in relative privacy, she seemed more like the natural and uncomplicated Ivory Snow mother though her negligently buttoned blouse hinted that she knows very well what went on behind the green door. She talked sweetly of her childhood in Westport, Connecticut and her years at Staples High School where she first developed her skill as a gymnast. I first asked 22 year old Marilyn:

Q: What exactly happened with your contract for Ivory Snow?

MC: Yeah, well, they did renew the contract for ten years, I think it was because they found their soap sales went up 40 per cent everytime they put a blip in the paper saying you know, that they were upset. They didn't know what to do, and finally that blew over, and they renewed the contract, swearing up and down all the time that they didn't renew it. Then there would be blips in the paper saying they were going to take the picture off the box, then people would go out and buy the box. Their soap sales still go up.

Q: Are they going to take off the box?

MC: I don't know. They keep saying they are, but I don't know.

Q: How did it all start?

MC: I first did some work for 3 or 4 modelling agencies in New York and some television things. And I did a lot of you know, "hair" things and "suntan" things. First I did Clairol, Pepsi generation things, then the Ivory Snow thing all for television. When I graduated from high school, I moved into New York and went to some acting classes in Wynnhandman Studios, and about that time I was in a film called "The Owl and The Pussycat" with Barbra Streisand and George Segal. And then I did another film called "Together". Then Columbia Pictures sent me out to California to do a promotional tour for the "Owl and the Pussycat", and I uh, promptly fell in love with California, came back to New York, packed up all my things, and split. I lived in San Francisco for about two years where I became involved with the Mitchell Brothers and did "Behind the Green Door" and "The Resurrection of Eve."

Then when I was in New York doing a promotional tour for the "Resurrection of Eve", I had reached a plateau for where I was going, really, I wanted to do other things but I really didn't know uh, how to do them, where to go, and about that time I got a phone call from Chuck...

Q. When was that?

MC: This was in September of '73.

Q: So you had done "Behind the Green Door" and "The Resurrection of Eve" before you met Chuck?

MC: Right. So then Chuck called me up, we had never spoken or met each other before. But what had happened was Linda (Lovelace) had had a lot of club dates she was about to embark on in Las Vegas and Miami for like $25,000 a week and she just, well, took a walk, she decided she wasn't going to do it. So Chuck called me and said "Look, do you want to do it?"

Q: You mean to take Linda's place?

MC: Yeah. Well he was giving me a chance to see if I could do something. He was talking about taking her place in about two weeks, and I said well, sure, I'll definitely try to do it and right away flew to L.A. But instead of learning Linda's old show, we decided to take our time and put together a new show. So what we have now is a rock show and a Vegas show that includes a 12-piece band, six dancers, and back-up singers.

Q: What made you decide to go with Chuck? You'd obviously never met him, but you had heard of him at the time.

MC: I had never met him, but I had heard some not very nice things about him, to tell you the truth, and, well, I don't make judgments before I meet people of course, you know, and so I was very cautious when I met him, and we were planning on having only a business relationship: of course, it didn't last very long. He has a very civil person you know. He takes care of me and really protects me. And you know I totally depend on him, which is, if I couldn't depend on him, then I wouldn't be where I am because he is the best at what he does.

Q: What is it exactly that he does?

MC: Just being a manager, a promoter of "sex stars." He made Linda Lovelace you know, very well known in very little time. I've never met Linda, or even talked to her or anything.

Q: Are they finally divorced or separated?

MC: Yeah. But, I'd never met Linda, probably never will now. Never saw her or anything. Wouldn't want to. People you know, it's sort of a Hollywood gossip story, because it's sort of funny you know, we would get together and really dig each other, Chuck and I, but people think we had this secret really torrid love affair going on for two years (laughs), when we'd never even met each other and then we found out we had the same types of goals, the same ideas...

Q: Which are?

MC: I knew you were going to ask that next. Well, we hope to you know retire in ten years.

And the Letters coast in . . . EDITORS TO THE LETTER

To The Editor:

For months we have all sat back and watched this tower toppling business progress, not knowing what to do, only hoping that the courts would bring justice. Well, we have seen justice, or what the judge calls justice. If this is justice, then we have all lost our marbles and are not playing with a full deck.

Where are you good, straight, decent, people in Montague Center and in the Town of Montague? Are we going to let Lovejoy do this to us, and get away with it?

Surely you people couldn't have read the article written in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian on Oct. 3 by Mike Kostek, as some of us have. It was called, "Sam Lovejoy and the Town of Power — The Plant Will Not Be Built."

I say to all of you decent, law abiding citizens, please stand up against this and fight like you're never fought before.

For openers, let me say this: I knew Sam Lovejoy five years ago when he first came to Montague. A real likable and jovial person. Today he is something completely different.

I was present in the court house the day after he toppeled the tower, and saw him with all his hip friends. And believe you me, you might have thought it was the second coming of Christ. The way they were so happy and pleased that he had done this thing. He has made the statement that he has done this in behalf of the people. Well, we are the people, and none of us asked him to do it.

Some of our family have lived here over four generations and some maybe more. He has lived in this town for five years. Who in the hell does he think he is? This isn't his town these aren't his people. The Montague Plains was not his property. Whether you are for or against nuclear power makes no difference to me. Everyone has a right to his own beliefs. But what does make a difference to me is decency and honor, among people. He has shown none of this to his fellow man.

In this article in the Collegian, he has used more four letter words than the ears can stand.

—As far as I'm concerned it doesn't take a very intelligent person to use language that he has used and call our selectman a pig or to imply that our town Highway Department doesn't have enough brains to come in out of the rain. As far as I'm concerned, anyone who works for a week's pay the honest and hard way is all right with me. (Where is Sam Lovejoy employed?) Oh, yes, I forget, he is an organic gardener. (We all have our own opinions on this too.) With a mouth and a brain like Lovejoy has, God knows what's going to happen to our quiet little town that we all love so much, unless you people stand up and do something.

I only hope that the judge is proud of his verdict. To say the least, certainly helped Mr. Lovejoy all the way.

If I were judge, Sam would be digging ditches for every nuclear power plant that were built until the $45,000 were paid back to the insurance company.

If the utility company doesn't take this further, we shouldn't pay our light bills until they due.

When he pays back the $45,000, then he will bear the fuel responsibility.

But, of course, you remember that the Russians never paid back anything they owed to the United Nations.

A former friend of Sam Lovejoy's.

SKATER ROLLS INTO SF

AMHERST — A 27-year-old University of Massachusetts senior arrived in San Francisco, Calif., this weekend, successfully completing a cross-country tour and becoming the second person to roller-skate across the continent.

David Letters, who left Gloucester Memorial Day, rolled into San Francisco on Saturday — after toiling 3,750 miles and wearing out three pairs of heavy skates. Letters was accompanied by a friend with a van for most of the trip.

His mother, Mrs. Chester Letters, contacted at the family's Leominster home this morning, said she expects her son to return to Massachusetts via the van by the end of the month.

In an interview with the Gazette in this area in June, Letters said that he had chosen to make the journey "to make a million people smile" and to demonstrate the efficiency of ball-bearing transportation.

He roller skated along the side of highways and "interskaters''' and was involved in two accidents, one of which left him in a Salt Lake City, Utah, hospital for a week. In Ashland, Ohio, he was struck by a motorist traveling on the wrong side of the road. The mishap resulted in a broken skate but Letters was not injured.

In Utah the turbulence from two passing tractor trailer rigs flipped him onto his hip.

His mother explained that although Letter had practiced falling, the intensity of the turbulence was so great that he could not control the fall. As a result, some of the nerves in his back were injured and his right leg was temporarily paralyzed. He received whirlpool and sauna bath treatments, his mother said, but the injury slowed his pace.

Letters said he planned to remove his skates for the mountainous areas and walk instead in some places.

"You have to give him a lot of credit," Mrs. Letters remarked, "He did walk some, but he did most of the trip on skates."

Letters is a senior in journalism at UMass and a writer for the campus newspaper and Below The Salt.

Solzhenitsyn — truth or fiction?

reviewed by Ed Smith

Before even attempting to review Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn's latest work, The Gulag Archipelago, I must bring to mind the work that has preceeded this book. The major amount of his work which has been presented to the public up to this time has been novels. There are plays too, and essays, but the novel is what comes to mind when his name is mentioned. They are powerful novels, filled with the essence of human suffering and joy which few other writers of the twentieth century have been able to capture in such complete form. Solzhenitsyn is a magnificent novelist of epic proportions.

But Gulag, as a whole, raises the question of where did this historical tract come from. The answer is not clear and maybe it should not be. One can only speculate. It seems though, that this historical form can do something and tell something that the novel cannot. It can deal with historical fact and incidents that have been ignored, suppressed and denied by those with power. Possibly the dedication in the book explains it better.

I dedicate this to all those who did not live to tell it
And may they please forgive me
For not having seen it all
Nor remembered it all
For not having divined all of it.

Since Solzhenitsyn left the Soviet Union and came to the West, a barrage of accusations have been hurled at him. Principle among the accusations are that he is a tsarist, an anti-semite and a liar. I think it is important to deal with these accusations because in doing so I can explain some of the elements of the book.

Throughout the book he refers to various methods employed by the Chekists, the KGB and other state security organs of the country. In comparison to these he says, at points, that the police forces of the tsar never employed such methods. This has led many to imply that Solzhenitsyn is yearning for the days of the tsar. However this seems to be a rather rash assumption and some alternatives should be examined.

The Russian revolution, one might remember, was an overthrow of a totalarian system which was incapable of dealing justly with the large mass of Russian people. Exactly what they were going to replace it with is a question easily argued by both aherents to Marx and followers of Adam Smith. What is generally conceded by those who consider the situation is that the new form of government would somehow improve the lot of the people in terms of justice, distribution of wealth, living conditions and the other material factors that effect the common man.

What Solzhenitsyn is arguing is that this system has not fulfilled that purpose in many areas, including judicial justice, opportunities for free dissemination of ideas and the like. One may disagree with him and say that the Soviet state has fulfilled these functions, but nonetheless, one must understand why he keeps referring to the tsarist model. It is that model that the soviet system was supposed to improve upon. It was the only system existing in Russia for centuries to compare it to. In August 1914 it is obviously recognized by Solzhenitsyn as a totalitarian society, totally corrupted from within. But as well, he finds the present system in the Soviet Union just as unjust and totalitarian in it's rule as the tsarist system. He is not hearkening back to the good old days, but rather establishing his conviction that to replace unjust system with an unjust system is absurd.

Another charge has been that he is anti-semetic. This seems to have roots in two different areas. In some places, when Solzhenitsyn deals with the Second World War, his attitude towards the Germans is not totally hateful. He feels compassion for the German prisioners in the camps. It progresses from this, somehow it seems, that Solzhenitsyn did not think what the Germans did was quite as bad as what Stalin did because the Germans were killing Jews and Stalin was killing Russians.

The point of it seems to be though, is that Sozhenitsyn felt, in terms of the way in which totalitarian leaders manipulate the people, that what Stalin did was more insidious that what Hitler did. Hitler turned his people against another group of people who were already isolated from the society due to past prejudices. He drove his people by appealing to their ethnicity (or psuedo ethnicity) and employed the Jews as a group of people to look down upon in order to increase one's own esteem. Solzhenitsyn seems to feel that in the case of Stalin, he turned his own people against one another and in some cases made them believe that the killing of forty million people was necessary for sheer survival.

Another reason why Solzhenitsyn may be in this position of being accused of anti-semitism is because he has made no public statement condemning the Soviet government for its treatment of Jews who want to leave the Soviet Union for Israel. To me, this seems to be a case of not being able to see the forest for the trees. The problem is not that the Soviet government gives Jews a hard time leaving, but that the Soviet government gives everyone who wants to leave a difficult time. The problems the Jews are having are a direct result of the way in which that government regards all its people, which is precisely the point of the Gulag.

Furthermore, it seems strange that Solzhenitsyn, who risked his life for years by criticizing the soviet state from within, should be labeled anti-semetic by westerners after he was thrown out of one of the more anti-semetic states in the world today. In going back to his novel The First Circle, if that is not unfair to those who criticize the man solely on the basis of what others say about him, one finds the character Lev, a jewish inmate of the camp in the book, is very sympathetically dealt with and shown respect throughout the book. It is sometimes better to go back to what someone actually has said than to infer things from what they have not.

The third in this list of accusations is that Solzhenitsyn is a liar. One source of this information is certainly Pravda, that pillar of objective truth preferred by those who call the New York Times of lying, bourgeoise rag. Once again it seems strange that, if Solzhenitsyn is such a liar why has no one else taken upon themselves the task of writing a history of the prison camps under the soviet government. Is it possible that Solzhenitsyn has made up the whole story? That is the thing about calling someone a liar; the burden of proof shifts from the writer to the accuser.

Enough though of replying to unsubstantiated accusations. The Gulag Archipelago is too important a piece of work to be mired in such things.

What seems most important about this book is that it attempts to record previously unrecognized history. It is a task which relies heavily on oral reports, shakey memories and in some situations, prejudiced accounts of past incidents. What is essential though is that what happened to millions of people is remembered and not allowed to be swept under the carpet of progress. If one learns anything from Winston Smith in 1984 it is that the ultimate tragedy is for men to be allowed to manipulate history in order to advance their power.

The events which Solzhenitsyn covers in the six-hundred plus pages of Gulag only the first two sections of a larger chronicle, can in no way be summarized, synopsied or compressed here. They muse be read for their full power to become apparent.

If this review has so far made Solzhenitsyn out to be some sort of all knowing seer, pardon me as a writer who often gets too upset over piddling matters. Solzhenitsyn is a man who's prejudices are evident in his writing. He holds strong opinions and vents them often in this book. But that is somehow reassuring; rather he do that than write a history under the guise of being in no way affected by the situations he is recounting.

What should not be fogotten about Solzhenitsyn and what is evident in all his writing, is his love for the Russian people. True, it is the love of a disenchanted son for a father, but it is love nevertheless. In Solzhenitsyn's eyes, the Russian people have allowed themselves to be trampled upon by a small group of people who used what could have been a just communist system to advance their own desire for control. He does not call for revolution; that path has led the wrong way already. What he does call for is a unity of people with the courage to demand justice of a corrupted system.

of valor — civil valor. That's all we need and that's exactly what we haven't got."

People talk to Fred Weiss' story

To the editor:

When I heard you say that there would be a rebuttal to Bobbi Ramsey's rebuttal to Fred Weiss's piece on Angela Davis, I joked that I would write a rebuttal to the rebuttal to the rebuttal.

Unfortunately, upon reading what you wrote, the humor disappeared, and I must answer it seriously.

You accuse Ramsey Misher & Johnston of being "knee-jerk" in asserting that Weiss so-called analysis was white male supremacist. But where is your detailed analysis? "Bullshit", to quote you.

I have a deep respect for Angela Davis. I also disagree with her attitude about the Soviet Union. I read Gulag. But I also have been reading Trotsky, and Cannon, and have been listening to tapes of interviews at WFCR. (they just aired one last week on US & USSR educational systems,) and the contradictions I see and hear border on the insane. We are on the outside looking in, through a cloudy and distorting glass. I disagree with those who praise the Soviet Union only because I take it for fact that Samizdat exists. To be fully aware of how distorted the view we get is, just recall Solzhenitsyn himself, referring to Daniel Ellsberg. Solzhenitsyn called Ellsberg a traitor, but did Solzhenitsyn realize exactly what Ellsberg was being a traitor to? And, does Solzhenitsyn realize what great free country is supplying his tormentors with tools? Us!

When Ms. Davis and others who've been there praise the USSR take note that they are talking about what the people are doing. Could you travel to Los Angeles, San Francisco, Detroit, to the countryside of Vermont, Louisiana, Alabama, and North Dakota, and then tell a crowd in the soviet Union everything, Every conclusion you reach, in an hour? And would you make the same speech if you traveled in a black skin?

And as far as Solzhenitsyn is concerned, I was held bound by every word in his book. He is a great writer, whatever his politics may be. BUT....he had a rare opportunity to help his sisters. His sisters in prison, whom he mentions always in passing. He relates how a woman was arrested and not allowed to make arrangements for her babe-in-arms while she was away. He relates how the women were lined up, naked, and chosen by the prisonkeepers on an auction basis. And after that, he calls the women prostitutes! A woman hung herself to protect that man's manuscript. Women typed that manuscript. And he does not devote one precious chapter to the story of women prisoners, a story to which he had rare access, and which he had a responsibility to tell. I consider Solzhenitsyn a traitor.

And Shockley...I have nothing to say. Women have already been "encouraged" not to reproduce. Dalkon shields have killed eleven.

Denise Matteau

To the Editor,

Thanks for the exciting October 10 Below The Salt front page story and sequence.

I love Angela and I love what you allowed Fred Weiss to do with the story — I'm not sure that your own final word in the same issue is going to let people feel they got a fair shake.

Yet I believe what you said is right on. I respect your courage and up front handling of the whole situation, and realize it is a risky business.

Until people are allowed-forced to be sharper and more up front, we will never be able to rebuild the least available commodity in America today...truthfulness to oneself.

I applaud you and Fred Weiss (and Kris Jackson for other things) — keep it up.

Below the Salt folk —

The Weiss article and its accompanying interchange was the most intelligent and useful article I've seen in either your pages or the Collegian this year. I don't write fan letters often, but you deserve it. I'm sympathetic to Socialist ideas, but I've been waiting in vain for someone to explain them sensibly.

Will Bradley — Art Nouveau in America.

On Display:
American Posters of The Nineties
Mt. Holyoke College — John and Norah Warbeke Gallery — through November 3.

Most prominent in this representation ot posters of the Nineties are William Bradley, Edward Penfield, Ethel Reed, Louis Rhead and Will Carqueville.

The American poster designers took their cue from the European designers. In England, soaps and foodstuffs inspired much of billboard art; in France, the theatre, the cafes and art exhibitions were the subject of the best posters. Jules Cheret created a bright, exuberant female figure to advertise a variety of products. In America, as seen in this show, magazine and book publishers were responsible.

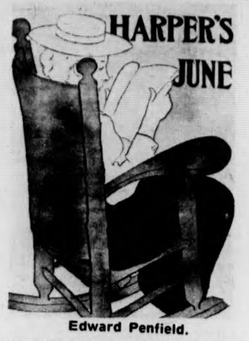
The established magazines — Harpers, Century, McClures and Scribners commissioned artists to promote sales. Later the small, short-lived journals that suddenly proliferated America at this time commissioned artists to create their covers. The poster style eventually influenced book illustration and commercial advertisements.

By 1895 the poster was thriving in America. Articles on the artist appeared everywhere. Poster shows became popular and there were even plans to form poster clubs in New York and Boston. Extra copies were print for collectors and it was impossible to get back numbers of many editions.

The omnipresence of the poster caused much controversy and predictions as to its future. Some believed it was the beginning of a new school of art in America. Because of the scandals associated with the personal lives of two prominent influences of the art — Oscar Wilde and Aubrey Beardsley — some feared it would have an adverse effect on public morality. Beardsley's Art Nouveau style was a direct influence on the style of Will Bradley in contrast to the bold and simple style of Edward Penfield who was influenced by Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec.

Unfortunately, those that predicted that the poster was just a fad and would go the way of all fads were correct. After World War I, the poster disappeared from the streets and was not seen again until contemporary interest arose.

The abundance of these posters was made possible in the 1890's when color lithography flourished. Today photography has taken over.



Edward Penfield.

Unfortunately we are looking at the past, at a time when art was so much more a part of everyday life. Bold, eyecatching, colorful, utilitarian, Americans have taken the poster art out of the street and put it in the museum.

The Biwa

The Biwa
Second in a series of articles on Japanese music, instruments, and musicians

The biwa, an instrument similar in shape to the Western lute, came into Japan from China and India. This instrument was transferred into China from India somewhere around the third century A.D. In China this instrument, known as the p'ip'a, was further evolved, and it is this Chinese — style lute that came into Japan sometime in the Nara Period (646-794).

This biwa is usually made from two pieces of wood. The back, including the neck, is made from a single piece of wood, hollowed out to form the body. Over this is glued the top, a thin layer of wood usually having two crescent-shaped sound holes. The frets of the biwa, unlike those of the guitar, rise high above the neck of the instrument, up to one inch high. Because these frets are so high, the biwa can be played two ways. The musician can play the notes by placing his fingers on the tip of the frets. This limits his range to the number of frets on the instrument. The other way to play is to push down the string between the frets. The pitch of the note played depends on how far down the string is pushed. The range which is possible in this style of playing is much greater.

The biwa's primary use is as an accompaniment to the sung or spoken word. The first biwa players in Japan were blind priests who started in southern Dyushu, singing sutras to appease the local earth gods.

The biwa comes in several different sizes, with some variation in shape, and number of strings and frets. Basically, there are four major styles of biwa and biwa playing. The gaku-biwa is the oldest style and the one closest in design to the Chinese p'ip'a. It is the largest of the biwa, and is played with a small bone plectrum. It has four strings and four frets, and it was used in the orchestral accompaniments to the gagaku performances which were held in the late eighth century at the Imperial Court in Nara. On the gaku-biwa, the strings are played on top of the frets rather than in-between.

The Heike-biwa is a medium-sized biwa, which has four strings, five frets, and is played with a larger, wider plectrum. The name of the instrument and the style came from its use as the accompaniment for the recitation of the Tales of the Heike, the story of the battles between the Taira (Heike) and Minamoto (Genji) familes for control of Japan at the end of the twelfth century. The tales are recited, with set melodies played on the biwa in-between the verses. These melodies either reflect the mood of the previous verse or set the mood for the following verse. Unfortunately, this style of playing has lost its popularity, and there are now only three or four men left in Japan who can play in this style, and all those men are in their eighties.

The Satsuma biwa is narrower than the Heike-biwa, and is a more modern instrument. It has four strings and four frets, and these frets are quite high. On a Satsuma-biwa there is a large space between the first and second frets. The plectrum is a very wide, rather thin piece of wood. This biwa is played by pressing the string down between the frets, giving it many variable pitches. Because of the width of the plectrum, the Satsuma-biwa has the distinctive sound of the whack of the plectrum against the body of the biwa. The Satsuma-biwa has a very twangy sound.

The Chikuzen-biwa, the smallest of the biwa, comes in two common types; one with four strings and five frets, and one with five strings and five frets. This biwa is more closely related to an Indian form of lute. The plectrum is thick and blunt, and, unlike the Satsuma-biwa style, the sound of the plectrum striking the body of the biwa is not often used.

The biwa has served Japanese history and culture in much the same way that the lyre and harp of ancient Greece and Rome have served European development. It has served as the basic accompaniment for the legends and tales which make up a great part of the early history of a people.

Small talk in the broadcast booth

by Michael J. Massi

"And let's face it. You must have humor, particularly in sport, where, without humor and perspective, one tends to live in a closet."
—Howard Cosell, from Cosell

It's a perfect day for football, somewhat cool with a stiff south-north wind blowing under a cloudy, foreboding sky. From the WMUA broadcast booth high above the stadium, the practicing Boston University team looks like so many small toy soldiers running nimbly over a green and white battlefield. People are slowly flowing into their seats, pushing further towards the top of the stadium, where flags bearing the names of the members of the Yankee Conference snap whiplike in the clutches of the wind. In about twenty minutes, the game will begin.

The man responsible for the listener's understanding the action is Russ Small, the Sports Director for WMUA and play-by-play announcer for football. In his two years with the radio station, Russ has developed an easy, carefree style of broadcasting sports, first with hockey, then with his own "Sportstalk" show, culminating in today's broadcast at Alumni Stadium on a grey day in October.

Russ is worried today. "I'm wearing my new suit," he explains. "It's bad luck. I wore it last week against Vermont and we lost." But he's wearing it again today, probably hoping to break the jinx against BU.

While statistician Stu and engineer Gary put the equipment in the booth through some last-minute testing, Russ, Larry and I walk out into the press room. At the back of the room is a punch bowl, which we proceed to drain.

Russ and Larry wander around, talking to familiar people and meeting some unfamiliar ones. It's getting difficult to walk around, there being so much activity in the suddenly-small room. Outside, on the field, the UMass Minutemen are tossing footballs, kicking field goals, tackling people both real and imagined.

Larry asks Russ, "I wonder, should I get someone for my halftime show?"

"Sure," Russ says. "Get Vic Fusia," a former UMass coach. "You want me to get him for you?"

"I'm a big boy now, I'll get him myself."

While Larry was procuring the gentleman for the show, Russ got some more punch and talked with the man from WTTT, who would be in the booth next to us during the game.

Larry came back beaming. "I've got him."

"That's good," said Russ. As we stood there watching the pre-game run-around, a well-built man about forty-five stepped up to Russ and said hello.

"Hi, Mr. Fusia," said Russ. Suddenly Larry's eyeballs bulged, his hands shook. He looked at me and then back to Russ, listening to the conversation between Russ and Fusia.

As Vic walked away, Larry grabbed Russ. "That's Vic Fusia?" he asked.

"Yes," said Russ.

"That's not the guy I got," Larry said. "Who did I get?"

Russ smiled and asked incredulously, "You mean you got the wrong guy?"

Larry pointed to a taller man to our left, with sparse grey hair and a checkered jacket. "That's the guy I got. I thought that was Vic Fusia!"

Russ Small...

Russ began to laugh, then he broke into hysterical guffawing. Tears were forming at his eyes, and they streamed from his cheeks. He held his sides, then crossed his arms before him and bent over, roaring with laughter at Larry's predicament. All the while, Larry badgered him, "Who did I get? Who is he?"

When Russ could finally manage to speak, he said, "I'm not going to tell you," though, in truth, not even he knew. Larry stalked off hurriedly, returning momentarily to tell us "It's Jack McCarthy of the Boston Herald. Not a total loss, at least I know who he is."

We went to the booth. Russ sat on the left, Larry in the middle between us. It was almost game time, and from the radio on the desk behind us came the strains of music from MUA.

"We'll go on the air five minutes before game time," Russ said, turning to Gary. "You'll hear...", he hums some notes from the introduction,"...then it will stop suddenly, like so. That's when we go on."

....and fellow jock-in-the-box, Larry Convoy.

"Have you got the Yankee Conference standings?" Larry asks. No one does. He leafs through the Globe.

"Time to get stoned," Gary says. Everyone agrees it would be a nice time, but no one produces the smoke.

Out in the stadium, about ten thousand people have arrived a surprising number considering the loss to Vermont last week due to Russ's suit, and the fact that it is a long weekend, and half the campus has split for home. The band taked the field as the announcer says, "Ladies and gentlemen, the University of Massachusetts marching band..."

Russ's pre-recorded tape is aired, the strains of Rudy Vallee's "Betty Coed" forcing us to grin.

The music stops abruptly, just as Russ had indicated and we're on live.

From the opening kickoff, it was mirth and lightness in the booth. UMass took the kickoff to the 47, but had to punt on their first series of plays. At certain times, Larry would interject his commentary, explaining some UMass or BU strategy, coloring some important play, or adding insight. He and Russ would exchange little quips and asides that added a touch of humanity to the mechanical world of broadcasting.

UMass scores first to take a 7-0 lead. Above the stadium, flying on its furthest parameters, a lone airplane circles bearing a wiggling sign, "YOU CAN BEAT BU BUT YOU CAN'T BEAT UNIVERSITY PIZZA." Somehow, it seems appropriate.

At a particularly exciting set of downs, UMass takes the ball almost into the BU end zone.

"They're on the one-foot yard line!" Russ cries out. Realizing his error, he quickly adds,"...if that makes any sense."

During the broadcast, Stuart, as statistician, occasionally passed slips of paper containing current player statistics down to Russ or Larry, which they could read and air as they saw fit. Russ picked up one such note and read some figures from it, then quickly added, "I have another note from Stu, our statistician. It says, 'Tell Larry his zipper is down." To which Larry had no immediate reply.

Larry gave Russ a quickie football quiz, which Russ answered in short order. They enjoyed doing this, hoping that one could stump the other during the broadcast, thereby making one appear knowledgable while the other seemed unprepared.

Another favorite trick of Russ' was to ask Larry a question while Larry's mouth was full of food. It creates a comical scene in the booth to see Russ expectantly waiting for an answer while Larry wolfs down a sandwich.

Towards the end of the second quarter BU scores. Now it's 14-7, UMass. Another note comes down to Larry from Stu.

"Murphy's carried 10 times for 52 yards."

"That's 5.2 yards per carry," Russ adds.

"That's very good," Larry replied. "You should be a math major."

"I am."

"Well, then, did you ever think of going into broadcasting?"

During half-time, Larry interviews Jack "Vic Fusia" McCarthy while Russ walks around outside, stretching his legs. Someone stops by with roast beef sandwiches, and everyone hungrily grabs one. Russ and I go outside, and while Russ uses the men's room I go for coffee.

Russ comes back from the bathroom in time to catch the tail end of Larry's interview. We share a few quick smiles whenever McCarthy speaks, noticing his halting, deliberate manner and thinking he must be half-deaf. Russ views Larry's predicament as any good broadcaster views his partner's troubles, with part relish and part sympathy. But he certainly doesn't dote on it; Russ is too much a professional to remember those awkward moments. It's all a learning process to him, every moment and every action educating and molding him, making him better than he was the last time he went on the air.

Jack McCarthy leaves. Russ goes back to his seat and sets up his material for the third quarter. To his left, stuck on the glass with black electrical tape, is the BU roster, town out of the program book. It seems that everything is stuck on with electrical tape.

The third quarter begins, and proceeds rather sluggishly, as Russ notes halfway through, neither team pushing further than the other team's forty yard line. "The wind is a big factor," Russ notes, for it has picked up since early in the game.

Mark Tripucka, the UMass quarterback, is injured in the third quarter and Brian McNally, a Concord native, comes in to replace him.

"If anyone deserves to be a Minuteman, it's a boy from Concord," Russ speculates. "Get it?"

"Good point, Russ," Larry says.

"—if you know your American history."

Russ wiggles his nose, feeling a sneeze coming up. As he sneezes, a play is run on the field and Larry calls the action.

"You're stepping on my toes again, Larry".

"Just covering for you while you sneeze, Russ."

The fourth quarter ends on an exciting note, as UMass holds BU deep in UMass territory and wins, 21-14. "Anything less than a win will be disastrous to UMass," Russ had said, and now that the game is won, Russ can relax with his convictions verified.

"So the Minutemen of UMass stick it to the Terriers of Boston, 21-14," Russ says, wrapping up the show. "We'll be right back after this message." But the message never comes, "Cliff must be asleep," Russ muses, then talks again.

"Donate to the Larry Convoy fund, so he can have an operation on his mouth and speak better."

Russ and Larry hum a few bars of some obscure, unknown song. Russ then gives a rundown of the game. There is still no indication that Cliff is awake at the station, so they go into what Russ calls 'routine number seven', a satirization of the miracles of electronic journalism. Russ and Larry switch us to Oakland for the first game of the World Series and Curt Gowdy with Tony Kubek. "Curt" and "Tony" comment on the game briefly, then return us to "Russ Small and Larry Convoy at Alumni Stadium in Amherst, Massachusetts." Russ wraps up the action in Amherst and comments briefly on the football game after thanking Curt and Tony for their analysis.

Finally WMUA responds. Cliff is awake. The broadcast is over.

"What could I do?" Russ asks, laughing. "There was no one there," indicating the radio which Gary now turns off.

"Well, time to clean it up," says Gary, and he leaves to take the antenna down from the roof. Russ picks up his papers, amid the confusion on the desk. Coffee cups, spilled coffee, cigarette butts are strewn about. It's impossible to salvage everything.

Russ and I walk back to the car. Our spirits are high because UMass has won and Russ has done his job proficiently. Now it's time to go back to Cance and give his throat a rest. "Talking for three hours really wears you out."

"You might mention this," Russ says as we leave the stadium. "Listening to a sports broadcast can be boring if all you hear is the droning of the sportscaster. We want to entertain people also."

Howard Cosell would agree with that.

Sally can't dance; Lou doesn't want to

Our Fairly Stupid Family

by David Miller

Sally Can't Dance
Lou Reed
RCA CPL1-10611
Total Playing Time: 32:20

This is a savage album. Lou Reed has put himself into an interesting and paradoxical situation with this album — while continuing to cultivate a glitter-decadence public image, he turns right around and completely denounces the values which that image represents. He particularly focuses on the idea of glorification of self-destruction (also one of the major themes of Berlin, and shows it up for what he believes it is — an unspeakably foolish conceit. Thus with Sally Can't Dance. Lou Reed continues his isolation from glitter through exploitation of the glitter persona, while, at the same time, remaining as alienated from middle-class values as ever.

Several of the songs presented here use the contrast of sordid lyrics and joyful music which made "Sad Song" such a masterful finale for Berlin. Sometimes this produces an overall effect of extreme sarcasm, as in "Ride Sally Ride", where Reed sings "Oooh isn't it nice - When your heat is made out of ice" against an instrumental background which later develops into pure gospel. On the other hand, the use of this technique in "Animal Language" results in one of the few songs which I can say honestly shocked me when I first heard it. "Animal Language" contains simple stories of a dog and a cat which have mindless violence committed on themselves, sometimes by themselves. The lyrics are somewhat revolting out of context, but when that ol' rock 'n' roll beat and an "Oooh wow - Bow-wow" backing chorus is added, the contrast forces you to step outside the lyrics and maybe think about just how much gets by in the name of Entertainment or Having Fun. From "Ride Sally Ride" — "Sit yourself down - Take off your pants, don't you know this is a party?"

In "New York Stars", Reed commits a particularly enjoyable sacrilege in denouncing the Warhol-New York Dolls scene (though not by name, of course) — an especially interesting move in view of his origins with Warhol, through the Velvet Underground. Lyric transcription problems abound here, but in one place he states "I'm going to stand in N. Y. night - Groove, go to see their so-called stars - A fairly stupid family - To pay five bucks for fourth-rate imitators...They say, (High pitched mince) 'I'm so empty...oh please can I be You? Your personality's so great.' " In its directness of attack, "N.Y. Stars" could be the most important song on the album.

But glitter is not the only place where decay can be found, and Reed does not stop with it. "Kill Your Sons", the most relentless song musically, contains an assault on the accelerating mindlessness of middle-class values — "Sister she got married on the island - and her husband takes the train - he's big and he's fast - and he doesn't even have a brain." And "Ennui" contains that wonderfully succinct line "Maybe someday you'll have a wife and then alimony...". "Billy", the final song on the album, featuring Reed on acoustic and Paul Fleisher on sax solos, is an autobiographical piece about his childhood friendship with a boy who became a football hero and eventually a doctor. The contrast is focused on the winner-loser relationship between the two, which would have remained constant if all was right with the world. But things change — Billy goes off to war and returns a vegetable — "It wasn't the Billy I knew, like talkin' to a door." Reed is left wondering "which one of us was the fool".

Sally Can't Dance also contains "Baby Face", a song about the poisoned breakup of a relationship, the central plot device of Berlin — "You don't have the looks, you're not the person that you used to be - And there are people on the street who would go for me." Like most of the songs here, it can't be called enjoyable, but its power cannot really be denied. Musically, the album ranges from the Baroque opening of "Ride Sally Ride", to the heavy metal of "N. Y. Stars" and the almost religious texture of "Ennui". The ensemble is more than competent — Danny Weis and Michael Fonfara especially shine on guitar and keyboards respectively. And if the lyrics are sometimes awkward (especially in "Billy" and "Animal Language"), and the melodies sometimes minimal (as in "N. Y. Stars"), the evident care given to details of production and the scope of Reed's personal vision make up for any lacks.

The messages are clear. What may once have been adhorrence of the massive self-destruction of the people around him has turned to disgust and scorn at its continuing futility and waste. Whether in the hippie-to-junkie story of the title song or the cult condemnation of "N. Y. Stars", Sally Can't Dance shows that Lou Reed is not going to leave his "fairly stupid family" alone.

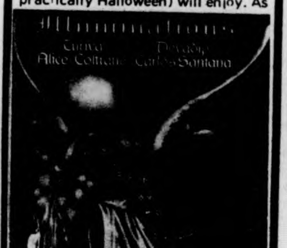
ILLUMINATIONS
DEVADIP CARLOS SANTANA
TURIYA ALICE COLTRANE
(Columbia PC 32900)
Playing Time: 35:40

This is not an album for listening to; this is an album to bathe in. What a beautiful combination: An ocean of strings, arranged by Turiya Coltrane, washing in and out, swirling, restless, while sunlight (courtesy Devadip Santana) sparkles on its surface. Other elements: Tom Coster, piano and organ; David Holland, acoustic bass; Jack Dejohnette, drums and percussion; Jules Broussard, flute and soprano sax; Turiya Alice Coltrane, harp and organ.

This is an incredible leap from the George Harrisonesque pop spirituality of Welcome, Santana's previous release; in fact,this a large step forward for Santana, period. He is no longer attempting to subvert his own exquisite taste for John McLaughlin's speed, and his music is rapidly becoming a truly personal reflection of his growth both musical and spiritual (they are closely related, no?). Add to this Turiya Alice Coltrane, one of the few who can handle large-scale string arrangements without falling (or at least not often) into the trap of strings equals beautiful music, a particular temptation in dealing with compositions as ethereal (I was hoping to avoid that word) as these.

Nor is this entirely an album of spiritual cotton-candy (delicious in proper amounts); most of side two is taken up by "Angel of Sunlight", an intense, hypnotically rhythmic piece somewhat reminiscent of Pharoah Sanders' Village of the Pharoahs and, to a lesser extent, McLaughlin's My Goal's Beyond. Jack DeJohnette and David Holland, plus congas, tabla, and tamboura, have a fine old time providing the atmosphere while Carlos suggests the Eastern mode (without, I might add, turning his instrument into a six-string sitar). Two minor complaints about this cut: (1) Jules Broussard's soprano solo is somehow not quite in context; he seems to be playing almost absentmindedly (2) It's too bad they had to resort to a fade-out rather than a real ending; it's even more of a cop-out when the end is obviously nowhere in sight. On the other hand, I have five fingers. Ah, but who cares: This meeting of the Mind has produced an uplifting, blissful music that anyone but a hard-core Scrooge (get your shopping done early, folks — it's practically Halloween) will enjoy. As



John Lennon often remarked to me:
Turn off your mind,
Relax and float downstream...
Merrily, merrily, merrily, merrily,
Life is but a dream.

An 'Om is where the heart is' A.

STREETLIGHTS-BONNIE RAITT
(Warner Bros. BS 2818)

Warning: Before playing Streetlights, do not, repeat, not listen to Minnie Riperton, Syreeta Wright Joni Mitchell, Wendy Waldman, Toni Brown, Judy Collins, Sandy Denny, Maddy Prior, the best of Maria Muldaur (before Muldaur and a few things after that), Bonnie's own Give it up, or any woman now recording who sings with spirit, depth, feeling or sensitivity to arrangements. It is safer to listen to Bette Midler's Bette Midler or Florence Warner, as then you won't be too disappointed.

As always, Bonnie is singing someone else's songs, not that this itself is bad, but she doesn't add anything to them. Her voice is limited and she appears to be unwilling to push these limits, to change what she has already done, to grow. A minor exception to this is her version of James Taylor's "Rainy Day Man." It has a quality that Taylor wasn't mature enough to give it in his recording, and I'm sure he could do better now.

This album is not bad (if you like Bonnie Raitt), it simply isn't good. If you do like Bonnie's voice the way it is, you will probably like this, but you won't love it. It's just more of the same, so why bother?

In Concert
Jefferson Starship
October 14
Music Hall, Boston

Nostalgia of a Woodstock generation was evident Monday night at the Music Hall, with Grace Slick belting out tunes in her projecting way; Papa John stealing the audiences' souls with his swinging solos and Paul Kantner bringing those original Airplane tunes aboard the Starship. This tight performing trio, backed by some fantastic lead guitar work brought the audiences to their feet repeatedly. The crowd was peaceful and helpful in keeping the evening cool. The group asked the police to back off and allowed a dancing mass of freaks to boogie in front of the stage. Gracie joked with these people between songs. They reached back to 1965 with some original Airplane, moving to Blows against the Empire, then to Dragonfly, their newest album.

Choice seats were to be had by the energetic, since the house total was about half-full. The light show was not spectacular in any way but the stars were shinging bright. The encore was exciting to even the newcomers on the ship. "Somebody To Love" was followed by "Volunteers". What a song for a Boston concert these days. The Flower child is not dead.

—PaulLogue Jr.

THE WOMBLES (Columbia KC33140)
Total Rime — 32:55

Now that I know that this group made it big in England but is that any reason to ship them over here? The Wombles are described as "crazy, furry, cute creatures" who have their own BBC-TV show. They have had two number one singles ("Wombling Song" and "Remember You're A Womble") and a third single ("Banana Rock") hit Top 10 on the British charts. As if we don't have enough problems over here with our own Osmonds, Andy Kims and Barry Whites without having the Wombles sing about ecology and trying in vain to sound like the Beach Boys.

If you haven't heard the Wombles' American single, "Wombling Summer Party", you have been spared hearing one of the most childish songs since Graham Nash contrived "Our House." In fact the lead vocalist of the Wombles sounds strikingly similar to Nash. Maybe that will help. If C, S, N & Y can get away with making "Our House" a 'Greatest Hit'and charging $8.50 a ticket on their recent 'we're only in it for the music' tour, then the Wombles hhve a decent chance to break the U.S. market. Besides, what's wrong with a little competition?

The WHO's Glittering Bitbook

by Mike who? Kostek

Odds & Sods
The Who Track MCA-2126
time 40:43

Out of the last ten years comes this collection of various WHO false starts that have been previously unavailable for public comment. The result is a queer album as a whole, but the bits & pieces deserve scruitiny as they provide invaluable insights to this most morally normal band of deep demons, the WHO.

Chronologically speaking, they divy up like this:

"I'm The Face". Yes, at last, we get this first bit of recorded song, the 1964 single. Most of us were quite young then, as were the WHO (late teens), and most of everything (writing, playing) is done by Others. Late comers will pick up the "I'm the face if you want it babe" line via Quadrophenia. Quite a period piece, this, with the 1964 Mod-American Blues union, the main note here as this is a redo of Moore's "I Got Love If You Want It" blues standard with tough straight out Mod lyrics by 'mod miracle man Pete Meaden.'

January 1968. After My Generation, Happy Jack, Sell Out, Magic Bus, Monterey and a slew of brilliant singles (headed by "Pictures Of Lily" "I'm A Boy" and "I Can See For Miles") that made mid-late 60's AM radio an exciting proposition, the WHO were brutally classified as a singles band, mainly due to the complete ineptness of their record company, Decca (now MCA). The boys had moved away from their Mod Blues-James Brown days and into Mod Pop with an intensity that outshone all others. This period had culminated in Sell Out, the finest pop album ever made. Now this isn't the stupid, mindless Osmonds Pop of today, but rather was the original pop rock combining the Beach Boys light, the hard beat of those old blues with the virtual necessity of the HIT single as being the only route to success. No FM underground then.

Pete Townshend, having done in Top 40 sell out radio mentality, turned to what is instead of what's not, a much more difficult task. "Faith In Something Bigger" is a simple groping toward...something bigger. Bigger than the WHO? "The more we learn, the less we believe to be true — The more we prove, the more remains to be proved." "Glow Girl" is an incomplete bit of Pop Life Art, what Pete calls a "Rock & Roll plane crash with a happy reincarnation ending". It's a snappy 2:20, with those wonderful, incomparable WHOOOOO high harmonies, fine changes and one of Pete's stupendous feedback guitar sweep breaks. What style. Both of these tunes could have been from Sell Out or even before. In fact, part of "Glow Girl" builds like the "Spotted Henry" seg from Sell Out, and the "It's a girl, Mrs. Walker, it's a girl" has been heard before also. Life's like that you know — circular.

The other 1968 tune is the quite interesting tale of "Little Billy", a song Peter wrote for the American Cancer Society to stop people from smoking. 2:15 was too long for the Society to use, but 2:15 was really too short a time for Townshend to develop the intriguing idea of Billy who "doesn't smoke, doesn't die of obesity, even though he is very fat, and ends up looking after all the children of the people who died of cancer." One more verse might've put this "Happy Jack-ish ha ha-er over the top. Still nifty though. There's a fair live version on the WHO — Fillmore East bootlegs.

An EP means Extended Play, and these 33 and a third 'maxi' singles have four songs going for the price of a regular 45. In 1969, after Tommy the WHO went "slightly crazy" and recorded three songs on here, "Postcard", "Now I'm a Farmer" and "Naked Eye", intended for an EP. "Postcard" is Entwistle's only song on here, and is a characteristically thick, horn-propelled piece of biz about touring, previously found only as "We're Having A Lovely

Time" on the Radio London bootleg. "Now I'm A Farmer" is the strangest item on Odds & Sods, both in subject matter and composition. Pete's always kept close to the immediate elements — sky, earth, water — as well as the higher ground horizons, and this look at non-farming subsidized farming has its highs and lows. Lows include some forced lyrics ("It's alarming how charming it is to be a 'farming'") and some ordinary musical lines. Highs carry some interesting musical twists, as well as some great eccentric lyric emphasizing. A very peculiar number, reminiscent of the flip side of the "Won't Get Fooled Again" single, "I Don't Even Know Myself" in its similar convolutions.

"Naked EYE"has appeared as "It Don't Really Happen That Way At All" on Radio London and the Who Dunit? bootleg. This is written around the "bye Bye BYE BYE" riff from the "My Generation" — Tommy coda from Live At Leeds. A bunch of fine lyrics and power lines make this one of the strongest on here. These three tunes, along with Tommy ended forever the pop harmony Mod days and ways for the WHO, and let them enter the world of time signatures, power glides and overall increased sensitivity.

The seventies brought up the problem of how to follow Tommy, their world-wide reputation maker. Live At Leeds bought some time, but there was still the need for Something Big! Life House was to be that Something, being a WHO rock film espousing mostly the general embodiments of Peter's growing Meher Baba philosophical influences. "Won't Get Fooled Again", "I Don't Even Know Myself", most of what came to be Who's Next were to be the main portion of the soundtrack along with several from here: "Pure And Easy", "Too Much of Anything" and "Put The Money Down".Life House never came off, due to general shakiness on all fronts, and Peter wound up with a nervous breakdown and general exhaustion. "Pure And Easy" really should have been on Who's Next, given the 'one note' Baba nature of many of the tunes that did make it, but for various reasons wound up in Peter's version on Who Came First. The WHO's version on here, besides being more strident, forceful (most togood effect, but some ends do get brutilized) and upstanding, carries the "gas on the hillside" verse previously found only in the version found on The Genius Of Peter Townshend demo tapes bootleg.

"Too Much Of Anthing", yes, about temperance in all things, was produced, like all songs of this period, by Glyn Johns, who gave them the pristine, slightly sterile yet clear sound of Who's Next. "Too Much Of Anything" is a mellow (for the WHO) piece, with fine Roger Daltrey vocals. "Put The Money Down" is a gut-grabbing roughhouser reminiscent of Quadrophenia's tougher moments, done in the stalking loop-moog — drum beat style of "Join Together". This is about the mercenary magic lines 'Artists' Find Themselves In: "Before I Walk on the water, put the money down".

"Long Live Rock" closes the story, and is one of the rock is dead — long live rock tributes. Pretty much the hard hard knocker you'd expect. It doesn't levitate the phonograph, but it does indeed rock.

Final Wrap. Despite not having some unreleased greats like "Water" and the studio "Youn Man Blues", Odds & Sods is a keeper that will have fans swooning at the new insights, and will definitely interest new listeners. Although its obvious why most of these "parts of bigger ideas or at least grand dreams that didn't see the light of day" wound up in the can (a bit much repetition, not enough glittering times), what the WHO can yank out of the can is far better than most of the pretenders parading about today can offer. Most surely the best set of second-line items since The Mothers Of Invention's Weasels Ripped My Flesh.

THE LINK WRAY RUMBLE — LINK WRAY
(Polydor PD 6025)

Link Wray. Link. Missing Link. Link Wray is a missing link in the history of Rock and Roll!! You could tell on his comeback album in 1970, all that power and energy was there, building and growing. It even sounds like it was recorded in a cave in the dark ages. Hidden Power!! Now Link Wray is back with a rocker to equal all rockers. Country and city toughness come together in this twentieth century version of Rock and Roll. Leather coat! Flash guitar! Rumble! Rumble! Rumble! All Link Wray needs now to move into the future is a Killer band!

Link Wray is one of those figures from Rock and Roll's past who only emerges occasionally to reap any of the praise and recognition that they deserve. For you namedroppers out there, Link Wray is one of Peter Townshend's favorite guitarists, (Townshend writes the liner notes for this album, by the way). One of Wray's big moments came around 1958 when he recorded the hit, "Rumble", with His Ray Men for Swan records.

Link is back and he's managed to come up with one of the best, most straightforward Rock and Roll albums of the year. Just about everything on this album is pleasing. For one thing, Link wears a leather coat to add to the mythology. He also proves that his voice is just as exciting as anyone elses' and should use it to greater advantage. Above all, Link's guitar work is right out front, moving the album along with relentless power.

Highlights of the album include a good rocker about a special car, "Super 88", "It Was A Bad Scene", about the good old days, and "Rumble", Link's big hit, a devastating instrumental that will make your bones tremble and your teeth ache.

One disappointment, however, is "I got to Ramblin" (dedicated to the memory of Duane Allman), which sounds too much like the Almost Brothers themselves; hearing them once is more than enough. Don't do it, Link! Don't buy this inferior brand of Rock and Roll!

SOLO-CONCERTS — KEITH JARRETT (ECM 3-103517 ST) Playing Time: 129:19

This three-record set of live piano improvisations is a lot better than I would have expected, even of so stellar a talent as Keith Jarrett. And what I meant by that somewhat back-handed compliment is that I would expect six sides of solo improvisations by anybody to be a lot more redundant than the contents of this album. Furthermore, since this music was recorded in only four separate 'takes' it would have been impossible to edit without resorting to simply fading out and in, thereby losing the continuity which is so important to Jarrett's style.

But with the exception of these few minutes when the music backslides into the comparatively (an important word in this context) uninteresting boogie-woogie, with its somewhat numbing left-hand figures, Keith Jarrett is a prodigy; a weaver of dreams and a caster of spells. Beyond that, judging by his attitude when he was on Orchard Hill last month, I doubt whether he puts much stock in anyone's interpretations but his own. Therefore:

"The meaning (of the music on this album) for me is the truth involved in this: one artist creating spontaneously something which is governed by the atmosphere, the audience, the place (both the room and the geographical location), the instrument; all these being channelled consciously through the artist so that everyone's efforts are equally rewarded, although the success or failure belongs completely to the artist himself. The artist is responsible for every second.

"I don't believe in "Art". In that sense I am not an artist. I believe in Music to the extent that it was here before we were. In that sense, perhaps I'm not a musician. I don't believe that I can create, but that I can be a channel for the Creative. I do believe in the Creator, and so in reality this is His album through me to you, with as little in between as possible on this media-conscious earth."

In a more trivial vein, I'd like to conclude by saying that Keith Jarrett could well become one of the world's greatest living pianists, if he isn't already. Ho-hum.

NATIVE NORTH-AMERICAN CHILD: AN ODYSSEY — BUFFY SAINTE MARIE
(Vanguard VSD 79340) time 35:53

It is incredible how Ms. Sainte-Marie has been so overlooked by you and I for so long. For all the music she's made (all the great music she's made), she is definitely (to run categories along their lines) right Up There with all the oldies — Joni, Joan, Judy, and far, far ahead of the newies — Maria, Bonnie, Wendy and Sandy. She's never publicized in the mags, and even WMUA squeezes her in only during "The Woman's Show".

Native North-American is the commercial updating and melting down of Buffy's two double Best Of volumes, and as such, is necessarily sketchy, yet manages to combine some of her most famous songs ("Now That The Buffalo's Gone" "Little Wheel Spin and Spin" and "My Country 'tis of Thy People You're Dying"), commercial 'hits' ("Soldier Blue"), and the many varied aspects of her talents: Indian calls ("Isketayo Sewow"), tender ballads ("Moonshot"), scintillating rockers ("Native North-American Child"), her aforementioned Indian political tunes, impressionistic tunes ("Poppies"), women's independence ("It's My Way"), and tough tales ("He's An Indian Cowboy In The Rodeo").

The part of Buffy that puts most off is her shattering tremelo, with which she vibrates some tunes into new areas of depth and feeling. No, she doesn't always sing pretty. She's got a few too many brains to be so lame. Goddamn it, she's too good to have her last album cover be the biggest news about her in years.

A 'support your UMass dropouts' A.

IT'S THERE FOR GOOD!

THE SOUTHER-HILLMAN-FURAY BAND
(Asylum 7E-1006)

For anyone who has had it with glitter rock, this disc may be just the remedy for those pulling for a gradual recovery. Here's rock that shines from its worthy core — its music — sans all that Cooper-Bowie grotesqueness.

Although maybe just a trifle monotonous, there's possibly no such thing as filler material on either side. From the rather raunchy "Falling In Love" to the mellow "Deep, Dark and Dreamless", the vocals of one-time Byrd Chris Hillman and friends (three more Manassas alumni contributed to this piece) energize themselves to vibration degree. For a clearer definition of this kind of degree, try looking at the picture on the inside fold of the cover while listening — don't be surprised if you find yourself falling into it.

— Linda Sherksnis

IS IT IN — EDDIE HARRIS Atlantic SD 1659

Is It In by Eddie Harris goes in three directions: 1. A swinging funky-type of soul in which Harris & Co. repeat a tricky tune and then jam to it; 2. A slow melody with Harris displaying his individual talents and; 3. Eddie Harris testing his musical instruments in the Baja before their warantee expires.

Is It In features nothing new in the way of new musical concepts, and can be best described as conservative jazz. What Harris is really lacking is a theme with which he can tie his album together. "It's War" features the electric bongos and drums of Billy James, who does a real fine job of declaring war but fails to make it relevant and, like the rest of the album, becomes rather monotonous.

Is It In displays flashes of good bass with Rufus Reid, electric sax and piano with Harris, and guitar of Ron Muldrow — but these flashes come as often as the San Diego Padres. Duck recommends "Space Commercial" and "House Party Blues", should you want to try it out.

TAMPA RED, GUITAR WIZARD 1935-53
(Blues Classics BC 25) Time-40:24

This collection of Tampa Red's music is a great way to satisfy a large segment of blues fans. For the people who are into the 1950's Elmore James type of blues, there's something here. In fact, one cut on this album, "It Hurts Me Too", has often been credited to Elmore, but it's really Tampa's tune. For the folks interested in the Chicago scene in the late 30's and 40's, this album features well-known Chicago sidemen like Big Maceo and Blind John Davis. And finally, for the person who wants to dip into the blues, but not too deeply, this disc provides a fine overveiw as it covers three decades.

Tampa plays slide bottleneck and, both due to some of the old recordings and the emphasis on his vocals, the guitar playing is a bit of a disappointment, seeing as he is billed as "Guitar Wizard". The piano playing on this album though, is a standout. Otis Spann fans will dig the ivories of Blind John Davis, Johnnie Jones, and particularly Big Maceo Merriweather. Especially check out Big Maceo on "She's Love Crazy" and "Let Me Play With Your Poodle."

Tampa wrote all the songs, which vary from "The Birmingham Bessemer Blues" to his many songs of women trouble like "She's Love Crazy (and that's how I keep slim)".

Most of the songs on the album consist of Tampa's guitar and vocals, accompanied by an upright bass and piano. But as the album travels through the years, the sound fills out a bit until, at the end, people like Sonny Boy Williamson and Shakey Jake Horton join to give the fuller sound that we are accustomed to today.

Tampa Red's not well known, but for anyone with a blues interest, this album will not only give you Tampa and his songs, but a glimpse of the early bluesmen of Chicago to whom we owe so much.

Jennifer Scanlon as Desdemona, Clay Taliaferro as Othello in Limon's masterpiece, The Moor's Pavene, based on Shakespeare's Othello.

The Jose Limon Dance Company will perform at UMass Friday October 18 and Saturday, October 19 as part of the UMass Arts Council's Dance Series.

Limon was a renowned dancer and choreographer of modern dance. Although he died two years ago, his works are performed as originally created.

The eight selections, four different ones each evening, are among Limon's masterpieces. Selections are: Friday — Quartet, Carlota, The Traitor, Choreographic Offering. Saturday — La Malinche, The Exiles, The Winged, The Moor's Pavane.

Bowker Auditorium, 8:00 p.m. Tickets — Art Council Office, 125 Hertel Hall.

Appearing Monday, October 21 at Curry Hicks Cage will be the New Japan Philharmonic. The philharmonic gave its first performance in 1972 and consists of many original members of the Japan Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra. The evenings programme includes works by Prokofiev and Debussy.

Art Council Celebrity Series. 8:00 p.m. performance. Tickets — Arts Council Office, 125 Herter Hall.

UPCOMING:
Wendy Waldman — In Concert With Bill Staines
Saturday, Oct. 19, 1974
S.U.B. 9:00 p.m.

Some of you, who have noticed the name Wendy Waldman on posters around campus, might ask yourself, who is this Wendy Waldman? Well, you are probably the same people who asked who is Maria Muldaur?' last year Wendy hasn't been around as long as Maria has, but she definitely has the potential to make her a star. But getting back to Wendy, she was described in Rolling Stone as "a second generation Hollywood child, 23 years old, the daughter of a television and film composer, full of that chutzpah, know-how and sparkle of gay, mad Hollywood people. Wendy has a few rich, speedy friends who are well connected and who have been instrumental in aiding her career."

Wendy has been in a few bands out in L.A. and played many of the clubs there. She finally decided to make her own style: her music is a synthesis of show tunes, Delta Blues, Debussy, and rock 'n 'roll.

"The first album was an expression of my dreams" explains Ms. Waldman. Gypsy Symphony, her second album, takes up where Love Has Got Me left off. Besides her own two albums, Wendy is credited to two songs for Maria Muldaur's first album, one song for Maria's second, and did some backing vocals on Linda Ronstadt's album "Don't Cry Now." Even though Wendy is new to the national music world, she has been around and is continually proving herself. Definitely one performer you can't risk to miss.

Coming to UMass is a man by the name of Ralph Graham, who recently has played most of the big clubs in New England and is embarking on his first national tour. So far, he has met with rave reviews of both his album, Differently (Sussex SRA 8033), and his live show.

Graham's music is a mixture of all that is right in music, drawing strongly from soul and rock camps together, while maintaining a very strong personal identity. He sees himself as something of an innovator, what music biz biggies like to call a "cross over," or somebody who can appeal to anybody.

A full sound, strong backing band, as well as Graham's own visual presence, promise to make his Oct. 16-19 date at UMass a memorable occasion. Also appearing with Ralph Graham is the band Fate, whose single "Darlin" of Beach Boys fame is about to be distributed nationally. All in all, a chance to hear some newand different music which promises to be excellent.

Exploitation of self

Q: Are you going to make some more movies before then?

MC: Yeah. I've just signed a contract to do a film with Dino DiLaurentis. That's a film that will be shot part in Italy and part of it in New Orleans. It's called Mandingo. It's about the slave trade period. I personally haven't read the book myself, and you know, I've read part of the script. It's about this female entertainer who is involved in the slave trade, trading thing, and she gives a few performances in the film. It's a really good part, it's a lead part, one of the leading parts. And we're talking to a couple of other people about films. I don't really want to say because we have like three things going that aren't signed, and you know, we're doing these club dates in between films.

. . . You've been referred to as the Marilyn Monroe of the '70's, do you think you can fill that role? "Yes."

Q: So you're concentrating on films then.

MC: Films are our main interest. Doing the club dates in between to keep the name up you know. Gain momentum and experience, because I really dig live audiences and want to be a super good entertainer and the more I do it, the better I'll get.

Q: Is your movie going to be X-rated?

MC: No it's going to be R. They can't do a high budget film, because you know, they're just afraid to. There are a lot of X films about to be started in Hollywood. I think there's definitely going to be a marriage between the two industries where they'll be, you know, you'll see a dynamite movie and if there's sex in it, there'll be a minimal amount of sex, and that'll be it, at least it'll be there.

Q: You said there would be a marriage between the industries, recording and film?

MC: No, X films and legitimate films.

"If I didn't depend on men, then I wouldn't be where I am."

Q: Why do you think there's been such a boom in X-rated films?

MC: Well I think that obviously, society is changing and the attitudes of people in society are changing, the younger generation is bringing forth a lot healthier attitudes toward sex, a lot more open attitude.

Q: Who do you think your films appeal to, who's the target audience?

MC: I'd say couples mainly, probably between the ages of 25 to 50. But you know it's funny I see a lot of young couples going to see X-rated films, and I go, we go to see X-rated films occasionally, and they can really be a turn on.

Q: Was "Behind the Green Door" a turn on for you?

MC: Well it's kind of hard to be objective about my own film, but I would say so.

Q: What specifically? What aspects?

MC: The mere fact that there was no speaking. You were inside of this woman's head, everything that she was feeling hopefully you were feeling.

Q: Do you ever feel that you're being exploited?

MC: Yeah, I would say so, of course. And I'll tell you why. I live in a tri-level house, and I drive an XKE, and have a swimming pool, and if that's exploiting myself, well it's okay. Chuck Traynor (C.T.): What she's saying is that she's worth about a half million dollars, I mean now.

Q: You've been referred to as the new Marilyn Monroe of the 70's in an article in CRAWDADDY, do you think that you can fill that role?

MC: Yes.

Q: What do you think a sex symbol has to have these days. I mean, is there anything else she needs, besides a good body?

MC: Wow, that's a good question. Let's see, Could be the little innocence, the Ivory Soap and "Behind the Green Door," you know the controversy... I think that's what starts the sex symbol, I mean people want that controversy so they can say, oh she's really innocent, but look at what she did in that movie, "Behind the Green Door."

Q: Do you think that you're threatening other women with your image as a sex symbol?

MC: No.

WEEKEND

African Queen. Katherine Hepburn, as evangelical as ever, acts as guiding light for cigar chomping, rum swilling Humphrey Bogart as they travel down the sometimes, heaven-like, sometimes hell-like Amazon River. Classics like this should be consumed in moderate amounts whenever they make themselves available. At the Amherst Cinema along with Copa Cabana. ++½

Jeremiah Johnson. "He was a legend, as the ads say, but his real life name is "liver-eatin''' Robert Redford." A Sydney Pollack film of one lone, big and strong, gorgeous man against the wilderness. Re-released due to the recent jump in Redford's popularity. At the Campus Cinema 7 and 9. ++

Copa Cabana. A Marx Brothers film sans Harpo, Zeppo, and Chico. One of Groucho's solo efforts that will be of interest only to hard core Marxists. However, this film, billed along with African Queen proves to be a pleasant evening at the theatre at the Amherst Cinema. ++

The Longest Yard. A fleeting macho action flick where Burt Reynolds shows his cell block how fun it is to be in prison. Eddie Albert acts as warden, for all you Eddie Albert fans. Robert Aldrich directed. At the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. ++

Beyond the Valley of the Dolls. It says here that it is rated X. No children admitted. Stars Superwoman and the one and only Z-man. Marian Chambers would have something to say about this — see front page. At 7, 9, 11 Sunday. 000+ for softcore porno.

California Split. Elliot Gould and George Segal in a romp through some of Nevadas flashiest gambling casinos. In this, Robert Altman's first comedy since M-A-S-H, two characters get nowhere in the plastic entertainment capitol, and in view of all the finer efforts these two have produced, let's hope this one was just a small mistake. At the Campus Cinema. +

Airport '75. No better, no worse than Airport 72. Starts this weekend at the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. ++

Dr. Zhivago. Once again, this film is available for your Viewing Pleasure. The tale is a love story unfolding during the Russian Revolution. Breath-taking photography, capable acting, and a well-executed story that will coax an occasional tear from a Romantic's eye. See it, if you haven't already. At Mountain Farms 4, also appearing at Academy of Music, Northampton. ++++

The French Connection. William Friedkin's wham bam thank you ma'am police thriller. Stars Gene Hackman as the ultimate mad-dog cop, Popeye Doyle hunting down a heroin delivery in Noo Yawk. Find out what rocker panels area. Thursday 7, 9, 11 at CCA. ++

Gone With the Wind. The old classic which has stirred up the legions of decency in the Thirties. The big breakthrough in color film. It won a stew of Oscars. Showcase Cinemas, W. Springfield. ++++

Macon County Line. Before two rascally brothers report for induction into the Army, they decide to take one last mobile binge through the South. Their vacation stops at Macon where they come to grips with an always-on-his-toes sheriff, portrayed by Max Bayer (Jethro, of The Beverly Hillbillies fame, if your memory serves you). Also directed by Max Bayer. At the Mountain Farms. ++

Odessa File. John Voight leads in this video adaptation of Frederick Forsyth's spy novel. The director of this and of The Poseidon Adventure is one in the same — Ronald Neame. Chilling and mysterious, at the Showcase. +++

Play Misty For Me. One of the nice things about going to school here is that it allows you the opportunity to see all the celluloid that the various RSO groups can afford to rent. Those that can remember this film can probably remember the boredom that pervaded. The tune is alfully nice though. At the Graumans Chinese Theatre of Amherst, Mahar Auditorium. 7, 9 and 11 Sat. +++

Return of the Dragon. The Chow Mein Western lives, with this action packed Kung Fu adventure. Though the title might lead one to expect this film to be the sequel to Lee's last excursion on celluloid, Enter: The Dragon, it is not. As a matter of fact, it was filmed before the latter, and its redemption lies in this fact. No slow motion, special artsie-poopsie effects to cloud up the master in action. The plot line is marginal, but humorous in itself. Dig. Lee plays a country bumpkin called to Rome to stop the Mafia from muscling in on his father's Chinese restaurant business. Written and directed by Lee. At the Campus Cinema. +++

Walking Tall. A returning veteran finds his hometown has become over-run with gambling, drinking and carrying-on. He adapts Roosevelt's philosophy, and goes around pulverizing the infiltrators devices with a huge stick. The townspeople are happy with his work and draft him as their sheriff. And then his real troubles begin. Good film, guaranteed to straighten your posture. See. At the Mountain Farms 4. +++

2001: A Space Odyssey. Kubrick's best film to date. This bit of pop philosophy has become a classic for its special effects. As far as a story line goes, I'm at a loss. The film is either about something too cosmic for the common layman to understand, or a homosexual computer. See, with an altered consciousness, if you have such tendencies. ++++

Ford testifies no deal made

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Ford, in an unprecedented personal appearance before a congressional panel, said yesterday "there was no deal, period, under no circumstances," in his pardon of former President Richard M. Nixon.

Ford said that he granted the pardon for the benefit of the nation, not Nixon, and he is convinced he did the right thing at the right time.

"I wanted to do all I could to shift our attentions from the pursuit of a fallen president to the pursuit of the urgent needs of a rising nation," he said.

Ford said he hoped by coming before the House judiciary subcommittee and giving his account of the pardon personally he had "at least cleared the air" of the rumors and suspicions that have circulated about the pardon since he announced it Sept. 8.

But most subcommittee members said they still regarded many questions as unanswered, and Chairman William Hungate, D-Mo., said further hearings, with other withnesses, might be held after the November elections.

"I'm confident all the facts are not out," said Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., author of one of the two resolutions of inquiry that led to Ford's appearance.

Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N.Y., author of the other one, said more witnesses had to be called, particularly former White House chief of staff Alexander M. Haig, before Congress and the nation could be certain there was no deal involved in the pardon.

"This is only the beginning," she said.

Before submitting to brief questioning by the subcommittee members, Ford read for 45 minutes from a prepared statement in which he recounted to a nationwide radio-TV audience the steps leading up to the pardon.

He said a pardon was first mentioned to him by Haig at a meeting Aug. 1, a week before Nixon resigned, as one of six courses of action being considered in the White House. The meeting was prompted by the discovery that a tape Nixon had been withholding from the courts contained damaging evidence of his knowledge of the Watergate cover-up, Ford said.

"The substance of his (Haig's) conversation was that the new disclosure would be devastating, even catastrophic, insofar as President Nixon was concerned," Ford said. The tape was made public Aug. 5, producing overwhelming sentiment in Congress

Corker estimates CC back overtime pay

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

John Corker, diretor of the Campus Center, estimated yesterday that the money owned to students in the Campus Center in back overtime pay probably will run between $2,000 and $5,000 dollars.

Corker also said he hoped he could start sending information concerning payment of overtime to the Personnel Office next week so it can be processed.

Corker said one of the problems is how to determine what the policy and the practice are - how to minimize overtime occurences and properly pay for it when it occurs.

He said there is a problem in determing how to register the overtime on the computer. Corker said right now the computer is not set up to handle overtime.

He said that possibly the overtime can be registered on an hourly basis; 42 hours of work could be turned in as 43, with the extra hour being added to cover the time-and-a-half overtime pay rate.

Corker said they would have to also document their records to show that a student worked, for example, only 42 hours but it was registered as 43 since he had worked two hours overtime.

He said it would have to be a listing - documentation type of system.

"I would like to get some kind of system worked out so that we can pay the overtime. We can be strict and limit overtime, but when it occurs we will pay it," Corker said.

He said the money to pay the owed overtime will probably come from the operating departments.

Corker said they will have to absorb the payment in their total operation. He said they hope they can make up the money they will pay out through increasing sales, etc.

Corker said one of the questions he is trying to get clarification on is payment of overtime for over 40

Socialists view busing

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

While the National Guard is on alert in Ft. Bragg, North Carolina, seventeen students at UMass attended a meeting last night of the Socialist Party's views on busing. A similar gathering Thursday at UMass-Boston drew approximately 200-300 students from a much smaller student population.

Speaking for the Socialist Party were candidate for Attorney General in Massachusetts Jeanne Lafferty, and candidate for Governor in Georgia Vince Egan, filling in for Ollie Bivins (Socialist Candidate for Lt. Governor) who was originally scheduled to speak but did not show up.

Lafferty attacked the Democratic and Republican parties for their vagueness on political issues, charging that they could speak but essentially say nothing of consequence.

"We have a political platform that tells where we stand," she said, adding that the candidates do not even have a solid set of issues against each other quoting a recent headline in the Boston Globe which said "Belotti, Spalding, (Attorney General candidates) Agree, Disagree."

Lafferty stressed that the Socialist Party is "asking you to get active and become involved." In her opening speech she did not discuss the issue of busing but concentrated on accentuating the merits of the Socialist Party.

"It is necessary to organize massive power to put public pressure where needed," she stated.

Egan's speech was primarily concerned with busing. He stated that some people are trying to "give busing a democratic air."

He added that "People are not against blacks, just anti-busing," which he viewed as a cop-out. Egan said that the though of desegregating schools leads people to think of desegregating neighborhoods, and desegregating jobs, which has many social implications.

Election turnout exceeds last year

By FRITS GUERTSEN
Assistant News Editor

Election officials at yesterday's Commuter Assembly elections estimated that more than 600 students voted, three times as many as did so last semester.

In addition to the elected offices, the ballots also contained two referendum questions, both of which were almost unanimously approved by the students.

The expenditure of up to $25,000 for the Outreach and evening bus service was authorized with the provision that the Commuter Assembly Executive Council can appoint a committee, which would have a voice in the scheduling and routing of the buses.

It was also decided that all members of the Executive Council must state in writing any and all affiliations they have with interest groups and shall abstain from voting on issues which concern those groups.

The entire Coalition slate, consisting of Fran Taylor, John O'Keefe, David O'Connel, Charlie Atwood, Paul Duffin, Kenneth Irwin, and Barbara Bagley were elected. There will be a recount on votes for Martha Esquivel and Karen Mangan, as there was only a two vote difference.

Gage memo condemned

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

The Student Seante passed unanimously a motion condemning a memorandum from Vice-Chancellor Gage "as a direct attack on the representation and power of students in the University."

Cindy McGrath speaker of the Senate received the following memorandum from Dr. Gage Tuesday. In a meeting that afternoon, the executive committee wrote up a response to Gage. Both letters were read at the meeting Wednesday night.

The memorandum read:

"Beginning with the Undergraduate Student Senate meetings of this year, I propose to provide written feedback to all legislation passed. These official responses will be sent to you as Speaker in order to provide an official record of my response to Senate legislation. I propose to respond with one of the following four alternatives:

1) Noted: This response simply acknowledges that I have noted the action taken and that I consider it an action entirely within the purview of the Undergraduate Student Senate not subject to my approval, disapproval, or other response. An example might be the appointment of members to committees of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

2) Accepted: This response indicates that I have received and in general accept the action which has been taken. I may indicate that acceptance is total or that it applies in principle only, with possible reservations concerning the details of an action.

3) Returned for correction-reconsideration: This response will be used either when an apparent error has been detected or when I feel that the subject should be reconsidered before final action has been taken.

4) Rejected: This response will reflect my conviction that the action cannot be accepted."

The Student Senate letter read:

"We would like to thank you for your sincere interest in the actions of the Student Senate as indicated in your memorandum of October 11, 1974.

However, we were not aware that the Constitution and General Laws of the Student Government Association granted you with the power of veto."

McGrath said, "We are trying to assert our authority over areas that it is obvious that we should have control and over areas we assume control. According to Dr. Gage's letter, we can only do something if it is noted or accepted. This should not be."

McGrath said that discussions on problems with the student government had been discussed among the executive committee over the weekend.

"We have found that our hands are tied by the administration and haven't been able to get the students to say that the student senate was a good thing. Student rights that have been previous granted by student government have been challenged by the administration. They should have absolutely no say over what has been done," she said adding that the memorandum ignited the whole issue of student senate concernment with lack of power.

CC estimates back overtime pay hours in one week and over 8 in one day.

He said that there is no question that overtime must be paid for over 40 hours in one week since that is in the law.

Corker said, however, that as yet it has not been clearly determined whether overtime is due for hours worked in excess of eight in one day. He said he has asked the Personnel Office for a ruling on the law's interpretation of this point.

Corker said the question of whether overtime for over eight hours is a state law or if it is just University policy for students not to work over eight hours in one day has not been answered yet.

Corey, Surett, director of the Boston Wage and Hour Division Regional Office for the Federal Labor Department, told the Collegian yesterday morning that students are not due overtime pay for hours in excess of 8 worked in one day.

Surett said state employees, which includes student workers, are covered by Federal Labor Laws such as the Fair Labor Standards Act but are exempt from the state labor laws.

He said state employees are covered under state Civil Laws but the Federal Government takes responsibility for them in regard to Labor laws.

Thus, since the Fair Labor Standards Act only allows overtime pay for hours in excess of 40 in one week and makes no provision for hours worked in excess of eight in one day, Surett said there is no daily overtime in regard to student employees.

Corker told the Collegian the time cards that Campus Center has date back to July 1973, covering a 16 month period.

Surett said under the Statute of Limitations on the Fair Labor Standards Act the Campus Center—will have to pay all overtime owed over the past 24 months if an investigation by his office determined they had broken the law.

"To say there should be no overtime is no solution," said Corker. He would like to minimize overtime but is not opposed to paying it when it does occur.

Corker said Timothy Cox, Campus Center Personnel Director, pointed out the overtime problem to him over the summer. Corker said he met with the Campus Center staff at that time to stop the practice.

In regard to its still occurring after the summer, Corker said, "I have to take the responsibility in that I didn't follow it up." He said he is asking now to see all time cards having any kind of discrepancy.

Provost gathers data on faculty work hours

By DENNY MATTEAU

Data regarding faculty working hours is being gathered by the Provost's office to be sent to the state legislature by November 15. This is in compliance with a ruling passed by the legislature last May, which stated that all professors must spend a minimum of nine hours "in contact" with students.

When the ruling was made, fears were raised that "in contact" meant hours spent in formal classroom or lecture hall presentations, and that this would mean an end to various types of independent study and special academic counseling programs, such as BDIC, which have been an increasingly important part of the university experience.

However, these fears have apparently been unfounded, since the ruling gives responsibility of interpreting "contact" to the Board of Trustees. A memo from Vice Chancellor Robert Gluckstern to all department heads set forth contact hour guidelines as follows:

Nature of Instruction	Contact Hour Equivalent
a) Formal Undergrad classes	actual number of hours
b) Formal graduate classes	1.5 x number of hours
c) One-to-one counseling directed study, honors, etc.	0.5 x number of individual students
d) Master's thesis supervision pervision	0.5 x number of individual students
e) Doctoral thesis supervision	1.0 x number of individual students
f) Service on doctoral thesis committees	0.25 x number of individual students

Chancellor Randolph Bromery, when asked by the Collegian last night if the contact-hour requirement has had a tangible effect on campus life, said "When all the data's in, they (the legislators) will find that faculty members here are carrying full workloads."

"As it stands, the law reads that the board of trustees will decide what constitutes a contact hour, and the board recognizes the value of programs involving individual counseling," he said.

Martin J. Miller, chairperson of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee, reacted similarly saying, "The memo lays out the guidelines very clearly as to what's expected on campus, and it gives both traditional and nontraditional programs room to breath."

Both Miller and Bromery said they felt the legislature, in passing workload requirements, was expressing Vague fears that the faculty are taking a free ride, and that the legislature was barking up the wrong tree.

"They should have been looking at the quality of teaching." said Miller.

Student Senate passes motion for task force

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

The Undergraduate Student Senate passed two motions calling for a task force for "organizing and directing student energies toward a real affected student voice" and the convening of a general meeting of SGA within the week.

Also passed at the Wednesday night meeting was the Residential Life Governing Board proposal with four added amendments.

The task force motion for the purpose of organizing students is, according to Cindy McGrath, Speaker of the Senate, "a way of getting student participation and involvement."

The general meeting motion is to assist "students in developing power and responsibility and to solicit the help and energy of all students in development of the task force to unify students into a body with real bargaining and determining power."

This meeting, which involves area government presidents as well as student senate, does not usually convene except for election of SGA president, according to McGrath. The meeting will take place Wednesday at 8 p.m.

The Residential Life Governing Board proposal which gives the students responsibility of decisions affecting the dorms and food services was passed unanimously. One of the amendments repealed sections giving the Chancellor power to review and or veto any action of the Board.

The proposal was voted on without the approval of Ken Dean, director of Residential Life, because "there should be a board that has ultimate policy decisions and before the administration can make decisions, they will have to get our approval," said Senator Matt Burns.

Jackson draws on SU walls

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Reporter

"See Kris Jackson make a fool of himself by drawing on the walls of the Student Union Gallery" the poster in front of the Student Union read.

Actually, he didn't draw directly on the walls, like a graffiti artist, but on strips of wrapping paper which stretched across three walls, resembling a huge comic strip.

"The purpose of this exhibit is to provide me with more of an ego trip than I already have" the Collegian cartoonist said.

One student complimented Kris on his cartoon about a Catholic bishop's horny dreams. "I've been to Catholic schools all my life and I saw a lot of hypocrisy" he said reminiscently.

Kris said someone at a party suggested he do a cartoon on the pope's sex drive, but he decided that the pope was too exalted to satirize.

Kris drew a cartoon on a battle between the forces of good and the forces of evil, (represented by Nixon.) "Nixon's too good a character to abandon" he said.

Kris became aware of his ability to draw in 1972, while he was in the Air Force. "I saw some Zap Komics and said 'hey, I can do this, it's just lines on paper". When he started college, Kris was a chemistry major, switched to psychology and finally to art.

A skyline was drawn, but it wasn't the UMass skyline. "I'm not going to draw the UMass skyline because it's already a caricature" he remarked.

Audience participation was welcomed and several other artists added ink to the wrapping paper.

Another Nixon cartoon entitled "The ascension into heaven of Richard Nixon" showed our former president rising from the ground, both arms extended, flashing a 'V for Victory" sign from each hand.

During the course of the exhibit, Kris used up five marking pens. "I've had a very good time... I've met a lot of people... I've kept my hand moving all day".

Rents relate to cost increases

Residential Life
By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

"If we maintain the current level of services, rents go up as prices go up. If services are reduced, rent would stabilize," according to Roger D. Cruff, Assistant Director for Administrative Services at UMass.

The price of living on campus in the dormitories has not gone up from last year, but this may not be the case in the near future. There are no definite rent increases scheduled at this time but rent goes up as our costs rise, just like any other consumer, said Cruff.

In addition to the fixed yearly debt service payment, costs of utilities, labor and materials all come out of the budget. The budget of Residential Life has not yet been fixed for this fiscal year due to the fact that Residential Life as it now exists is a new department which started officially on July 1 of this year. Budget and many other matters are still pending.

Cruff added that a major portion of expenditures are on payroll. For example, when repairs are needed in a dorm residential life must work through the Physical Plant.

"Involved in this are costs of labor, materials etc. If overtime is required it works against our budget," he said.

The funds used for the budget are all state funds plus student fees with the exception of money which is used to pay students on work-study which is given by the Federal Government in the form of Financial Aid.

When questioned about the high cost of dorm living Cruff replied, "We are aware of our comparable cost to those of living off campus, we don't want to price ourselves out of the market."

A great deal of time and effort are devoted to trying to place students in their preferred residential area. This is not always possible, but a student's choice is always considered seriously and honored whenever possible, he said.

"Students' money could be saved and it would be easy to assign students methodically to each residential area, a decision as to whether to give up room choosing would have to be made by the students," Cruff stated.

He added, "At the moment there is no central student organization with which Residential Life can routinely deal. There should be more and better communication between the staff and the students."

Cruff, a graduate of UMass who has worked on campus for about 5½ years and has just assumed his new position feels that the University is "truly a community" and "the time has passed for constant conflict between the staff and the students, they should work together."

Cruff said that Residential Life is concerned with all aspects of life on campus. "Our intent is better efficiency and responsiveness to student affairs, we want to solve problems rather than create them."

Residential Life handles all problems concerning dormitories and dorm living if they cannot be handled within the residential areas, and also problems pertaining to Food Services, etc.

"We are removed from everyday life here. It is good to hear from the students- they are who we're working for, if the students trust the faculty and staff, and vice-versa, we'd all be better off. It's the element of trust that we're missing. I don't know how far from it we are now" Cruff said.

Law enforcement students aid police

Officer Roy said "the job gives me a feeling for police work."

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

Law enforcement students are now working as the eyes and ears of the Amherst Police department.

"My job is to observe and witness; not take the initiative to solve a crime or make an arrest" said Jeffery Roy, a junior criminal justice major at Westfield State College.

"Two students through observation and alertness helped apprehend two alleged felons" said Chief of Police Donald Maia.

These students are Community Service Officers (CSO) and walk the central business district beat. Their job revolves around public assistance, traffic direction, parking enforcement, pedestrian safety and general security.

CSO's are sworn members of the police department and are allowed to make arrest when immediate action is necessary. According to Maia the CSO's in Amherst are the only ones in Massachusetts who have the power of arrest.

However, "The CSO's do not carry fire arms nor are they allowed in drinking establishments or in a cruiser" said Rita Pawloski, a graduate of Holyoke Community College and presently a candidate for a bachelor's degree in criminal justice at Western New England College.

Eugene Toczyclowsky, a salesman at Thompson Clothing Store said "I think CSO's are good because they take care of the light duties of regular police officers in terms of ticketing, traffic direction and generally giving assistance."

The CSO's keep the cars moving by issuing tickets and handling traffic problems which is good for business said Carl Peterson, owner of Bolles Shoes.

The work study program for law enforcement students began last July. "It was prompted by the department and not by need and also to give an advantage to young people in the area who have been unable to work on police forces due to their age," said Maia. Police officers have to be 21 years old.

"These two years experience may be worth more than my diploma" said 18-year-old Larissa Anderson, a freshman at Westfield State College.

There are eight regular CSO's, six are male and two are female. Also, there are four alternatives.

There was no sex discrimination and "the department is ready and willing to give me the same job as any other CSO" said Anderson.

Anderson said she didn't know how she would react in a violent situation because she was never in that situation. Although she was taught self-defense, she said "men have been street fighting since they were little kids and this is one plus they have over women."

Toczyclowsky said "there should be no distinction between men and women in police work except when there is an increase of danger of an assailant."

If the program is successful the CSO's will become an integral part of the department said Maia.

Experienced officer sights many departmental changes

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

"Back in those days, we didn't have uniforms. I use to have to borrow a pair of the Captain's pants. There have been a lot of changes in the department since I've been here," said Bill Pendergast, who has been a patrolman in the UMass. Department of Public Safety for the last nineteen years.

Pendergast said the main difference was in the department's relation with the students.

"Things were different when there were only five thousand students here. Our contact with them was more personal. I used to know about two-thirds of the students," continued Pendergast.

Because there were less people, there was less vandalism, he said.

According to Pendergast, when he first joined the force, there were three other patrolmen, besides himself. At present, the force consists of thirty patrolmen.

Due to the decreased number of patrolman, Pendergast said the shifts were much longer.

"We used to work double shifts all the time, alternating between the four of us," he said.

In addition to the thirty patrolmen, the department now also employs two female patrol women. Pendergast said he thought it was a nice change to have women around.

"It's a lot more interesting."

In the past, the UMass Police employed night watchmen to patrol the buildings and check out the fire hazards. After 2 a.m. there was only one patrolman on duty on campus, and one on duty in Amherst, said Pendergast.

When asked about UMass Police relations with the Amherst Police, Pendergast said: "We used to be a lot closer with the Amherst Police, but we've grown and they've grown also."

During the past nineteen years, the department has moved its location four times, he said. The first location was in an old army barracks, that has since been converted to Tillson Farm.

"Our next move was into the present photo laboratory, and then into the ROTC building on campus," added Pendergast.

About the department's present location, he says there's "really been an improvement you can see."

Financially speaking, Pendergast feels they've come a long way. Today, there is better equipment because of more money and more advanced technology. Instead of the five cruisers and three staff cars currently used by the department, the police had only one cruiser then.

Police color guard awaits homecoming

By RICK DUCEY
'Staff Reporter

The "Homecoming Parade" scheduled for October 25 will mark a true homecoming for the UMass Police color guard contingent. This event will be their first appearance on campus.

The creation of the color guard in mid-1973 was to an invitation to march in a local parade according to Frank Mazzei, UMass Police Sergeant.

For the ceremony seven officers from the UMass police volunteered to march. Most of the equipment had to be borrowed rom the campus ROTC detachments, Mazzei said.

What began as a "one shot affair" has ballooned into one of the most popular additions to parades in many surrounding towns, and as far away as Everett, he added. Since their first parade, they have been involved in more events before a total of an estimated three quarter million spectators. The coming year looks to be even busier.

The start off their inventory, the Amherst VFW post has kindly donated among other things an American and a state flag. The uniform parts, consisting basically of; combat boots, white scarf, white gloves and white decorative cords - are furnished through the officer's personal money, Mazzei said.

In their possession now also is a handmade banner identifying the troup. This was designed and made by one of the officer's wives. They would however greatly appreciate the donation of a departmental flag. In time they hope to be better equipped and become involved in more events to be able to add to the overall enjoyment of whatever parade or event they might appear in.

Police officers Lou Anderson, Pete Seinkiewicz, Dick Huntoon, Butch Hawkins, Dick Grader, John Schmitter and Jim Turati led by Sgt. Mazzei are very much looking foward to their first march on home turf.

Residential exchange offers alternatives

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

How can a UMass student get all the advantages of a small college and a large university at the same time?

If the Five College Student Coordinating Board's Residential Exchange Program is successful, several UMies will have what Residential Exchange Chairperson Brenda Goodman calls, "an alternative to eight semesters in one school".

The program, according to Goodman, will allow students in the Five College areas to live at one of the other colleges while remaining registered at their home institution.

"Residential Exchange offers an ideal opportunity to the students in the Five Colleges to participate in the living experience at one of the other colleges in the valley," said Goodman.

According to a recent poll taken at UMass, 95 per cent of the 288 respondents to the questionaire said they though a residential exchange should be made available to the students in the valley.

Fifty-six percent said they would be interested in participating for one or two semesters.

"The poll was taken, said Sue Kerins, member of the Residential Exchange Committee," because we need good student response."

All of the details have not been smoothed out yet, said Goodman, but plans are to have the program in operation by next semester.

"The exchange would have to be on a one to one basis the same number coming to one institution as the number leaving."

The plan is to have the exchange student pay the tuition and fees of his home institution, so there will be no financial difficulties, said Goodman.

The program will be presented, for approval, to the Deans of Students of the Five Colleges at a meeting on Oct. 25.

"Right now we're looking for interested people," added Goodman. She urged everyone interested in participating in the exchange to attend a meeting at 6:45 next Wed. in Campus Center 805.

Tape suggests Nixon tried to get Ford to halt probe

WASHINGTON [UPI] — On a White House tape played publicly for the first time yesterday, President Richard M. Nixon siad House Republican leader Gerald R. Ford should try to head off a House investigation of the 1972 Watergate break-in.

"Jerry's really got to lead on this. He's got to really lead," Nixon said on the tape played to the 12 jurors in the Watergate cover-up trial.

The tape of Nixon's Sept. 15, 1972, conversation with his aides H.R. Haldeman and John W. Dean III was played amid a flurry of last-minute motions by the defendants in a vain effort to prevent the tapes from being used as evidence.

Every person in the silent courtroom - the jury, Judge John J. Sirica, the five defendants, their lawyers, and the 100 persons in the audience - wore earphones to hear the tape. The jury and reporters had transcripts to follow the conversation more easily.

The House Judiciary Committee, during its impeachment inquiry, and the Nixon Whte House previously had released transcripts of the conversation, so little new of substance was learned.

Dut the tapes revealed impressions.

Dean, who testified moments earlier that he had spoken with Nixon previous to that day only at a half-dozen ceremonial occasions, grew in confidence and spoke much more frequently as the 49-minute conversation progressed, the tape showed.

Haldeman, the White House chief of staff with a reputation for being stern and all-business, laughed frequently on the tape.

Nixon clearly was in charge. The recorded conversation took place on the afternoon following the first series of indictments in the burglary of Democratic National Commitee headquarters.

Ford's name came up as Nixon, Dean and Haldeman discussed an investigation that Rep. Wright Patman, D-Tex., chairman of the House Banking and Currency committee, was conducting.

"Uh, what about Ford? Do you think so? Do you think he can do anything with Patman?" Nixon asked.

"I don't think anybody can do anything with Patman," Dean said. "But if, if Ford can get the minority Republican members, uh,together on that one, it's going to be a lot..."

"...But you see, Widnall (Rep. William B. Widnall, R-N.J.) - let's take somebody - Jerry could talk to him," Nixon said. "Put it down, uh, Jerry should talk to Widnall and, uh, just brace him, tell him I thought it was (unintelligible) start behaving."

John J. Wilson, Haldeman's lawyer, said he would object to "every line" of the White House tapes as being hearsay evidence.

for Nixon's impeachment.

Ford said other steps being considered on Aug. 1 were fighting impeachment to the end, resignation at once, resignation at a later date, a temporary stepdown by Nixon, trying to get a censure vote as an alternative to impeachment, and a Nixon pardon of himself.

Ford said Haig did not advocate any of the options and that he withheld any recommendation of his own until he had time for further thought.

Ford said the subject of a pardon for Nixon was not brought up again until his first news conference as president on Aug. 28, when he was advised to prepare for questions about it. The questions came and Ford said he would not make any decision until he saw what the special prosecutor and the courts would do.

"Shortly afterwards," Ford told congressmen, "I became greatly concerned that if Mr. Nixon's prosecution and trial were prolonged, the passions generated over a long period of time would seriously disrupt the healing of our country from the wounds of the past."

Ford said he sought legal advice from White House counsel Philip Buchen and other lawyers on his staff about the pardon powers of a president, but otherwise consulted no one about it. He also said no one recommended he grant the pardon.

Congress passes Turkey aid bill limiting supplies for Cyprus

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Ending a major confrontation with the White House, Congress passed and sent to President Ford yesterday a measure to continue U.S. military aid to Turkey until Dec. 10 so long as no new U.S. "implements of war" are sent to Cyprus.

Ford was reported by George H. Mahon, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, to consider the provision to be an interference in Turkey's internal affairs but was willing to sign it. Ford had indicated he would accept it "very, very, very reluctantly."

The measure was forwarded to the President following passage by voice vote in the Senate. The Senate acted after the House voted 191 to 33 to approve the provision which was attached to a "continuing resolution" for temporary funding of several government agencies.

Passage of the continuing resolution, and the Turkish aid rider, cleared the way for a congressional recess which has been postponed since last Friday because of the dispute.

The unravelling of a stalemate between the White House and Congress came early in the afternoon when the House failed to override President Ford's second veto of a similar measure which would have banned shipment to Cyprus of any U.S.-supplied military aid.

Under the compromise adopted by Congress, Turkey will be able to resupply its 40,000 troops on strife-torn Cyprus with ordinary maintenance materials, but not with weapons, ammuniton or other American "implements of war."

Ford appeared to have given the most in the final compromise. He had favored continuing U.S. military aid to Turkey without restrictions on its use in an effort to get Turkey to begin negotiations on a peaceful solution to the Cyprus conflict.

Rep. Elford Cederberg, R-Mich., senior Republican on the House Appropriations Commitee which drafted the new compromise, said before the resolution was submitted to a vote by the House and Senate that the President told him: "I will accept this very, very, very reluctantly."

Announcement of the agreement came close on the heels of Ford's second veto of aid cutoff legislation and the House vote on a motion to override him at 161 to 83.

Boston attendance climbs while police patrol quiet schools

BOSTON [AP] — Attendance was high and schools were quiet yesterday as police patrolled in force, National Guardsmen waited on alert and federal troops stood ready to enter the city in case of trouble.

The mayor's office said school attendance was 76.4 per cent of projected enrollment citywide, up substantially from Wednesday's 66.7 per cent, despite a continuing white boycott at some schools and continuing tension among students.

A school department official said black attendance at South Boston High School's three buildings, in a predominantly white area, had climbed steadily in the last two weeks to a high of 404, or more than 50 per cent of the projected enrollment of 797.

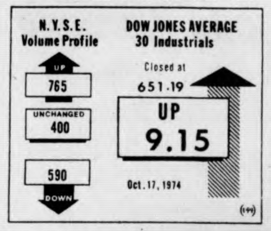
White attendance there was 338, or about 20 per cent of the projected enrollment of 1,539.

Just one black student went to high school in South Boston Oct. 7 and 8 after a massive anti-busing parade in the area and several incidents of violence.

Joseph Crowley, 15, who was stabbed in the chest at the school on Tuesday, was released yesterday from Carney Hospital.

School officials checked arriving students for weapons at Hyde Park High, and Headmaster John Best said one student was suspended when what looked like a table leg was found in his sleeve.

A spokesman said no body search was involved, but that bags and purses were examined. Several students declined to be searched and did not enter the school.



Sirica seeks report on Nixon's condition

WASHINGTON [UPI] — U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, while saying he thinks former president Richard M. Nixon should testify in person at the Watergate cover-up trial, yesterday postponed a decision of whether to compel his appearance pending a further report on Nixon's health.

He ordered Nixon's lawyers to submit a report on Nixon's medical condition within three weeks and said he would decide on the basis of that whether to send a team of doctors to California to examine Nixon on the court's behalf.

"It would be helpful to the defendants and the government if he progresses to the point where it would not injure his health for him to appear here in open court," Sirica said.

Sirica expressed his views at a brief hearing on motions by Nixon's attorneys to quash subpoenas for him to testify at the trial of five former aides accused of covering up the Watergate scandal.

Nixon lawyer Herbert J. Miller Jr., said the former president is recovering well from his phlebitis condition and the "prognosis is very good" that within three weeks to a month he would no longer claim ill health as a bar to testifying.

Study proposes cutting energy levels with rationing, research

WASHINGTON [AP] - A $4 million Ford Foundation study said yesterday the nation should cut the growth of energy demand in half and could, if necessary, achieve zero energy growth after 1985.

Such cuts can be made through improved efficiency without sacrificing economic growth, said the final report of the foundation's Energy Policy Project.

Short-range issues such as President Ford's policy to reduce oil consumption one million barrels a day by voluntary conservation were not considered in this study.

But project director S. David Freeman told reporters he considered the present administration policy "grossly inadequate."

"I have very little confidence this will produce much in the way of results," he said. "We ought to try to cut one million barrels per day forthwith ... we ought to be building up stockpiles."

If the nation is serious about saving fuel immediately, Freeman said, it will have to adopt some kind of fuel rationing. He favored coupon rationing, saying that energy taxes or price hikes are unfair, hurting the poor more than the rich.

Sharply questioning many present or contemplated government policies, the project's final report urged a large shift in emphasis and funding from programs to develop huge new energy sources toward programs to cut energy growth.

It proposed four main energy-saving steps:

— Mandatory minimum standards for automobile fuel economy.

— A federal loan program helping home owners and small businessmen to finance insulation and other energy-saving improvements.

— Changes in electricity rates to end the special discounts that encourage industries to use more electricity.

— A shift of federal research money, now mainly invested in energy production, toward energy conservation technology.

The study stopped short of recommending zero energy growth, but did urge further study of the idea "as an undertaking of the highest priority."

Under "zero energy growth," the nation's energy consumption would stop increasing yearly and instead remain constat, but the study said this need not hurt living standards.

GNP declines

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The Gross National Product fell into its longest slump in 14 years through September, according to figures released yesterday. But Commerce Secretary Frederick B. Dent said the economy was only "sideways waffling" and not in a recession.

The value of the nation's output of goods and services declined 2.9 per cent in real terms for the third quarter.

The GNP dropped 7 per cent in the first quarter and 1.6 per cent in the second quarter, resulting in the longest economic slump since four quarters of decline in 1960-61.

The traditional definition of a recession has been two quarters of decline in the real GNP. But Dent told a news briefing that the GNP decline was not broad enough to qualify for a recession.

Nixon seeks tapes

WASHINGTON [AP] - Former President Richard M. Nixon filed suit yesterday seeking to force the government to give him possession and control of millions of tapes and documents accumulated during his five-and-one-half years in the White House.

Nixon alleged that the government has failed to live up to an agreement for the swift transfer of his presidential materials to California.

Rocky's wife has cancer surgery

NEW YORK [UPI]- Nelson Rockefeller's wife Happy underwent an operation for the removal of a cancerous left breast yesterday and surgeons reported her chances for survival were "excellent."

The four-and-a-half hour operation, termed a "modified radical mastectomy" was performed at Sloan-Kettering Institute.

Vice president - designate Rockefeller later was at his wife's bedside as the attending surgeon, Dr. Jerome A. Urban, told a news conference that Mrs. Rockefeller's "chances are excellent for a full recovery - over 90 per cent in 10 years."

Maps and suggestions for activities in Montreal will be provided by the tour escort on the way up. The balance of the afternoon and evening are free for your choice of activities, including sight seeing at historic and famous spots, dining, visits to night clubs, movies, plays, and just plain enjoying a visit in this glittering, second-largest French-speaking city in the world.
Departure on Monday won't be until 3:00 PM, allowing a full morning plus early afternoon for additional activities of your choice. And since it's a weekday in Montreal (not a holiday), many stores will be open Monday which were not on Sunday.
A different route will be used on the return trip to the college area, following the Adirondack Northway down past Lake Champlain and Lake George, skirting Albany and Pittsfield, to reach your destination with expected return about 9:30 PM. $34.50
Note: Price is quoted per person, twin basis. We must ask that those booking and sharing a room purchase their tickets at the same time. We regret that single bookings cannot be accepted.

Faculty votes for coeducation

The Faculty Tuesday night reafirmed its stand for coeducation at Amherst. By a vote of 95-29, the Faculty adopted a modified Committee of Six motion which also conceded a willingness to make sacrifices for the cause.

"We have an obligation to inform the Trustees on where we stand," Professor Donald Pitkin told the Faculty in presenting the Committee of Six motion. "It is an inherently political issue and we should confront it in that particular way.

In a calm, direct, slender three-hour meeting, the Faculty debated how to fulfill a political imperative without imperiling the final verdict on coed. Some faculty members expressed fear that a too strongly political statement for coeducation at this time might lead to an alumni backlash. If the alumni leaders were to decide at this time to poll their constituents, some Faculty members posited, a heavy no-coed sentiment from them could make the Trustee decision much harder.

If C&C is out of vodka, there may be good reason. Amherst, in conjunction with M.I.T., hosted the first Soviet-American Conference on the Russian Language this week, a landmark in the age of detente.

Attending the week-long conference, split between Amherst and Cambridge, were six top Soviet scholars, specialists in the field of teaching Russian to foreigners, and some 500 leading Americans in the field from every major college and university.

"The mood was marvelous--there was a good human feeling," said Russian Professor Jane Taubman. "There was a total unity of purpose and interest. All we cared about was how to teach Russian better."

The conference was chaired by Amherst Professor Dan Davidson and Harvard's Richard Brecht.

An exchange of ideas was productive because, according to Taubman, "We have sophisticated, modern linguistic approaches, and they have Russian--current, colloquial Russian."

Note: This is the first issue of a new series of articles that will be published weekly by the Collegian concerning the Five College area news. Mt. Holyoke College news doesn't appear in this week's wrap up as they have just returned from a vacation and "nothing's happened".--E. Patrick McQuaid

Flies postpone center opening

By BILL PRICE
Hampshire Climax Correspondent

A rather unusual 'fly' problem has caused postponement of the opening of the new Robert Crown Recreation Center at Hampshire. The nearly two million dollar center is using a new type of plastic for the gym flooring. The plastic is extremely toxic when being 'poured'. It seems that all the flies trapped in the building during this process, suffocated and fell to the wet floor. They were embedded in the new flooring until late last week, when workmen 'Drilled' them out and applied a new layer and the Center is expected to open a week late on Tuesday, October 22.

Debate on revision of Hampshire's Constitution has been slowed by the school's Academic Council. Academic Council is discussing a report issued by a governance review committee rather than voting on each of the motions coming out of report. This could hurt the slated November 5th college-wide meeting on governance review by creating confusion over how the process should proceed. It was hoped that each of Hampshire's governing councils would vote on each of the motions, giving some sort of feedback on each to the Constitutional Reform Committee. The Committee would then make up either a new constitution or admendments to the old one for the Hampshire Community to consider. Some of the motions call for changes in allocation of power away from the President's Office, election of Academic and Community Deans by respresentative governing groups, and a Business-Administration reorganization.

A proposal that calls for "SMOKING . . . TO BE PROHIBITED at planned group meetings attending to any official business at Hampshire College" has been put before the school's Community Council. If passed it would effectively restrict smoking to non-public gatherings at the College. It was started by students who felt their rights as non-smokers disregarded by those at Hampshire that smoke. One student writing to the school paper, Climax, said, "It bothers me to see people smoke, knowing how harmful it is. But to force that on those of us who have chosen not to smoke... it just isn't fair." Action is expected from Community Council within a few weeks.

Circus raises money

By Carolyn Hull-Ryde
Smith Sophian Correspondent

Sophia's Circus, held behind the library on Burton lawn, drew a crowd of more than 600. The circus with food booths, games, and acts, is held annually at Smith. The proceeds this year totalled $1,595 and went to SOS (Service Organizations of Smith). The last freshman fire drill occured just before the autumn recess in Scott gym. Freshmen traditionally have been required to jump out of a three storied wood frame on a fire rope. After this year such ropes will be discontinued in all Smith house.

President Mendenhall announced plans to appoint a Director of Public Relations for the college. His decision was attributed to the upcoming college centennial celebration. The new policy reversed his former attitude that "no news is good news."

Smith centennial events, lectures, art exhibits, and plays will take place Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday (Oct. 21-23).

Astronomy Department gives lecture

Dr. E.R. Harrison of UMass will speak at the first of a series of open houses sponsored by the Five College Astronomy Department at Amherst College. Harrison will speak on "The Expanding Universe" on Friday Oct. 18 at 7:30 p.m. in Room 305 of the Webster Biology Building.

This series of open houses will occur on the third Friday of each month. Each program will begin with a brief lecture on some topic of astronomical interest, and will be followed by a trip to either the Amherst College Observatory (if the sky is clear) or the Amherst College Planetarium (if it is cloudy).

The open houses are free to the pub

Campus Comments

By JIM PAULIN

In an attempt to obtain equal quality education for all the children of Boston, students are being bused out of their neighborhoods into schools elsewhere in the city. In the wake of this, violent mobs, especially in South Boston have stoned the buses and fights have broken out in the schools. Campus Comments wanted to learn what peoples opinions on busing were. Should federal troops be brought in?

The question-what do you feel about Busing in Boston-is it justified? What about the violence?

Dave Bohn-freshman from Springfield living in Hamlin-Northeast majoring in Engineering.

I don't think it's necessary...but since it's a law they've got to enforce it...I think the present situation is pretty bad...it's ridiculous that they had to bring troops in...the people should just accept it.

Joan Schlottenmier-freshman from Wellesley living in Crampton-Southwest.

I know it's pretty bad...I don't think federal troops are necessary...whenever the government starts getting into these things I get scared...I know Judge Garrity personally and I know his family...he's a fantastic judge and he's got an excellent mind...I think he'll resolve it and I don't think he should back down.

John Rivera-Freshman from Southbridge living in Dickinson.

I think they should move in federal troops and the sooner the better so they can stop the violence...the question is not about prejudice or anything like that...I think they should move in federal troops so that quality education can be reached for both parties involved.

Vince O'Connor-junior from San Francisco, Ca. living in Leverett majoring in Political Economy.

If people expect change to come about without some disruption, its impossible...Politicians have catered to racism in South Boston...I appreciate community identity, but I think it's unfortunate that identity has been twisted to be built on racism.

Pat Judd-Freshman from Hartford living in Amherst majoring in Anthropology.

I don't think it's necessary...even people involved in it don't have a sense of community when they have to be bused...in the town I'm from, people aren't bused and they're much happier because they have a sense of community.

Isaiah Brown-Carpenters apprentice living in Riverglade Apartments in Amherst.

It's got a lot of people stirred up...I think federal troops would be better than the National Guard because the National Guard is from the community and it's more than likely that they would take sides...I support the busing because it's good for the kids to have different experiences in different schools...I'm fully behind it.

Letters to the editor

Agrees with Weiss

To the Editor:

Fred Weiss' article "Living and Learning" was pointed out to me by my neighbor, Galen, as it summed up the feelings we had expressed in a conversation the day before. It is comforting when feeling a bit lost in everything to be reminded that your struggle is a common one.

Everyone is faced with the problem of integrating the many facets of his life, of living for the distant future, tomorrow, the moment, while keeping sight of the past and its significance. Certainly we must learn to enjoy the moment, for there will be no magic day when the struggle, the learning, will stop so that we may say, "We may now enjoy". If life is to be enjoyed this notion of enjoyment is twisted. This is not a difficult thought, but in the midst of running around achieving it is often forgotten.

Those who have not left for the country and understand themselves to be a member of a very large family which they would like to be of beneficial influence to find a tremendous task before them. As the world gets smaller it also gets larger. A five minute conversation may bring to one's mind a dozen things which he would like to understand. On top of "keeping in touch", developing the skills he will need to be effective in his field and giving consideration to his personal survival a person must find the time and ways to renew himself. He must find a personal sanctuary in which to calm himself, a chance to reflect, refocus and restore his energy. There are countless experiences which may have this effect. Through such experience he may renew his love from which the care, concern and commitment will spring.

There is no constant formula for how to live. It is a question each person will turn over in his mind everyday. Unavoidably, I feel like a hypocrite as I write this: I struggle with all of these things. It pleases me greatly each time I meet a person who, perhaps having found his reason for hope, has adopted the attitude of, "Yes, I will try."

SHL activities

To the Editor:

The Student Homophile League and the Gay Women's Caucus, are working closely on two Gay Activities this weekend. On Friday Oct. 18, a film will be shown, "A Position of Faith", 8:00 p.m. This will be shown in the Campus Center Auditorium. The film deals with a Gay male who is accepted into a protestant ministry. Following the film, there will be a discussion with ministers from the Metropolitan Community Church, representing such cities as, Boston, Providence, and Hartford. There will also be representatives from the B'NAI HASKALAH, a Gay Jewish organization from Boston. The M.C.C. has been in existence for the last four years. It is a church geared to the Gay community, but welcomes everyone. In 1970, there was one M.C.C. church. At the present, there are over 500, in three countries. We welcome, and encourage everyone to attend, especially those religiously oriented groups on campus.

On Saturday, Oct. 19, SHL and GwC, will sponsor a dance. The two groups playing will be, "The Deadly Nightshade", and "Lilith." The dance will take place at Worcester dining Commons, and begin at 9:00 p.m. Everyone is welcome.

On Clark and Classics

To the Editor:

After reading Nat Clark's column in Thursday's Collegian, I was somewhat stunned. I can understand that Nat might seek out traditional programming for himself, but why must he speak out against fine innovations in education like Honors or Outreach? These and similar programs, such as womans studies or UWW have begun to make higher education available to those to whom it has always been denied.

We are standing at a place in time that demands that all the problems of society be met. Our society, and our institutions must change in order to meet the needs of all its peoples. In education, this means examining the institutions and changing them so as to include and service the needs of those who have been excluded because of language, race, culture, or other special educational growth needs. Society can no longer afford to meet the needs of an elite few at the expense of so many. What we really need is many ways for many people.

I think we must begin to see that the test of any great university is in its ability to ultimately deal with the changing problems of a society, and not its faithfulness to a status quo of exclusively traditional programs, which have proven to be inadequate.

I would like to agree with Nat where he said "This is an educational institution, not a playground, but I would like to clarify this, saying that it is part of the real world and must come to grips with real needs, as the special programs have begun to do.

We must see that learning occurs through many different formats, and sometimes requires special settings. This learning process and growth must not be limited through strict personal interpretation of the term "tradition".

In closing, I was also unsure of what Nat meant by traditional. Was he implying that the only studies offered should be in the Classics, through intense Greek and Latin, as was the case until the pre-nineteen hundreds, or what?

Abolish S.G.A.

For as long as I can remember the UMass Student Government Association has been 99 and 44-100ths percent worthless. Sure, there have been a few minor victories and a handful of truly dedicated people in the SGA, but by and large the organization has been a waste of people's time, Collegian space, and legitimate energy.

So it's time to get rid of it. That's right, abolish the Student Government Association. No tears, just a swift, cold, chop and a few unemployed politicos. Anyone who's concerned will find a more legitimate way to divert their energy in the cause of student rights and the protection of student interests. The most logical of these at the moment is the Student Organizing Project, but we'll get to that later.

By far the most obvious weakness of the present system is the fact that Whitmore holds veto power over all student Government actions. This was emphasized by Vice Chancellor Gage's memo to Student Senate Speaker Cindy McGrath earlier this week. The memo stated that the Vice Chancellor would be noting all Senate actions in writing in the future, including a provision that states he can reject an action as one of his opinions. This childish attempt at muscle flexing should be rebutted in the strongest way possible, but the SGA, by its nature a substructure of the larger, Whitmore based unit that governs the University, is just not the place to do it. Whitmore's letting the children play with blocks, but we're not allowed to build anything.

Whitmore's letting the children play with blocks but we're not allowed to build anything.

If one looks at the history of the SGA they'll find very little to dispute my argument. For one thing, there has been precious little done in my memory by any branch of the SGA that has had real import for the campus community. What has been attempted has either failed, as in the case of the attempt to topple the rhetoric requirement last year, or been vetoed.

The final argument for abolition of the SGA is that, historically, it is prone to such ridiculous power grabbing trips from within that infighting dominates most of its time. Last year it was the President and the Speaker slugging it out, the year before the President and the Area government presidents. In all cases everyone lost. It's time to stop training the big pigs of the future with our time and money.

What are the alternatives to the SGA? Should anything replace it? If students had their way, there would probably be no replacement, but to paraphrase my column of last week, slavery the easy way has always been easier than freedom the hard way for students here.

The best alternative I see is the Student Organizing Project. While it has been pointed out to me, and somewhat legitimately, that unions are prone to all sorts of corruption and piggishness on their own, and that a student union may destroy the atmosphere of the University, it still seems to be the best alternative. All that is needed is an assurance that students will keep a tight rein over their own union and not let it get out of hand. Beyond that I can't see the liabilities. We have nothing now, what can we lose? Even though a few of us are finding educations on our own terms it is still true that most people aren't.

So let's try the new system and get rid of the old. If it fails, we're no worse off. If it works, it's a new day.

City of hypocrites

Hey, there's a music for the people.
Hey, there's a music, let'em dance.
---John Klemmer

I'm really pissed. I can't believe what's going on. In Boston that is. The city where I grew up. The Marvin Gaye concert was cancelled last week and now there are rumors that the Stevie Wonder concert may be cancelled. For what? Because Boston can't get its shit together? And because Boston can't get its shit together I can't hear any music.

That's why I'm pissed.

I did not go through the hassle of taking a night off from work, of finding a place for people to stay, and getting psyched up for this concert to be cancelled just because Boston has racial problems.

Fuck you Boston. Fuck you because I used to think that you were one of the more liberal of the cities. I thought that you were the city of revolution, of rebellion. I thought you started the idea of the spirit of '76 and all that. But now I'm beginning to realize that you are the city rebellion alright, the city of rebellious hypocrites.

If music hath charm to sooth the savage beast then let's turn up our amps and play it loud. Loud enough and long enough to blast those motherfucking racist bastards right out of their reclining chairs in front of the t.v. sets while they're watching "All in the Family."

You don't see the hockey games being cancelled from Boston. You don't see life being cancelled from Boston. So why was the music cancelled?

You don't see the hockey games being cancelled from Boston. You don't see life being cancelled from Boston. So why is the music cancelled? Music is an art form, it's a soothant. What's the matter Boston? What are you afraid of? Afraid that all the brothers and sisters might get a little pissed off and stand up for what they should be getting? Remember Woodstock, Boston, it wasn't that long ago. No one seemed to get hurt there.

Maybe if there were more and more concerts, more and more music, more and more people getting out together socially then there wouldn't be any of this bullshit. Everybody likes music, so why not have more? But go ahead Boston, cancel the music. Cancel the way people have a good time to forget about the drudgery of, as Stevie says, "livin' just enough for the city."

If you really want to get it together Boston, maybe you should have more concerts. Maybe you should even sponsor them. Or maybe, which I think is even a better idea, maybe Boston, you should cancel school and bus all the kids over to a Stevie Wonder concert.

Isolation not answer

By Richard Wright

For generations this country existed in the isolation that the great oceans provided between us and the rest of the civilized world. Not until the second world war did we get slapped into the internationalism that marks our present foreign policy. It is a confusing and complex question, and yet it seems that only too clearly we cannot afford to withdraw into the isolationism that some would have us believe is necessary for America to be true to itself.

Maybe it has not occurred to many people, but the regression into an isolationists status is a condition that the United States has been tottering on the brink of increasingly over the past few years. Each year the foreign aid bill finds a more powerful and vocal opposition arguing that we should be cutting back on the amounts of aid we send overseas so that we can solve the problems at home first. They point to the waste and abuses by foreign governments with the aid that we send each year. The call for eliminating foreign aid is getting louder every year.

The real question which should be addressed is not whether we should remain a leader in the global affairs that directly affect our own well-being, rather, are we prepared to differentiate between productive and destructive kinds of foreign aid? Much of the argument rests with the flow of armaments, or funds which directly support military purposes. Sending agricultural expertise, conservation techniques, health apparatus, and educational programs are one thing, sending death and destruction is another. If a nation that is a recipient of American aid is facing a potential military threat from an aggressor nation however, there can be a mechanism whereby self-defense hardware could be made available at a price. If each nation that is to receive aid was issued a certain amount of Aid Coupons, they would be free to redeem them for those items they felt were most important to their country. Each Coupon would buy one dollars worth of armaments, or ten dollars worth of food, medicine, or books. With a free choice between available aid products and services, and an awareness of the relative value of dollars depending on the product selected, the recipient would have to evaluate what were the priorities of its people and balance them against what was available in the form of foreign aid. In this fashion, the greatest amount of foreign aid dollars would be expended for more humane and productive causes than would otherwise be possible. It would also eliminate the discrimination in type and kind of aid distributed around the world since each nation would be free to mix and match it's expenditures among the foreign aid offerings.

With the worlds economy as a whole suffering the same kinds of upheaval that we are facing here in the United States, isolationism is definitely not in the best interests of anyone. But reform in the method and amount of foreign aid away from supporting military expansionism is a must.

Amherst performs musical comedy

In their first production of the 1974-75 academic year, the Amherst College Masquers will present "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," the musical comedy with music and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim. Performances will be given on Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, Oct. 18-20 and 25-27 at 8 p.m. in the College's Kirby Memorial Theater.

The show will be the first main stage production in what promises to be an exciting year of theater at Amherst College. Besides "Forum," Luigi Pirandello's "Henry IV" will be presented on the main stage at Kirby Theater at the end of the first semester. A number of smaller productions will also be staged.

Professor Walter Boughton, chairman of the Dramatic Arts Department, will direct "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum." He recently returned from a summer season as producer-director of the Weston Playhouse in Weston, Vermont.

The set and costumes have been designed by Wanda Whalen, a former professor of dramatic arts at Mount Holyoke College, now doing free-land design. Her work was seen in Amherst last spring, when she designed the Masquers' successful production of Moliere's "The School for Wives." The production traveled to the Folger Shakespeare Library Theater in Washington, D.C.

"A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" is the much acclaimed Broadway success that starred Zero Mostel as the slave Pseudolus, who seeks to claim the virgin courtisan Phillia for his master. Hero, in order to obtain his freedom from bondage. The plot thickens when it becomes understood that Phillia is promised to the Roman warrior Miles Gloriosus. The show opens with the Broadway hit song "Comedy Tonight."

Tickets for "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" are $2.50 and can be obtained from the Kirby Theater box office weekdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., or by calling 542-2277.

Black martial arts advocates schedule largest gathering yet

One of the largest gatherings ever of all Black martial artists to discuss relating the martial arts to the needs of the Black community is planned Sunday, October 20 from 5-9 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium. Admission is free.

Chuang Fa (Way of the Fist); the martial arts originated somewhere in Africa and Asia some 4,000 years ago. Chuang Fa or Kung Fu remained un-organized as a system until around 520-525 A.D. when a Buddist priest, referred to a Bodhidharma, Daruma Taishi or Tamo journeyed to China to teach the Liang Dynasty Buddhism.

The child of King Sugandha, was a warrior who had received his martial arts training from an old master known as Prajnatara. After having traveled hundreds of miles through the rugged Himalaya Mountains from India, he entered the SiL Lum (ShaoLin in Mandarin dialect and Sharin-j, Kemps in Japanese) Monastery.

Because the master found the Monks in bad condition; they were unable to stay awake during meditation, he introduced a series of 18 exercises to condition and develop their bodies and minds. The 18 Hands of Lo-Han also called Eki-Kinkyo, is said to be the forerunner of Sil Lum Temple boxing. The word Sil Lum means "young forest".

It is also said, Bodhi Dharma introduced Ch'an or Zen into the Sil Lum Temple. Historians generally agree that a major development occurred during the 16th Century when Kwok Yuen entered the temple and expanded Bodhi-Dharma's 18 exercises to 72.

He disguised himself and set out on a journey throughout China, searching for greater fighting knowledge. He met boxing master Pak Yook Foug and an old man known as Li, both of whom were very skillful in the open handed claw techniques.

Returning to the monastery, Kwok Yuen with the help of the two boxers, increased his original 72 movements to 170 and classified them into five distinct styles — The Tiger, The Crane, The Leopard, The Snake, and The Dragon. This happened about 1522.

A Sil Lum graduate acquired his diploma only after passing a life and death test. He was sealed in a specially designed labyrinth, with it's only exit the door of the temple.

The boxers who managed to survive the attack escaped, therefore using this period to reveal secrets of Kung-Fu to the outside world.

The method got into Okinawa, mixed with the Okinawa Te and eventually evolved into today's version of Karate.

The word Karate means "empty hand", but originally the word Karate was the Japanese pronunciation of the two Chinese characters written for the words "Hom Sul" meaning Chinese hand. (The connotation of Kara is the same as Tang, for the Tang Dynasty, and Tang also means Chinese or China.)

As a salute to the Chinese Tang Dynasty during which the empty hands arts flourished, the Okinawans and Japanese then names their martial art "Karate." The soft or "inner school of Kung Fu" are represented by four basic styles. Chi-Kung, Pa-Kua Chang, Hsing I'Shuan is generally reported to be originated by Chang San-Feng, a Taoist priest of the 14th century.

Tai Chi Chuan became known in the 18th century, when it was introduced by Yang Lu-ch'an (1799-1872). He founded a school in Peking. The three major styles of Tai Chi Chuan are the Ch'en style, Yang Style, and the Wu Style. These branches have developed six forms and pastures. Chi Kung is older than Tai Chi Chuan, dates back over 2,550 years and is the original Chinese martial arts. Chi Kung is not originally used as a self-defense marital art.

Odd jobs assist glee club to finance eight-week tour

The Amherst College Glee Club is offering a second--or a third pair of hands on Saturday, October 26, the date of its annual Fall Work Day. For $2.50 an hour, the singers will rake leaves, prune hedges, wax floors, cut tree, repair roofs, wash windows--sing--and do whatever else you'd like to get done around the house before the snow comes.

This year's Work Day's proceeds will benefit the Club's eight-week tour of the Mediterranean, which is planned for next summer. The itinerary includes performances in such countries as Algeria, Morocco, Tunisia, U.A.R., Jordan, Lebanon, Syria, Greece, Austria, and France. This tour follows three years after the Glee Club's very successful tour to Africa, Asia and the Middle East, for which it was voted the Cultural Affairs Group of 1972.

The success of the Mediterranean Tour depends solely upon the singers' efforts to raise the needed $27,000. Their principle ways to raise money are to sell records which the Club has recorded and volunteer their services on the work days.

If you need an extra pair of hands on Saturday, October 26, and would like to help the Amherst College Glee Club go on tour next summer, call 542-2484 weekdays between 2-4 p.m., or write to the Fall Work Day, the Music Center, Amherst College.

College age pen friends being sought

There are thousands of people seeking college age pen friends in over 100 countries throughout the world waiting for an American friend, according to Letters Abroad. This non-governmental, non-profit organization, now entering its 22nd year of service, finds that these requests far exceed the number of Americans of college age seeking this unique service.

Letters Abroad is the only American pen friend organization serving adults (16 and over). Some of the friendships established through a careful matching process, are almost as old as the organization.

All overseas applicants for American pen friends correspond in English. On occasion, and by agreement, each friend writes in the other's language, thus improving facility and useage of their respective non-native tongue. Requests are also matched, wherever possible, by age group, interests, and hobbies. A spokesman for the agency says it is important to link people not only with similar interests but also of similar age group, and urges college students to try it.

Not everyone can visit abroad, but on this "one to one" basis it is possible to learn a great deal about the people who live there. In turn, the pen friend gets to know an American, how he lives, thinks and feels. Ofter the likes, dislikes and problems are parallel.

Letters Abroad makes no charge for its service but does point out contributions help defray expenses. For a brochure giving full details, write Letters Abroad, 209 East 56th St., New York City 10022, enclosing a return self-addressed envelope. Or, for immediate action, follow the preceeding instructions, sending name, age, address, occupation & hobbies.

Laymen's Academy gives lecture

The Laymen's Academy for Ecumenical Studies (LAES), an Amherst based organization headed by Father John Koonz of Holy Name R.C. Church, Springfield, will present Dr. Martin E. Marty of Chicago University Divinity School at a speech in Amherst on Saturday evening, October 19, 1974. Dr. Marty is professor of Modern Church History at Chicago and Associate Editor of the influential Christian Century magazine. His talk is scheduled to be given in First Congregational Church, Main Street, Amherst, at k7:00 P.M. Dr. Marty's topic will be "What's Ahead for the Local Congregation in a Time of Radical Change?"

STUD PREXY WASHES DISHES at Indiana University, to make ends meet, is the intelligence shared by the Indiana Daily Student.

Like Thoreau's trip to Walden Pond to think, Student Association President Kurt Flock goes to an automatic dishwasher, according to staff writer Craig Webb. He has revealed that the campus' chief politician spends five hours a week as pearl diver in the dietary department of the Bloomington Hospital.

Flock is quoted as saying that he believes the lack of distractions help make brainstorms possible while emptying his machine.

His supervisor says "He's kind of an All-American boy."

And that's what we all need: a Flock in our future.

A "PARENTING" COURSE at the U. of Northern Iowa is being offered to tell what it's like to be a parent.

According to a report in The Northern Iowan, the course serves a need to know about a commitment that lasts about 18-20 years.

If the kid grows up, that is.

A LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE has been formed at Miami-Dade Community College to hear complaints about literature passed out on campus.

The Miami-Dade Catalyst reports the LDC came close to acting when a student termed "obscene" some recruiting literature that appeared on campus. But he withdrew the complaint before it was to be reviewed by the Committee.

Nothing like having a committee that has nothing to do.

WFCR series features folk singer

Imagine a folk singer whose forte is British and Irish ballads. And another who becomes popular for Jewish and Yiddish folk songs. And then one more who specializes in Australian "Bush Music" from he days of the early settlers.

Now think of these three singers as one man, and you have a good idea of the background of Maury Bernstein, host of National Public Radio's "Folk Music and Bernstein" series being broadcast currently every Saturday at 1:00 on WFCR (88.5fm).

Bernstein's program originated in Collegeville, Minnesota in 1963 with an informal format which the years have not changes. Each show focuses on particular music from somewhere in the world -- one week, love songs of the British Isles may be featured; the next week, Cajun Music of Louisiana.

After more than a decade in the hub of folk singing and acedmic folklore, Bernstein, the apologetic accordionist, has become, in the words of music critics, "The young 'Grand Old Man' of folk music."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Friday, October 18

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A routine day at home or on the employment scene at least insures you of nothing sudden to interfere with plans for the future.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Make an effort to keep to the status quo. The fewer changes you make now the better off you will be later on.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — The Sagittarian who avoids error early in the day should find himself more successful than usual as night falls. Listen to those in authority.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Take a calm approach to whatever happens on the home front. You may wish to put your foot down — but you would be wiser not to.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Tension leads to failure, calm to success. You would do well to reconsider recent judgments where the very young are concerned.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — A certain amount of difficulty ought to be good for your mental powers. There is nothing like exercise to increase your proficiency.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Consider your plans for the weekend. You may be trying to accomplish more than is possible in the time allowed. Ask for advice before it's too late.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Though you and others may little suspect, you may be barking up the wrong tree entirely where your immediate future is concerned. Look to your past!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — A chance of scenery may work wonders for your morale. Make an effort to get away early. Loved ones make it relatively easy for you to chance plans.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Allow yourself some margin for error, especially if you insist upon making decisions on the basis of intuitive knowledge. Take a tip from an expert.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Follow your hunches — but only so far as they deal with your personal relationships. Don't trust yourself to keep a secret under pressure. Avoid questions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sepc. 22) — You may hurt another unwittingly today — but deeply enough to cause a rift in your personal relationship. Don't offer feeble excuses.

IM refs unfortunately are a necessary evil

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

Just think how it must feel to be an intramural football official.

"Offsides."

"Offsides? Who was offsides, ref? Huh? Who was offsides? No way. Nobody was offsides. You're crazy!"

"Who paid you off, ref? You Suck!"

Sound familiar? If you play intramural football, it must. The officials are constant recipients of verbal onslaughts by players, team managers and fans.

Contrary to rumor, they do try to be honest in their calls and they are students just like you and me. According to Earl Edwards, assistant intramural director, football officials are chosen from applications filled out by students during fall registration. Past experience is given the most consideration by Edwards in selecting the officials.

"There are two types of officials," said Edwards. "There are the paid officials (paid by the IM program, not the opposing team) and there are the students, who referee as part of a class."

Officials who work for pay receive $2.25 for each game. They officiate two nights a week, three games a night, so they receive $13.50 a week.

"The main job of a referee is to keep the game under control," said Edwards. He said that he has received few complaints and protests about officials this year and that for the most part he is pleased with the job done so far.

IM officials are assigned to a group of referees that they work with throughout the season. They are also assigned to the same field each night, so they usually officiate the same teams each week. According to Edwards, this enables each official to get to know how his group works in a game. Also the teams get used to the same officials whether they are considered good or not.

The general complaint of referees is that students who play for the various teams don't try to understand that they are not professionals and that they are trying their best.

Despite all the complaints and hassles, remember that without the officials there would be no intramural program at all.

If you think there is a lot of chaos and arguing during IM games now, imagine how much there would be without officials.

One IM official has this plea to the players who hassle referees: "Do you realize that you couldn't play a game without me? Do you realize that more often than not I'm right in interpreting the rules and you're not? Of course not. It's not that I purposely miss calls or call them one-sided, it's that the participants are. The next time you're out there playing your hearts out for your dorm, frat or sorority remember that the officials are real honest-to-goodness students out there. We don't want your pity and sympathy. All we want is your help and cooperation."

Just think how it must feel to be an intramural football official.

Alumni meet varsity booters

The first alumni-varsity soccer game in 10 years will be held Saturday, October 19th, at 1:00 P.M. at the Boyden soccer fields.

Varsity coach, Al Rufe arranged the game "after talking to soccer alumni living in the Amherst area."

"The response has been fantastic, so many Alumni have expressed interest in playing I've had to schedule a second game with the Junior Varsity," Coach Rufe reports. "I hope the current interest in soccer continues to grow, I want to make this game part of our program every year."

Al Skinner chosen by Nets; only rookie to make team

By GLENN POSTER
Sports Staff

Former UMass basketball captain Al Skinner is now a member of the New York Nets. Coach Kevin Loughery and general manager Dave DeBusschere both have been impressed with Skinner's play in the backcourt and Thursday morning chose him to be the only rookie to survive all the cuts as the Nets set to begin their ABA title defense in this, their eighth season of operation. They open tonight against Moses Malone and company from the Utah Stars in a replay of last spring's championship round at the Nassaû Colisseum.

Skinner, a 6'4" product from Malvern, New York came to UMass in 1970. He played freshman ball and then varsity for the next three years, twice leading the team to the prestigious National Invitational Tournament held at New York's Madison Square Garden. Minuteman assistant coach Ray Wilson summed it up best when informed of the decision. His comment: "That's great." It was Wilson who recruited Skinner along with Julius Erving to come to UMass. (of course Skinner and Erving will be playing together in the pros — Erving was the ABA's most valuable player and leading scorer last year)

As far as the Nets are concerned, Skinner will not grow stale sitting on the bench; in other words he won't be saved until the last two minutes of a game when the outcome has already been decided. The starting five has Erving and Larry Kenon at forward, Billy Paultz at center, with Brian Taylor and Bill Melchionni at the guards. A starting guard from last season, John Williamson is hurting right now, so Skinner will move up the depth charts fast.

As far as Al's progress is concerned, he played in all nine exhibition games and was the team's third leading scorer with 120 points or translated — 13.3 points per game. Al's other stats showed him having 32 assists, a 2.2 rebounding average, and 26 personal fouls. (He was never in foul trouble in any games.)

The Nets are the class team in the ABA and their public relations director was constantly mentioning the fact that, "We're going to repeat and Al Skinner (wearing number 30 incidentally) is going to help us do it."

Frosh harriers roll over UConn

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

While the UMass harriers were in New York City, toppling the fifth-ranked team in the nation, the freshmen runners did some record-breaking, here in Amherst. Cliff Stapes and Bob Neil bettered varsity co-captain Bill Gillin's record in a 19-38 victory over UConn.

Staples lowered the 3.75-mile course mark by nearly half a minute (27 seconds to be exact). Gillin held the record of 19:31 since he was a freshman in 1971, but Staples' time of 19:04.2 was by far superior. Rolf Meyer and Frank Carroll came within fifteen seconds of the old mark, and their times, along with those of Staples and Neil are four of the best seven times in UMass history. Only Randy Thomas, Gillin and Kim Murphy of UConn are among the top seven, dominated by this year's freshmen runners.

Dave Kramer ran his best race of the season, capturing seventh in 19:53. Kramer's effort equalled Tom Wilson's best time for the course. Wilson ran a 19:53 in 1972 and went on to win the New England JV title the same year.

UConn had shutout its three opponents before running against UMass. Coach Mike Muska's runners held the first seven spots at the mile mark, and UConn never recovered. The freshmen, whose goal is the New England JV team title, will constitute the squad that travels to Franklin Park, tomorrow, to face New Hampshire. UNH has three good frontrunners in George Reed, Bruce Butterworth and John Madden. Reed, who has already run a fine 24:14 on the Franklin Park course may cause some problems for UMass, but the team is depending on its depth.

Tuesday afternoon, the varsity runners upped their record to 8-2 with a 20-40 triumph over Rhode Island. Paul Piliero, a standout for the second place team in the YanCon two years ago who missed last season, took individual honors in 24:52. Frank Noto, however, led a pack of five UMass runners including freshman Dino Lamacchia that took the next five places. Noto, Phil Broughton, Robb Leary, Chris Farmer and Lamacchia placed second through sixth respectively. The harriers, who could finish with the best won-lost record since 1971 when the team went 10-3, will get a week's rest before travelling to Burlington, Vermont for the Yankee Conference championships.

Tomorrow's meet will be a test for the freshmen runners.

Vercollone debuts

Booters battle URI

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Sports Staff

The 1974 version of UMass soccer went about determining some goals (no pun intended) at the outset of the season. They wanted to prove that despite coaching changes, injuries, and personnel problems they could play ball with desire. Secondly, they wanted to get on the road to a Yankee Conference Championship. Lastly, they hoped to play to a point where they might be considered for a playoff berth in the NCAA.

A progress report to date impresses one with the fact that they are definitely working on those goals. The booters are currently 5-1 overall, 2-0 in the YanCon, ranked seventh in New England, and just beginning to put together the kind of play that wins games.

The Minutemen are keeping those objectives in mind as they travel to Kingston, Rhode Island today for a 3:00 match with the URI Rams. The contest has been termed by UMass Coach Al Rufe as "a very solid conference game."

The Rams are 3-2-2 with a win over Vermont and a tie with Bridgeport to their credit. They are a well-coached team and Rufe stated "After a slow start they'll be coming on strong."

The Minutemen will be seeing action from co-captain Carl Vercollone for the first time this season as Rufe has given him the nod to start in goal. "We are really happy to have Carl with us again. That is no reflection on Marc Hanks who has done an outstanding job in goal this year and will see more action I'm sure. The experience that Carl has behind him though is really going to mean a lot."

Vercollone felt that the shoulder injury he incurred early in preseason has healed to a point where "I'll be going out for balls that I might have hesitated on a few weeks ago. I feel really good and just hope we can keep it together."

"I don't know what direction to turn in now," Coach Albert said following her team's third straight loss.

Yesterday afternoon against Worcester State College, the UMass field hockey team scored their first goal in three games - one hour and five minutes into the competition, but UMass lost 2-1.

The first half was a scoreless, evenly matched contest with the defenses of both teams doing all the work. UMass could not control the ball and could not pass it.

But in the second half the defense began to despair and with twenty minutes left in the game, Worcester's Lynne Olson scored the first goal and teammate Denise Skahan followed with another one five minutes later.

Coach Albert is baffled by the change her players have undergone between the first three games and the last three. While they strarted the season as a well-organized and quick-thinking team, they have lately become disorganized and slow.

The junior varsity game was a different story. They adjusted beautifully to an extremely muddy field and shut-out Worcester State 4-0.

Karen Gipps scored the first goal in the first five minutes and seven minutes later Cheryl Meliones put one in. Ginny Stokes dominated second half scoring by getting both points, to bring their record to 4-1-1.

Southern Connecticut College is coming here on Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 p.m. behind NOPE.

Predicting scores of football games is not always easy. It means picking against sentimental favorites, the advice of friends and even the work of Jimmy the Greek. I'm taking several chances this week, including upsets by Philadelphia and Cincinnati as well as the conclusion of the New England win streak. Anyway, here's the remainder of my prognostication:

UMASS 22; RHODE ISLAND 20

Rhode Island quarterback Steve Crone is from my hometown and a graduate of the same high school as myself. Although URI shutout Vermont 14-0, I'm going against Crone and choosing the Minutemen. Excuse me, sports fans of Meriden, Connecticut!

ATLANTA FALCONS 21; NEW ORLEANS SAINTS 14

The Falcons are rolling, with two straight wins, and hapless Saints will fall to the witchcraft of Bob Lee.

BUFFALO BILLS 31; NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS 28

It's hard to go against the unbeaten Pats, but all good things must end, and Buffalo is the team capable of stopping New England's winning streak. Sorry, Patriot fans!

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES 20; DALLAS COWBOYS 17

If Eagles can get mad, start blocking and executing to take control of the game like last Sunday, they should be able to drop the Cowboys to 1-5. Dallas, record-wise, stands no better than the New York Giants.

NEW YORK JETS 28; BALTIMORE 10

Joe and the Jets were blanked by New England, but should have no difficulty picking up second win of season versus Colts.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS 27; CLEVELAND BROWNS 21

Joe Gilliam rediscovered his precision passing a week ago against the Chiefs, and the Browns can only wish the Steeler QB never did.

WASHINGTON REDSKINS 24; NEW YORK GIANTS 7

'Skins won't even need Christian Adolph Jurgensen III to tumble Jim Del Gaizo and the N.Y. Giants.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS 34; HOUSTON OILERS 13

Jim Hart, Mel Gray and Jackie Smith have bolstered Cards' strong passing attack. Combined with the explosive kick-returning of Terry Metcalf, the aerial display should send Oilers reeling.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS 20; DETROIT LIONS 14

Inspired Lions played impressively in front of Monday's national TV audience, but this one's on a Sunday and against the Vikes, not San Francisco.

DENVER BRONCOS 30; SAN DIEGO CHARGERS 21

Bronco QB Steve Ramsey hopes to earn regular starting role — and there's nothing a coach likes more than victory.

LOS ANGELES RAMS 17; SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS 10

A victory for San Francisco would put the 49ers in a tie for NFC Western Division supremacy, but Rams should take the West coast rivalry.

MIAMI DOLPHINS 27; KANSAS CITY CHIEFS 16

Miami should rebound from last-minute loss to Washington without any problems.

CINCINNATI BENGALS 17; OAKLAND RAIDERS 14

AFC's Central Division leaders will topple Oakland, to the surprise of many.

CHICAGO BEARS 21; GREEN BAY PACKERS 13

Packers managed to beat the Rams with a mere 17 yards passing. This week Jerry Tagge and teammates won't be so lucky.

Women's crew defeats Trinity in opener

Last Saturday was a big day for the University of Massachusetts Women's Crew Club on the Connecticut River, when the club beat Trinity College in the first race and placed second in the second race during their first intercollegiate race of the fall season.

The race was slated for early morning to avoid pleasure vehicles and take advantage of the flat water, but a canoe expedition of concerned conservationists delayed the race and caused the shells to race under windy conditions.

Although rowing 25 strokes per minute against Trinity College's higher cadence of 29 strokes per minute, the UMass first boat handled the wind with more skill and gained the advantage.

With a time of 12:37 the club's first boat won the two-mile race on the Connecicut River while Trinity College finished in 13:05.

Impressed by the margin of victory in the first race, Coach Bob Spousta said, "It is a good indication of things to come. I felt every boat performed well under race conditions."

In the second race, Trinity finished first in 13:20 seconds over the UMass club's second boat which, with eight novice rowers, slid over the finish line in 13:25. Smith College finished third, and UMass's third boat finished last.

A's cop 3rd straight, 3-2

OAKLAND [UPI] — Joe Rudi, one of Oakland's few quiet men, powered the battling and boisterous A's to their third straight World Series title Thursday night when he hit a leadoff home run off ace reliever Mike Marshall in the seventh inning for a 3-2 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Rudi, who has labored quietly and comparatively unspectacularly alongside such outspoken stars as Reggie Jackson and Sal Bando, belted Marshall's first pitch in the seventh deep into the stands in left field.

The winning homer, which gave the A's a four games to one victory in the series, followed a six-minute delay caused when fans showered litter from the outfield seats onto the field.

At one point, two of the Dodgers outfielders, Bill Buckner and Jim Wynn, walked to the infield to seek refuge, and Marshall and Manager Walt Alston joined them in a conference with the umpires.

Then play resumed.

Marshall, who to that point had not been scored on in seven innings in this series, threw Rudi a high fast fall for his first pitch.

There was never any doubt once Rudi swung, and the ball cleared the left field fence easily, touching off another shower of debris from some in the sellout crowd of 49,347.

After that, Oakland had just one brief scare, but it ended almost as quickly as it started.

Buckner led off the eighth inning for Los Angeles with a single to right center, and when the ball eluded centerfielder Bill North, Buckner kept right on going.

But Jackson retrieved the ball near the fence, threw it to second baseman Dick Green, and Green's perfect throw to Bando at third nailed Buckner.

There was, as usual when the A's are involved, a touch of irony to their third straight championship, a string of success that must earn this maverick team and its maverick owner, Charlie Finley, a lasting chunk of baseball history.

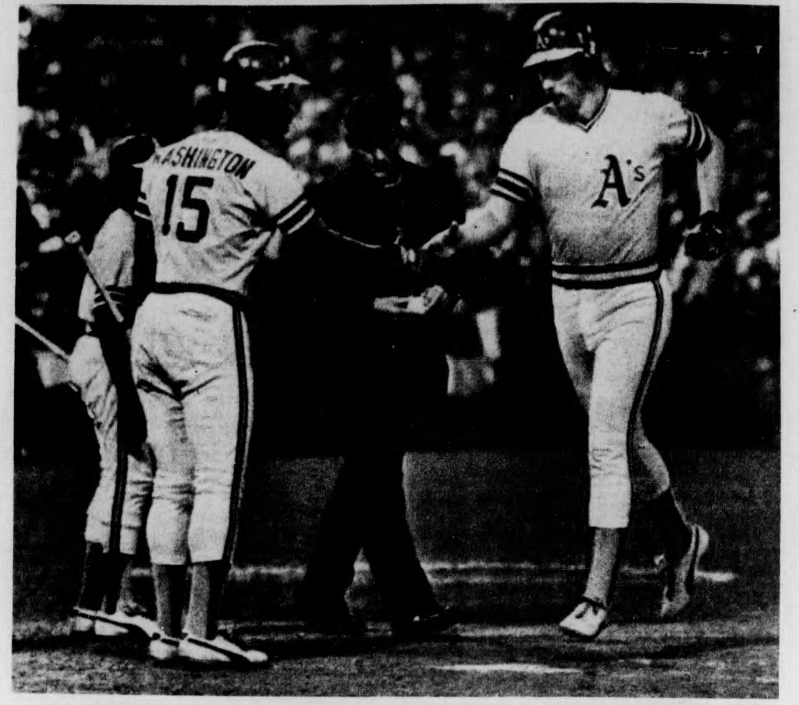
The Oakland pitchers, in order, were Vida Blue, John "Blue Moon" Odom and Rollie Fingers.

Blue was angered when he was lifted for Odom with two out in the seventh, and did not wait around to greet his relief. Two years ago, after the A's had clinched their first pennant, Blue and Odom had a fight in the clubhouse.

Last Friday, the day before this first-ever all-California series began, Odom and Fingers fought in the clubhouse at Los Angeles. Thursday night, Fingers wound up saving Odom's victory.

This was Fingers' sixth save in three World Series, also a record.

What this series amounted to was another case of Oakland nibbling its opponents to death, winning three times by 3-2 scores, a fact that did not go unnoticed by the Dodgers — a team which won more regular season games than any club in the majors.



The run that won the third consecutive World Series championship for the Oakland A's came in the seventh inning when Joe Rudi belted a homer of Dodger relief specialist Mike Marshall. Teammate Claudelle Washington congratulates Rudi as he crosses home plate.

Rams next on comeback trail

By STEVE DeCOSTA
Sports Staff

Two weeks ago, it was utter desolation.

Last week, UMass took the first hesitant steps back.

And still the backs of the Minutemen are against the wall.

The Minutemen motor to Kingston, Rhode Island tomorrow to face the resurgent URI Rams in a game that will hopefully prove something, one way or the other.

Are the Minutemen the same talented squad that blanked Maine and devoured Dartmouth? Or are they the haggard, reckless crew that flopped before Vermont and fought for their lives against BU?

One thing is certain though: the Rams have changed, and they have done it in dramatic fashion. Using basically the same defensive personnel that had allowed 148 points in their first four games, they turned it all around last week with a 14-0 whitewashing of Vermont.

At the same time the defense was getting hammered, the Ram offense was putting points on the board at a clip of 25 per game.

The big man, though not in terms of stature, has been halfback Rick Remondino, who is the third leading rusher in the Yankee Conference, averaging nearly 92 yards per game. Joining Remondino in the backfield is big Dan Whitaker, a bruising runner who punishes would-be tacklers on dives through the middle.

Paul Ryan and Steve Crone have split the Ram's ballhandling chores quite evenly, but Ryan has the better passing percentage and should get the starting nod. Regardless of who's executing the tosses, you can bet that Bill Britt will be their primary target. Britt is currently the YanCon's leading receiver with 26 catches.

URI's defense, though weak against the run, could give the UMass passing game, which is still in a state of disarray, fits. John Belviso and Ray Braszo have picked off five passes apiece and it was Braszo, the YanCon defensive player of the week last Saturday, who broke the Catamount's back as he scampered to paydirt with an errant Bob Bateman (remember him?) toss. The Rams held Bateman to only 11 completions in 32 attempts, well below his season average.

The Ram's main problem has been their inconsistency. They have been lethargic in the early going, scoring only 6 points in five first quarters, but have come alive in the final stanza, putting 47 points, or nearly half their season total, on the board.

The Minutemen, meanwhile, have operated in exactly the opposite fashion, scintillating in the early going before suffering what has come to be traditional second half doldrums.

The big UMass problem is still the passing game. Mark Tripucka did improve somewhat on his percentage last week by connecting on five of ten tosses, but the five completions only led to 38 yards. Tripucka has recovered from a leg injury sustained against BU and will definitely start.

The defense, already hampered by the loss of co-captain Ed McAleney (surgery this week, lost for the season) suffered another blow with the word that John Toner will watch the game from the sidelines.

Last week's performance was good enough to beat BU. But that's about all.

The Minutemen want the Beanpot. Make no mistake about that. But with UConn coming up next week, time is beginning to run out.

Along with a victory, the Minutemen desperately need a solid performance-a confidence builder. The material is there. The problem, as it has been all season long, is putting it together.

D's blast Philly, 4-1

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] - Phil Esposito, the National Hockey League's scoring champion, scored two second period goals Thursday night to lead the Boston Bruins to a 4-1 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers.

Esposito put Boston ahead 1-0 at 6:11 on a breakaway and added a second score at 15:09 on a 10-foot power play score, after receiving a pass from veteran John Bucyk.

A brief scuffle in the stands resulted near the end of the first period when Esposito was spat on by a spectator as he entered the panalty box. He and some of his teammates attempted to reach the fan but were restrained.

Terry O'Reilly tipped in a slap shot by Carol Vadnais to raise Boston's margin to 3-0 at 6:44 of the third period.

Ken Hodge made it 4-0 50 seconds later with a follow up shot from close range.

Gage replies:

Senate still free

By LINDA BROWER
Staff Reporter

Dr. Robert Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, defended his recent memorandum concerning Student Senate legislation, as "in no way infringing on student's freedom; rather, an acknowledgement of importance of what they're doing."

In the memorandum, Gage said he would provide written feedback to all Senate legislation.

Gage admitted that his note "was blunt" and that he "should have been more explicit concerning the consultations I expect to take place." Gage has been in communication with the Student Senate executive leaders but feels their meeting did not achieve a great deal. They are "still inflamed by their group's (i.e. Student Senate) reaction and little time is needed" for them to cool down.

Gage was quick to explain that "no group has absolute power." In those areas where power has to be shared, there has to be a balance of power among students, faculty, and administration.

Until three years ago, the Dean of Student's Office responded to all Student Senate legislation. This was also when Gage assumed the position of Vice-Chancellor and there was a hazy mist over the division of duties in the ranks of the administration. Once the dust settled, Gage said he felt it "irresponsible of me or the administration not to acknowledge and indeed, to ignore" the Student Senate. It would be a "put down of their sincere efforts".

Dr. Gage outlined briefly what he felt to be a 'model' Student Senate. He felt it must reach out to a large number of students, even those non-assertive ones, and meet their diverse needs as comprehensively as possible. Some students are used to dealing with a bureaucratic system, and they manipulate the system well. Others find it oppressive and tend to get lost, Gage said.

Gage said he feels there are "a lot of people among the student body who have needs not necessarily met." An example is the woman who has a child at home and decides to return to school. Gage feels that she has no representation at the present time.

Gage asserts that the Student Senate attempts a very difficult task by trying to satisfy the needs of all students. He said he finds, though, that the Student Senate is "slow to recognize changes in the students' attitudes." He cites, as an example, student hostility towards job and military recruiters on campus four years ago. At the time, the Student Senate passed legislation accordingly.

Two years ago, attitudes on campus changed as the situation outside the campus changed too. Seniors were finding jobs scarce and would have welcomed the sight of job recruiters on campus. Yet, the Student Senate retained its legislation against such activity. The issue went to referendum and the Student Senate was defeated.

In his memorandum to the Speaker of Senate, Cindy McGrath, Gage issued four terms that he would be using to respond to Senate legislation. He said the first three, "noted", "accepted", and "return for reconsideration" were to be the answers to the bulk of the legislation. The last, "rejection" would occur rarely, according to Gage.

Gage explained that "noted" signified an act passed by the Senate that was solely the concern of students. The great majority of legislation would fall here as it would be inappropriate for him to

Bromery dedicates the brick tower

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

The world's largest library, UMass's library, was dedicated Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery began the ceremony on the main floor of the 28 story library, welcoming and addressing the audience of approximately 125 people.

Bromery defined the purpose and emphasized the importance of a good library to a university. He said, the library is a resource of teaching and service, an aid in studying the past, and supplier of increasing methods of technology. Bromery added, the new library serves this university, the five college system, and numerous governmental services throughout the state.

Quoting Archibald MacLeish to show the significance of a library, Bromery said, "There is always, in any society, men and women who do not wish to be free themselves, men and women interested in intellectual achievement. The library is the strong point of defense against ignorance and will continue to be for a long time to come."

The Master of Ceremonies, Oswald Tippo who is Commonwealth Professor of Botany and former chancellor, narrated the history of the building of the new UMass-Amherst library, noting and thanking individuals for their contributions of work and service to the library.

Kenneth Freed, undergraduate student representative to Faculty Senate Library Committee, suggested that students support the library so that it may rank top in usefullness. Freed said, "let's contribute to the library's needs, so in the Guiness Book of World Records the library will not only be listed as the largest but the most useful library.

Speaker of the day was William Manchester, author and former UMass student. Manchester wrote "Death of a President" and soon-to-be-published "Glory and the Dream."

Manchester explained how important books are to a gifted student. He said, that a reader is co-author and sharer of the creative event.

Manchester expressed a desire that a student may experience an incident that happened to him in his freshman year at UMass. He said he hoped that long after his death, a freshman might discover one of his books on the library shelf which will encourage him to explore greater authors and maybe even inspire him to write.

Principal speaker, Frederick S. Troy, Trustee of the University and retired English Professor, said, "a great university deserves a good library."

Troy recited the history of college libraries in the U.S. and the history of UMass's libraries. In 1885, the UMass library was housed with the Chapel in the Old Chapel Building, south of the new library.

The urge for going

By JUDITH ZORFAS
Staff Reporter

"The best thing I ever did at UMass was get out of it for a year," said Bruce Frederick who spent last year at the U of Oregon as a National Student Exchange (NSE) participant. He and another student, Bruce Billingham thought the University of Oregon was excellent both academically and culturally.

The NSE Program provides students with an opportunity to study as long as one year at their choice of 31 colleges and universities throughout 25 states. The schools include U of Hawaii, U of Oregon, and Rutgers College.

During the fall of 1973, 364 students took part in the NSE program. UMass had the largest number of participants. They exchanged 88 students.

Schools involved must take in the same amount of students as they send out. For example, there are always more students from Massachusetts wishing to go to Hawaii than there are students in Hawaii to come here. Therefore all the students from Hawaii will be accepted into the program while many UMass students will be rejected or else choose another school.

Because of this equal exchange system the cost of the program is the cost of in-state tuition of either the home or host institution.

A sampling of students who have participated in the program revealed that most students take part in the program because they want to live in a different area of the country.

However William Loder, Assistant Registrar and the NSE coordinator at UMass, says another common reason for participation is that another school may have much to offer towards the student's area of study.

Elizabeth Rivera, an exchange student from the U. of Hawaii said that she chose UMass mainly for its eastern location. Coming from a state where Caucasians are a minority and the temperature rarely drops below 60 degrees to UMass has been an exciting learning and living experience, she said.

Jane Tomlin

"It's great being here," she said, "I never get homesick." But Rivera did confess to some nervousness concerning winter.

Jayne Tomlin, an exchange student for the U of Oregon said that she was homesick when she arrived in September.

During the first week of school, she found herself placed on the 15th floor of a tower in Southwest with a hostile roommate. She said she went to see Loder for assistance.

Tomlin said that Loder was quite rude and was unwilling to assist her with her difficulties. She had to telephone each low-rise in SW to find another room.

Margorie Leavitt, the head of residence of Crampton gave Tomlin a room in that dorm. The NSE students have found that Leavitt has a personal interest in the program and she is always willing to assist any NSE student with problems they may encounter.

All four students that were interviewed enthusiastically recommend the NSE program to others.

Loder said that it is unfortunate that the program does not receive adequate publicity. Most students said they found out about the NSE by talking to people who had participated in it, and not by advertisements.

Loder added that universities do not provide their NSE coordinators with a substantial budget which would allocate both the needed publicity and sponsor social events for the visiting exchange students.

However, students agree that most NSE coordinators have other "more important" jobs and responsibilities. To them the NSE is a 'side' responsibility, according to students in the program.

Despite the low budget and lack of publicity, the NSE is still "a great program with terrific opportunity for those interested", according to Loder.

accept or pass judgement.

"Acceptance" legislation would deal with issues having impact on administration, faculty and the public. In other words, any legislation that required another institution to be involved might not be "accepted."

"Return for reconsideration" is a two division category Gage explained. If an error in fact or in speech is made in the minutes of the meeting he would suggest the clarification of the error. Reconsideration would also be suggested in cases of ill-advised action in order to be discussed in light of additional information.

When legislation was sent back for reconsideration and the Senate passed it again, Gage would issue a "rejection" notice. Rejection is only the last resort. I'd never reject the first time around. I would always suggest reconsideration and a willingness to meet with them," Gage said.

He emphasized that a "rejection" from his office "gives the students leverage to take the matter above his level to the Chancellor and Board of Presidents."

Goodell library was build in 1934 and expanded after World War II.

The new library was opened in Fall 1973.

Troy said there is a new breed of librarians. The librarian profession now demands scholarship in special areas and knowledge in the uses of technology, he said. Troy added, librarians have an important job; they must be successful in pruning a useful selection of books and periodicals.

In raising the question of what kind of library a university will serve, Troy expressed the virtues of liberal education as being the purpose of the birth of the university. He disagreed with educators who think a university should be a vocational training ground.

According to Troy, "a great library is an indispensible symbol of knowledge," knowledge that centers on the humanistic, scientific, and social areas of study.

Tours of the library conducted by the library staff preceded the ceremony. At 2:00 p.m., there was a panel discussion on "the Management of the University Libraries in the mid-1970's."

Participants in the discussion were: Warren J. Haas, vice president and Director of Libraries at Columbia University; Michael W. Bommer, Assistant Professor at Clarkson College of Technology; Burton Wolfman, undersecretary of Educational Affairs of Commonwealth of Massachusetts; and Philip J. McNiff director and librarian of the Boston Public Library.

Bargains abound at co-op

The People's Market, located on the first floor of the Student Union, boasts several new improvements this year designed to give better service to students.

A new cash register and scale will help cut down lines while more floor space, three new storage rooms, and a new cold storage room will enable the market to handle more business. The People's Market also accepts food stamps this year.

Food is not cheap anywhere anymore but the People's Market, a food co-operative open to anyone, offers excellent bargains in cheese and fresh produce.

Meunster and mazarella, two popular cheeses at the People's Market, were 28 cents and 30 cents cheaper respectively than Stop & Shop. Iceburg lettuce was 15 cents and tomatoes 14 cents cheaper.

Stop & Shop, the People's Market and Munchies placed 1st, 2nd, and 3rd respectively in canned good prices.

Martha Gaithewaite, a coordinator at the People's Market said if more people would use the market, prices would go down. They could buy canned goods at a larger volume at a better price. She feels many people are not aware that it exists, especially freshmen and transfer students.

The People's Market has a 15 per cent mark-up on wholesale prices. They can keep prices this low because they are nonprofit, pay no rent, and because some students do volunteer work.

Wendy: Full, rich & powerful

By TYLA L. MICHELOVE
Below The Salt Staff

It's 7:30 in the Ballroom. The lights are all on and there are a few people standing in the doorway watching the sound check. It looks like somebody's little sister is fooling around on the piano and the bass player is just tuning to her for lack of anyone else. The petite figure at the piano is really getting into what she is playing, swaying and smiling at her fingers. Then she looks at the mike and begins to sing "Got to Ride". The voice seems too powerful for such a small frame, but there is no doubt, this is Wendy Waldman.

Wendy Waldman is a Warner Brothers recording artist (her second album, Gypsy Symphony, was released this June), the daughter of a Hollywood musician; a woman with deep feelings who is not going to let anyone tell her what to do with her music and who expects a lot of herself, for her own personal satisfaction as a professional and to break the stereotype of the woman musician (the lies about women not being able to keep time, play powerful guitar or do their own arranging). Her home background was classical, but her roots are really blues, delta blues. Her influences are varied (Gershwin, Debussy, Taj Mahal, Aretha, Skip James, Keith Jarrett, Stevie Wonder, Ravel, and the Beach Boys) but each one finds a place in her music.

This night, Wendy is tired. She's been on the road for a long time and she has more shows ahead. Taking all with a sense of humor she laughs, "I'm a professional, I know how to alter my consciousness enough to do a good show." So at 10:15, a bright and alert Wendy strides on stage, her tiny self overshadowing tall Peter Bernstein, her bass player and only accompanist. With Wendy on acoustic guitar and Peter on his towering bass, she smiles into "Vaudville Man" (which is on Maria Muldaur's album) and we are in her living room. Honestly she talks with us, responding to crowd.

"Northwoods Man" is pretty-much like the album version, vocally, but the instrumentation is sorely missed. Next is "Waiting for the Rain". It's forceful, yet simple guitar mixing well with the soft, full, deep vocals and blue sighs, reflecting expertly the pain inside. "Green", a traditional tune, finds Wendy looking at her fingering in rapid, bird-like movements. The guitar seems too big for her, but she handles it well.

Peter moves to electric bass for "Old time love", a song from her first, almost obscure, album. The audience begins to clap along. They are with her. "Road Song" finds Peter on piano, playing quietly so that Wendy's voice is even more prominent. To Wendy, this song is who she is. What started as a slow concert, a tired show, has picked up and taken off. The album arrangements are no longer necessary--her powerful voice fills the Ballroom. "Cold Back on Me" was much like the album, but only proved that the vocals on the album were not studio induced. Wendy's vocal quality is as real and as honest as herself.

What Wendy can do on guitar, she can do even better on dulcimer. When "the orchestra comes in", it does so excellently on "Come On Down". The live version of this is so different from the album. Although there are fewer instruments, it is fuller, richer when done live. Maria Muldaur is going to have a hard time doing "Gringo en Mexico" (Wendy's contribution to her new album) as well, as full of guts and feeling as Wendy meant it to be, and as she does it herself.

"Mad, Mad, Me", the highlight of the evening, starts slower and more tenderly than her album version, the piano being as innocent as her voice. Then both voice and instrument come from somewhere deep inside. The bass player closes his eyes and leans back, listening and understanding where this music is coming from. With the softest, most touching ending, Wendy stands and says good-night. She does not feel that she deserves an encore, but the audience disagrees and she is brought back. She does "All My Lives", but anything after "Mad, Mad Me" is a let down.

The 564 people who paid to see her shuffle out of the Ballroom. They have seen more than just a concert, they have been given part of Wendy Waldman's life. They know this, leave, and slowly, as if leaving the living room of a life long friend, looking back at the door she disappeared into. Wendy had a good time and so did they, but then "life is good to those who sing a song".

The absolute truth about DES

There has been much contradictory, and often emotional information in the mass media about diethylstilbestrol.

A sub-committee of the Student Health Advisory Board worked over the summer, discussing and reading about this issue. Part of the sub-committee's work was to compose some basic information around this issue for students, which follows.

Diethylstilbestrol or DES, as it is commonly called, is a synthetic estrogen.

What Are Its Uses?

First synthesized in 1938, DES has since been used effectively in treating hormone deficiencies associated with menopause, in the management of functional uterine bleeding, for relief or prevention of breast engorgement after delivery and as therapy in the treatment of inoperative prostate cancer and breast cancer in post-menopausal women.

In the late 1940's through the 1960's, DES was also prescribed for women considered to be at risk of miscarriaging because of prior abnormal bleeding or previous miscarriage. However, there was no conclusive evidence to support the clinical use of DES to prevent miscarriages and this use was discontinued by 1965.

More recently DES has been prescribed as a "morning-after pill," following unprotected intercourse.

Why the Concern?

The recent controversy over DES revolves around two separate issues. 1) The use of DES as a "morning-after pill," and 2) the concern that women exposed to DES in utero (daughters whose mothers took the drug during pregnancy) face a higher risk of adenosis (benign vaginal cell abnormality) and of vaginal and cervical cancer. These issues should not be confused.

Morning-after Pill

DES used as a post-coital birth control method alters the speed in which the egg moves through the fallopian tubes and uterus thus preventing implantation in the uterus. If the drug is started within 72 hours after unprotected intercourse (preferably as soon as possible) and taken for 5 consecutive days, it is extremely effective in preventing pregnancy.

Uncomfortable side effects include nausea and vomiting. There is presently no evidence linking the use of this medication as a post-coital birth control method with subsequent genital cancer in the user. However, due to the suspected association of fetal DES exposure and the potential of delayed appearance of cancer in female offspring, abortion should be seriously considered if pregnancy is not successfully prevented by the use of the morning-after pill.

The decision to use the "morning-after pill" must be made by each individual woman. Its use is usually reserved for emergency situations, including rape. It is important to discuss with a health professional such items as general medical history, family history of genital or breast cancer, previous exposure to DES, and menstrual disorders, and possibility of pregnancy from previous intercourse.

"DES Daughters"

It is estimated that between 1945 and 1965 several million women received DES during their pregnancies to prevent miscarriage. Since then a higher incidence of adenosis (Adenosis is a benign vaginal cell abnormality. This means it is mild, not cancerous and doing little or no known harm.) has been detected in the female offspring of these women. A higher incidence of cancer of the vagina and cervix has also been noted in these daughters (about 100 have been recorded as of 5/ 74).

Both conditions have been traced to DES exposure. At the present state of research methods and knowledge available, the progression of adenosis to cancer has not been established. Research in this area is just beginning.

Are You a DES Daughter?

All DES daughters should be medically evaluated on a regular basis all their lives. Physicians disagree on the definition of "regular basis" -- recommendation ranging from twice a year to once every two years. Most of the vaginal cancer suspected to be DES related has been discovered in females between 7 and 25 years of age (major incidence between 14-25 years). The symptom in the majority of cases has been abnormal vaginal bleeding.

In addition to a routine gynecological exam, (including careful visual investigation of the vaginal walls, and palpation, and a pap test), there are other techniques which may be employed to assist in detection of abnormal cells. An instrument called a colposcope may be used which provides magnification of the vaginal walls. An iodine staining test can also help the physician discover abnormalities.

If abnormalities are discovered, cellular tissue samples (biopsies) from the vagina and cervix will be taken However, all these methods are not always available or medically indicated in all cases.

Every woman is encouraged to look into her birth history to determine if she was exposed to DES or related hormonal drug. If possible, she should discuss this topic with her mother. Women who know or suspect they had been exposed to DES in utero may consult the Health Services or their own gynecologist and have their questions addressed.

Women should be aware of the differing opinions toward recommended procedures for screening and treatment of DES daughters. The association between DES exposure in utero and cancer in female offspring is a relatively recent discovery in the field of medical research. The dilemma is highlighted by the scarcity of reliable research on this topic and discrepancies in existing reports.

A collection of relevant articles is available in the Health Education Office (Health Center, Room 250). Other pamplets and reprints on such topics as pregnancy testing, vaginitis, and the gynecologic examination, contraception, and abortion are also available.

Freshman registers are now available

Freshman Registers will be available this week from 10 - 4 p.m. at a table on the Campus Center concourse.

Alpha Phi Omega, National Serivce Fraternity who sponsored the registers which were made this summer said 620 copies out of the 1,623 requested by Freshmen have yet to be picked up.

After Friday, students can call 5-2068 for information on obtaining the registers.

Copies may also be purchased by Upperclassmen at $4.50 each for the soft cover edition.

Swiss defeat attempt to expel foreigners

GENEVA [UPI] — Swiss voters heeded warnings against committing economic suicide and voted three to one yesterday to reject a move to evict 500,000 foreign workers and their families.

All Switzerland's 22 cantons, or states, voted against the proposal.

The final result was 1,689,870 votes against to 878,739 in favor, a proportion of 66 per cent to 34 per cent. About 70 per cent of the voters turned out, a heavy showing compared to past elections.

To succeed, a national referendum requires a majority of both the states and the popular vote.

"We are thankful that the negative vote was so overwhelming in order to deter similar moves in the future," a government spokesman said.

The rejected referendum was sponsored by a splinter party called National Action.

Conservative leader James Schwarzenbach, who opposed the latest antiforeign referendum, said he plans to collect 50,000 signatures required to force a new vote to evict 500,000 foreigners in 10 years instead of three.

Gerhard Winterberger, president of the Swiss Union of Commerce and Industry, expressed relief that the proposal was so resoundingly rejected.

"This is the end of a great insecurity," he said.

"Switzerland's industry and commerce has been spared enormous difficulties. And great human suffering and hardship has also been avoided."

Geneva, which has a 33 per cent foreign population, rejected the motion by the highest proportion in the country — 76 per cent against and 24 per cent in favor.

"At least Switzerland has done its best to prove we are not xenophobic madmen and realize what foreigners have done for our country and how important they are," said Daniel Rey, 35, who runs a small communications firm.

Government officials, labor groups, and church leaders all appealed to voters to turn down the referendum in two days of voting.

Swiss industry relies heavily on foreign labor.

The turnout was heavy by Swiss standards, averaging 65 per cent. The usual turnout is about 40 to 50 per cent.

Ford might release his talks with Nixon

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford said yesterday is willing to make public the tapes of any conversations between himself and former President Richard M. Nixon in the White House prior to Nixon's resignation.

The only condition Ford placed upon such disclosure was the approval of the Watergate special prosecutor.

There has been no indication so far whether any Ford-Nixon tapes exist. But the question whether Ford would release any that were found, which arose initially in connection with an investigation of whether Ford agreed to pardon Nixon before the former President left office, had never before gotten such an unqualified affirmative answer.

In a wide-ranging interview, Ford also said he has told no one on his White House staff of possible Cabinet changes he may be considering; that Nelson A. Rockefeller's vice presidential nomination is being scrutinized under "a pretty stringent standard" by Congress, but that he believes Rockefeller still will be confirmed; and that the Republican Party's prospects in next month's elections are "not as pessimistic" as the polls indicate.

The President made these and other remarks in a discussion with reporters aboard Air Force One as he returned to Washington Saturday night from a three-state campaign swing through the south in behalf of Republican candidates. Ford asked that his remarks be held for release until Sunday night.

Dean's credibility faces test by defense in Watergate trial

WASHINGTON [UPI] — John W. Dean's testimony so far in the Watergate cover-up trial has presented several previously unknown details, including allegations that former White House aide John D. Ehrlichman lied to the FBI during its original investigation of the break-in.

Dean returns to the witness chair today for his fourth and perhaps final day of direct examination by chief trial prosecutor James F. Neal. This will be followed by several days of cross-examination by defense lawyers.

Attorneys for the five defendants make clear in their opening statements that they intended to attack Dean's credibility.

The prosecution also is expected today to play the fourth and fifth presidential tape recordings of the trial. These are of Dean's talks with former President Richard M. Nixon on the afternoon of March 21, 1973, and the following day — the time Nixon once claimed he learned of the cover-up.

Ehrlichman, former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, former White House aide H.R. Haldeman and former re-election aides Robert C. Mardian and Kenneth W. Parkinson are entering the fourth week of their trial for conspiracy to hide the Watergate scandal.

Much of Dean's testimony last week duplicated what he said during the Senate Watergate hearings 16 months ago.

But Dean also related some new incidents, including his charge that Ehrlichman lied to the FBI — with Dean's help — and asked the Justice Department if it could be lenient with the men charged with the June, 1972, break-in at Democratic National Headquarters.

TOUR LEAVES UNIV. OF MASS. .... 8:00 AM
Leaves Amherst Center .... 7:50 AM
Leaves Smith College .... 7:30 AM
Leaves Mt. Holyoke College .... 7:15 AM

Northbound, our tour bus will operate via Routes 91 and 89 through the heart of Vermont on our way to cosmopolitan Montreal. The Vermont countryside will still be showing some of its foliage beauty, and we'll enjoy rest and luncheon stops en route. Arrival in Montreal should be about 2:00 PM.

Immediately upon arrival, we'll check into our twin rooms at the LaSalle Hotel on Drummond Street, right in the heart of downtown Montreal, and within an easy walk of everywhere. These accommodations are of course included in the tour price.

Maps and suggestions for activities in Montreal will be provided by the tour escort on the way up. The balance of the afternoon and evening are free for your choice of activities, including sight seeing at historic and famous spots, dining, visits to night clubs, movies, plays, and just plain enjoying a visit in this glittering, second-largest French-speaking city in the world.

Departure on Monday won't be until 3:00 PM, allowing a full morning plus early afternoon for additional activities of your choice. And since it's a weekday in Montreal (not a holiday), many stores will be open Monday which were not on Sunday.

A different route will be used on the return trip to the college area, following the Adirondack Northway down past Lake Champlain and Lake George, skirting Albany and Pittsfield, to reach your destination with expected return about 9:30 PM.

Note: Price is quoted per person, twin basis. We must ask that those booking and sharing a room purchase their tickets at the same time. We regret that single bookings cannot be accepted.

To discuss trade, oil and migrants

Ford confers with Mexican president today

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford holds his first official meeting with a Latin American chief of state today when he confers at the border with Luis Echeverria Alvarez, president of Mexico. The talks are expected to center on trade, oil and illegal migrants.

Ford and Alvarez will confer on both sides of the border in the area of Nogales, two cities with the same name facing each other across the international line between Arizona and Sonora, Mexico.

Bilateral issues were expected to take precedence over such hemispheric matters as the Inter-American system in general and Cuba in particular.

The oil issue came to the fore only a week ago, following press reports of the discovery of rich petroleum fields in southeastern Mexico, with recoverable reserves of high-grade crude estimated at anywhere between 1 and 20 billion barrels.

The importance of Mexico's new oil find was underscored Sunday when a spokesman for the Mexican president announced that Echeverria will bring his two top oil experts to the meeting with Ford.

Echeverria spent Sunday in remote Cabo San Lucas, Baja California, preparing for the talks. He met there with natural resources minister Horacio de la Pena and with Antonio Devali, the president of the government-owned petroleum company Pemex. Both will accompany Echeverria to Nogales, the spokesman said. The spokesman had no immediate reaction to a Latin American news agency report from Washington that Ford would offer to authorize entry of a limited number of Mexican farm workers if Mexico would help police the border against clandestine entry.

"The Mexican government wants an agreement with the United States whereby our citizens who work in the United States will have legal protection and receive humane and just treatment," he said. "We are ready to sign an agreement to set an annual quota of workers."

Rogers C. B. Morton, recently named to head a new U.S. national energy program, told a Senate committee this week that reports of the new oil find in Mexico's Tabasco and Chiapas states made the Ford-Echeverria meeting "very timely."

Echeverria said in Mexico City Saturday the size of the new petroleum fields had been exaggerated abroad in an attempt to drive down world oil prices. And Horacio Flores de la Pena, the natural resources minister, has declared that Mexico will "not sell a single barrel of oil" below prices being charged by the Arab countries.

James Earl Ray goes to court to renew King conspiracy theory

MEMPHIS, Tenn. [UPI] — The man who once admitted firing the shot that killed Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. may have an opportunity this week to renew a conspiracy theory he hinted at five years ago.

If all goes as scheduled, James Earl Ray will be led by U.S. marshals into the 11th floor courtroom of U.S. District Judge Robert M. McRae Jr. at 9:30 a.m. tomorrow.

The bailiff's call of "all rise" will signal the start of a process that could lead to the new trial Ray sought when he penned a note to the late Criminal Court Judge W. Preston Battle. The letter was written less than 24 hours after he pleaded guilty to the murder of King in exchange for a 99-year sentence in the Tennessee State Prison.

Ray, now 47, wrote Battle that his famous attorney, Percy Foreman of Houston, Tex., had pressured him into the guilty plea-a monosyllabic admission that mentioned no details.

The letter reached Battle on March 15, 1969-five days after the one hour, 55 minute trial. Late that afternoon, Battle was found dead in his office, the victim of a heart attack.

During the trial, Ray stood up in court unexpectedly and said, "I can't agree with Mr. Clark."

Battle, obviously taken back, asked, "Mr. who?"

"Ramsay Clark," Foreman interjected. Clark, then attorney general, had said several times that no one but Ray was involved in the April 4, 1968, murder.

"You don't agree with whose theories?" Battle again asked the defendant.

"Mr. Canale's, Mr. Clark's and J. Edgar Hoover's theories about the conspiracy," Ray answered. Phil Canale Jr., chief prosecutor at the trial, and Hoover, director of the FBI, had also said Ray acted alone.

After the brief exchange, no more was said or asked about a conspiracy.

In the five years since his trial, Ray has continued to insist, in every available court, that Foreman coerced him into the plea. He said the lawyer hoped to make money by boosting the sale of William Bradford Huie's book, "He Slew the Dreamer." Ray had signed his share of the royalties over to the attorney.

Early this year, the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered a full evidentiary hearing to determine the validity of Ray's claim. The hearing, technically a habeas corpus proceeding, will be to determine whether the guilty plea should be set aside and a new trial ordered.

Soviets try to regain Mideast influence

LONDON [UPI] — After months of indecision the Soviet Union has embarked on determined efforts for a comeback in the Middle East to counter growing American influence in the vital strategic area, Middle East diplomats said yesterday.

They said the new Soviet push may mark the end of the Russo-American honeymoon in Middle East policy, and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger was expected to face a new and tough Soviet Middle East attitude in his talks in Moscow with Soviet leaders in the middle of this week.

The sources cited last week's Moscow visit of Egypt's Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmi, Russia's demand for an early Geneva peace conference and party secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev's decision to go to Cairo early next year as the turning point in Kremlin strategy.

The Russians have been grudgingly on the sidelines of Middle East diplomacy since the October 1973 Arab-Israeli war.

"After treading softly and leaving the field to Dr. Kissinger, the Russians have now clearly gone over to the diplomatic offensive, and the preliminary signs are they are making inroads into American strategy," one Middle East diplomat said.

The key factor is the apparent reconciliation between Moscow and Cairo, because Egypt has remained the decisive factor in any Middle East strategy.

They said the new Moscow moves were underscored by an undertaking to resume the flow of substantial supplies of sophisticated arms to Egypt, backing for a Palestinian state, and the demand for an early Geneva conference as opposed to Kissinger's step-by-step diplomacy on a bilateral basis which has kept Russia out of the negotiations.

To what extent President Anwar Sadat, the chief advocate so far of closer cooperation with the United States, is ready to switch his policy back toward the Soviet Union is not clear.

Russia poured sophisticated weapons into Syria in recent months worth some $2 billion, and more recently the Russians have, after long hesitation, switched openly to the side of the Palestinians. But, what really mattered was Cairo, the sources said.

Rockefeller's chances hurt by disclosures

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Nelson A. Rockefeller's nomination as vice president is damaged, but not dead. dead.

Congressmen who will deal with the nomination after the election recess say they are disturbed by recent disclosures concerning questionable use of Rockefeller wealth. But they say that what has been disclosed so far is not serious enough to block confirmation.

Only if additional damaging information about Rockefeller's wealth or his personal or political life is uncovered would there be a strong chance for rejection of the Rockefeller nomination, the congressmen said.

Late Saturday night President Ford said most congressmen of either party could not weather the kind of investigation undergone by Rockefeller. Ford talked with newsmen on his flight back to Washington from a day of campaigning in the south.

"I'm still convinced he would make a good vice president," Ford said, adding that he expected confirmation. He said Congress was applying a "pretty stringent standard" and that "one can't help but wonder how many people on either side of the aisle can undergo this kind of scrutiny. It's pretty rugged."

When Congress reconvenes in mid-November, Rockefeller will be called before the House and Senate committees and grilled thoroughly about several incidents. They include his gifts of nearly $2 million to associates, his brother's financing of a book derogatory of Arthur Goldberg who ran against Nelson Rockefeller for governor in 1970, and the audit of his income tax returns.

Portland prepares for blackouts

Oregon extortionist dynamites power lines

PORTLAND, Ore. [UPI] — Emergency generators were readied yesterday while hospitals and utilities waited the next move of an extortion bomber who has dynamited 11 high voltage transmission line towers.

"Our intent is to either collect $1 million or to make you people wish to hell we had," said a typewritten letter from the bomber. It was signed by "J. Hawker," a Civil War term meaning looter or guerrilla.

Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) officials said the letter was Friday night, addressed to administrator Don Hodel. A carbon was sent to the local FBI office. Existence of the letter was not disclosed until late Saturday.

Hodel said the BPA would not pay the extortion demand and offered a $100,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and convictions of persons responsible for the blasts. He said patrols of transmission facilities were stepped up. BPA oversees 12,000 miles of transmission line in the Pacific Northwest with four or five towers per mile through the mountain country.

Hodel urged hunters and hikers to stay away from any suspicious looking devices attached to transmission towers.

"The explosions have thrown metal fragments up to 400 yards," he said.

Officials would not speculate on how many persons are involved in the plot, but the extortion letter said the bomber has "The men and equipment to keep as many towers down as is necessary to force compliance with our demands."

Portland General Electric and Pacific Power and Light have begun emergency procedures to provide electricity in the event BPA transmission facilities are knocked out. PP&L started firing up the old Lincoln Street steam plant and beefed up patrolling of transmission lines.

Portland Police, Commander James Brouillette, who heads an emergency command post established following the explosions, said the National guard was notified it may be utilized in the event of a serious outage.

The first blast was discovered Oct. 4. Three towers south of The Dalles, Ore., had been damaged by explosions. Officials did not report the incident, hoping the bomber would return to find out what had happened.

More bombings occurred Wednesday and Friday nights, bringing to 11 the number of towers hit by explosions. Three of the structures toppled, but no serious outages occurred.

Ford to see Brezhnev

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger is expected to set the stage for a late-November summit meeting between President Ford and Soviet Leader Leonid I. Brezhnev when he visits Moscow this week, administration officials said yesterday.

The meeting between Ford and Brezhnev in the Soviet Pacific Coast city of Vladivostok Nov. 23-24 is expected to be announced during Kissinger's Moscow visit — possibly soon after his arrival on Oct. 23.

Neither the White House nor the State Department would officially confirm the predictions of an early Ford-Brezhnev meeting which originated with Soviet sources in Japan.

Albert gets plane

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford said yesterday that House Speaker Carl Albert, in line to succeed to the Presidency until a new vice president takes office, will be given use of a presidential plane to campaign for Democrats.

"We have made Air Force II available to him," Ford said in an interview with a group of reporters aboard his own official aircraft, Air Force One, as he returned from a one-day, three state campaign swing through the south.

Jaworski speaks

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Special Watergate Prosecutor Leon Jaworski indicated yesterday his office may seek some new indictments and said former President Richard Nixon probably would have pleaded the Fifth Amendment if he had been forced to testify before a grand jury.

Jaworski said that virtually the whole story of Nixon's involvement in the Watergate cover-up would come out during the current trial of five of his former staff and campaign aides.

The special prosecutor, who has submitted his resignation effective Nov. 1, again declined to say whether he would have prosecuted Nixon if President Ford had not pardoned him.

He said the issue was now "moot" because of the pardon, but repeated his belief the Nixon's acceptance of the pardon amounted to an admission of guilt.

Israel builds army

By United Press International

Israel is racing to complete a new first-line defense system on the Syrian Golan Heights before the onset of winter, Israeli newsmen on a tour of the strategic area reported yesterday.

Military sources said similar construction activity was visible inside Syrian territory across the cease-fire line.

The reports came as former defense minister Moshe Dayan urged Israel to talk peace first with Syria and not Jordan because the biggest threat of renewed warfare comes from Damascus.

Udall eyes '76 race

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Rep. Morris Udall, who wants the 1976 Democratic Presidential nomination, said yesterday he doesn't think anyone will ever win it again in the same way that Sen. George McGovern did in 1972.

Referendum on state ballot

Campaign reform question confuses officials

BOSTON [UPI] — Massachusetts officials have been making verbal statements concerning a campaign reform referendum question in apparent contradiction to a recent attorney general's opinion, which has been encorporated into an official booklet sent by law to every registered voter in the state.

The verbal statements, offered in answer to telephone inquiries about the effect of the campaign reform referendum, were given to United Press International by spokespersons in the secretary of state's election information office and in the office of the independent director of campaign finance.

Though the elections information officials say they are virtually certain the referendum, if approved, would liberalize the amount an individual could give a candidate in one year, Attorney General Robert H. Quinn said in a May opinion the referendum would have no effect on the $1000 ceiling on annual individual contributions.

The referendum question was placed on the ballot through the initiative petition route after the Massachusetts Legislature refused to adopt it in the 1974 session.

The campaign financing proposal would open political bank accounts to the public, reduce from two to one the number of campaign committees allowed to a candidate and effect dozens of other changes in the state's political campaign law.

Though the proposal was rejected by the 1974 legislature, the bill was credited with inducing lawmakers to adopt the campaign reform now on the books.

When the initiative petition referred to that figure.

However, the reform reduced the figure to $1,000, allowing opponents of a further change to argue that the initiative petition would raise the ceiling to its previous $3,000 level.

Supporters of the initiative petition sought to attach a "perfecting" amendment to their bill, reducing the $3,000 figure to $1,000 to make it consistent with the reform passed by the 1973 legislature.

The attorney general May 28 wrote to Secretary of State John F.X. lavore that the perfecting amendment "does not materially change the substance of the measure" and therefore is acceptable.

But word of that opinion of this key question apparently has not reached state officials responsible for answering voter questions on election issues.

An official in the election information office, when asked if the referendum raised the ceiling from $1,000 to $3,000, said "as far as I know it will."

State veterans bonus program lacks funds

BOSTON [UPI] — The six-year-old Massachusetts Vietnam veterans bonus program is down to its last $6 million, but officials say just how much longer it will last is uncertain.

According to a spokesman for the Bonus Division of the state Treasurer's office a total of 25,183 bonuses have been issued to qualified veterans since the program began in 1968.

He said the bonuses of $200 and $300 have a total value of $49.3 million leaving a balance of more than $6 million.

Under the terms of the program veterans must have served at least six months between July 1, 1958 and April 1, 1973 to qualify. Those who served in the Vietnam conflict get a $300 bonus, while noncombat veterans get $200.

In addition the veteran must have lived in Massachusetts for at least six months prior to entering the service.

The spokesman said there are no current plans to shut down the bonus office though it will be relocated in the new state office building sometime next year.

Six persons killed in New Britain heist

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. [UPI] — Police yesterday appealed to the public for information in the "slaughterhouse" slaying of six persons shot to death in a bakery. They said they had no suspects in the apparent robbery.

Four of the victims were customers and the remaining two were the owner and a clerk at the Donna Lee Bakery, where police discovered the bodies in a rear room Saturday night at about 9 p.m.

"It looks like a slaughterhouse," one policeman said.

The grisly discovery was prompted by a man who made an anonymous telephone call to police headquarters, Police Chief Thomas P. Ormsby said. The caller said he thought the owner forgot to lock the door.

John Salerni, 55, of New Britain, the owner, was killed with a shotgun blast in the head, while the other five, including two women, were shot at close range in the head with a handgun, probably a .45 caliber pistol.

National Guard remain on alert in Boston

BOSTON [UPI] — Massachusetts National Guardsmen will remain on alert "for some period of time," against further outbreaks of violence in Boston's court-ordered desegregation plan, Gov. Francis W. Sargent said Sunday.

"I can't say whether it will be a matter of weeks or days or weeks or even more than that. I think it's important to have a reserve force there because the Boston Police Department is stretched very thin and they're tired," said Sargent in a broadcast interview.

His remarks came as the National Guard replaced some 450 men who had been put on standby in area armories for a week with a slightly larger number force.

Both opponents and proponents of U.S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity's busing order staged demonstrations Saturday, both of them peaceful. About 1,500 anti-busing demonstrators rallied in Hyde Park and listened to speakers demand a meeting with President Ford and call on the Supreme Court to overturn Garrity's order.

minds matter

MITRE is a place which daily faces the challenge of minds over matter, and where, even more importantly, minds matter a lot. Since we're a nonprofit system engineering company operating wholly in the public interest and dealing with tough problems assigned to us by more than a score of governmental agencies, we know that our greatest resource is the human mind. And we know that the kind of mind we need also needs to know that it will be working on important problems with other professionals. What's more, we'll be quite specific in spelling out your assignment to you. All of this because you matter . . . and because at MITRE, minds matter.

We are currently seeking new graduates to work in command and control systems, information processing systems, electronic surveillance systems, communications systems, and environmental, health and other social systems.

If you're an EE, Computer Science, Math, Operations Research, or Physics major, you could be working on problems in telecommunications, voice communications, microwave and digital signal processing, educational information systems, radar design, propagation studies or advanced modulation, coding, error control and data compression techniques.

Or, you might want to get involved with solid waste disposal techniques, digital information systems, data handling and reduction, microprogramming techniques, data base structure, time sharing, text processing, management information systems, computer program design and development or evaluation of present day software for phase-over to next generation machines. These are just a few of the areas in which you might get involved at MITRE.

All of these positions require a minimum of a BS degree. If you have more than a bachelor's, that's even better. Almost ⅔ of our 750 technical staff members have advanced degrees.

All these openings are at our corporate headquarters at Bedford, Massachusetts (suburban Boston). If you are interested and think you can meet our standards, send us your resume. Better yet, we'd like to talk to you on campus. Sign up at your Placement Office. We'll be there on October 31.

Capitalist monster

By OLU MOLOYE

Two decades ago the Western nations could get away with draining the resources of the so-called under-developed nations to placate their own greedy people. In justification, they claimed that there was a "civilizing mission", and that the arrangement benefited both sides. But the interests of the two sides no longer coincide, even superficially; and the conflicts have grown out of the old symbiosis, as the result of the civilizing mission. The people of the West are possessed by the psychology of plentitude; not only do they expect, but they demand, as their right, continued abundance cheap. In celebrating and promoting their way of life, they have now encouraged the people and the politicians of those exploited nations to demand abundance for themselves; their expectations rise.

Now, ironically, the people of the West and their politicians are blaming the developing nations for their own economic woes. Having stuffed themselves for a long time, they are grown fat, and now they complain that those whose wealth they ate are now starving them. After spreading the "gospels of freedom, prosperity, and self-serving enterprise, they now ask the developing nations to cooperate in the continued psychic castration, destitution, and gradual diminution of their populations. I predict that the developing nations will not cooperate in such a self-destructive understanding, despite recent threats of possible reductions in food aid.

Interestingly, the theorists and politicians all recognize that economic interdependence is essential to the perpetuation of this callous economic system. Partnership presupposes equality, but has the average Westerner or his average chosen policy-maker ever considered any of the developing nations equal to his own country? We all know the old fable of the inferiority-superiority dichotony. Supposedly, this fable is now discredited. If you do not believe in it, why do you blame the developing nations for trying to improve the lot of their people? In the West, society teaches that to ignore an opportunity to improve one's lot is a sure sign of folly, if not of sinful wastefulness and neglect of duty, and the virtuous ever to progress. The West has praised "progress" as the shibboleth of civilization for so long that it has initiated in the developing nations an irreversible trend.

We must hold capitalist prolifigacy, not the recent actions of the OPEC nations, responsible for the psychology of plenty which infects the people of the West; that mentality encourages them to demand ever more and more of what they had no good reason to think they deserved in the first place. The survival of the fat monster which the economic system of the West has become depends on the maximization at the expense of the exploite and deprivileged peoples; the rule of justice does not depend on the survival of the fat monster, although the current clamor indicates that many in the West with their double standards, think so.

The twentieth century free market custodian now threatens the developing nations with starvation as retribution for what it calls cooperation; but cooperation, or rather acquiescence, has led for instance to deforestration and defacement of the land. The developing nations would have more to lose from continuing in their acquiescence than they will lose by their new defiance. Western societies and Western policy-makers, too accustomed to thinking of their own version of history as the definitive one, must recognize the power potential of these nations, and must understand the new policies of these emerging powers, these policies which to the West seem preposterous and unreasonable, as a logical development of several centuries of the West's own policies.

Letters to the editor

Bringing the money back home

To the Editor:

After reading the letter to the Editor in the Collegian of Friday, October 11, it appears that there seems to be some misunderstanding about the intent of the story on the Dormitory Bond payments. It is true that the bonds financed the building of our dormitories. That, in itself, is not necessarily bad. That really isn't the point though. State bonds of that sort aren't really available for ANYONE to purchase because most of us haven't got the cash. The only people who can purchase the bonds of this sort are firms like the Chase Manhatten Bank, Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith, Morgan Guaranty and Trust Company and others who control most of the wealth of the country. A look at some of their holdings leads one to believe that the day is soon approaching when this country is controlled, not by duly elected government officials, but by small groups of men in corporate board rooms. Is this perversion of democracy, in the name of "free enterprise", wrong? Surely, this IS a cause for public outcry, if there ever was one!

It is no great risk for these companies who take out these bonds. All these bonds are backed by the State. The only way in which one of these companies could lose their investment would be if the whole economic structure of the State, itself, collapsed. Clearly, this type of catastrophe would only happen in a major depression. If such a catastrophe was to occur I am confident that the mere millions that students pay would be a mere drop in the bucket for these huge corporations.

What Mr. Corwin obviously missed was that the price we have to pay for the dormitories to these huge corporations is outrageous. The percentage we pay is far too high when you consider the economic level of the people who are paying off the bonds. These people are not John D. Rockerfeller & Co. but are students. These people, for the most part, work for minimum wage or a little above that — when they can find work at all. These huge companies, on the other hand, aren't in really desperate need of our money. Surely, they need our money less than we do! I feel that it is imperative that some method be found to adjust these payments. Students don't have limitless sources of funds available. Many of us just can't afford it anymore.

It is my firm opinion that at least half of the money that goes to these huge corporations could be better utilized here at UMass. The dormitories here are easily sub-standard housing levels. Students pay almost one hundred dollars apiece to share a room with four walls, heat that is either too hot or not hot at all, communal bath facilities, little furniture, noisy, crowded environment and some 150 to 800 neighbors. That isn't even beginning to provide us with a decent place to live and go about reaching the goal many of us are here for — an education!

I hold that it is the responsibility and duty of the State to pick up the difference, in whole or in part, between what students can afford to pay and what the companies want to charge. That the State supposedly has no money is a common administration excuse. In reality, the State has the money. What really happens is that the money goes to be inefficiently utilized by the Boston bureaucracy. This Commonwealth is a State with a long and distinguished tradition of higher education. Yet in support of this very same higher education it ranks 49th. Think of that! Almost last in aid to Universities and Colleges. Yet, we rank 11th in the standard of living. What is really wrong is the system of taxation in this State that allows the rich to slip through loopholes while the burden is borne by middle and lower income families — many of whose children are at UMass, who are in effect suffering twice due to the mistakes of the legislature.

Finally, what about the money which stays on campus. This money should be allocated for the operation and improvement of the dormitories. Students pay this money for these purposes. Students have no choice. They must pay, if they are under 21, this money or not be allowed to attend the University. Yet, students are unable to make any decisions as to how, when and on what their money is spent. Students in the dormitories can do precious little. We can offer advice and no more. It is clear that we are forced to pay for all this and yet when it comes to the spending process we are forced to take a "seat at the back of the bus." I sincerely hope, Mr. Corwin, that your letter to the Editor was merely a misunderstanding. I hope you now have a better idea of the position of students, on this campus, and in the State, regarding our housing situation.

The problem with prisons

To the Editor:

Friday, I heard the same example used to illustrate the need for prison reform by both the state's top corrections official and a man who has been jailed longer than he has been free. Frank Hall, State Commissioner of Corrections made the concise, polished statement which follows, in a television interview. Roy Erickson, inmate of Berkshire County House of Correction, is quoted here in an excerpt from his journal, written about a year ago. Roy is not so concise or polished, but he says the same thing and elaborates it:

"It costs about $11,000 a year, to keep a man in a place like Walpole, and the only thing we can guarantee for that money is that he has a good chance of being stabbed."

—Frank Hall, State Commissioner

"We don't have to watch our Jails get worse by inmates either escaping from them or being stabbed to death. We can help rehabilitate those inmates and give them another chance to freedom. All we have to do is take a little time off our hands and go to these jails and talk to these inmates about real life and not treat them like bums... Give those people a chance to live and forget, when they are free, that they were in jail or prison. We don't need any more guards in them places. What we need is smart people with strong minds to help these inmates rehabilitate themselves....it really means a lot to me and I wish I could say more in it, like using big words, but I only have a fourth grade education and I don't know how... I am 22 years old and I really don't know much about life outside of jails. Most of my life I have been in and out of reform schools and jails. I hope whoever reads my dream can understand it and understand the way I feel."

—Roy Erickson, prisoner

Ripped off by the munchies

To the Editor:

Lately many of us have been content to be followers, accepting anything thrown to us. Let's face it, it is often easier to live this way. But the time has come to stop following. We can no longer afford to remain silent as we are ripped off by Munchies.

Anyone who has done any business at all with this campus establishment knows what a large-scale rip off they are conducting. And yet what are we doing about it? We continue to support their endeavors to take the student for everything he has.

Off campus prices continue to set new records. Yet Munchies has managed to top even these. One can find a number of products on their shelves far exceeding the prices being asked elsewhere. One such example is the half-gallon of milk. At neighboring stores this costs 77 cents. Munchies is asking for an additional 12 cents. A can of Hi-C also costs an additional 12 cents — 45 to 57 cents.

Supposedly these stores are on campus for the student. But what is it they are doing for us - ripping us off? I really think that I could get along without someone doing this for me. In fact, I know I could.

Why should we pay to have ourselves exploited? We shouldn't and yet Munchies asks us to. So let's put an end to this exploitation by refusing to do business with them until they put their prices into a more reasonable bracket.

Toughcookie bearing balls

Sitting one glum Monday morning, (as Mondays inexorably demand to be) among a den of Hatchrats, pondering the lemming like behavior of my fellow UMies migrating by, I noticed that my 49 cent Twinkies were resting upon a coffee stained document of some sort. I carefully perused through it and my amusement was somewhat mollified by its contents. It was an application to the Palmer School of Ball Bearing Design in Newark, New Jersey, some sort of higher type education. My conscience dictates that I share its contents with the public.

Questions 1-6, please answer the following to the best of your abilities.

1. What is your greatest Academic Strength?

My greatest academic strength is my uncanny ability to perceive all forms of knowledge, in their totality. There is nothing that I don't know or have known.

2. What is your greatest Academic Weakness?

My greatest academic weakness is that I can't concentrate on anything for more than five seconds. Because of this I never study. And don't intend to.

3. What is your greatest Non Academic Strength?

My greatest non academic strength is my wonderful personality with which I warm people over. After five seconds they're on my side. Unless of course they're of the Male persuasion in which case they're rotating from the nearest lamp-post.

4. What is your greatest Non Academic Weakness?

I just can't get the hang of pinochle. It's burnin' my ass.

5. Why do you want to attend the Palmer School of Ball Bearing Design, in particular?

I want to come to Palmer, because I want to come somewhere, anywhere! I've heard of the especially fine reputation that Palmer enjoys, especially among the ball bearings that I roll with. In addition, Newark, New Jersey has so much to offer. Think of the riots, slums and industrial wasteland, not to mention the Miss America Pageant only a grenade's throw away in Atlantic City. It beckons me to orgasm.

6. Finally, briefly detail why you choose to pursue Ball Bearing Design as your field?

I feel Ball Bearings are the key to the future. Without Ball Bearings, where would roller skates be? Without Ball Bearings, the Russians would be ahead in the Arms Race and threaten our very existence. I've always had a great love for them. I've used them for undreamed of purposes. You wouldn't believe what they can do. All my life I've had a strong desire to help people, save lives and help our country grow. That's why I want to pursue a graduate career in Ball Bearings.

J.T.

Sleep tight tonight, my brethren, safe in the knowledge that such as Josherina Toughcookie are the leaders of tomorrow.

Tenure and individuality

As the tenure decision season approaches each year I find myself attempting not really to justify the policy of tenure as if there exists "a tenure policy" but just to understand and make some consistency out of all the tenure decisions of the past.

It seems that somewhere in the past a policy originated which divided a professor's job into three areas: (1) teaching, (2) research, and (3) service to the university. Tenure was theoretically given based on achievement in two out of the three areas. This policy is very logical and advantageous for the University. To function on a day to day basis, service on the part of faculty members is required. To educate the students in the best possible way, good teaching is essential. To bring national prestige to the university and to continually up-date the teaching faculty, active research is mandatory.

All these areas are equal and should hold equal weight in a tenure decision. We all know of good teachers who are gone now due to a whimsical personnel committee dedicated solely to research. We also know of very poor teachers who do good research who are still with us.

I would challenge Student Senator Kelly and his policy of "contact hours." For a while it is true that the University is here to educate and teaching should be primary, it is equally true that a university which does not allow adequate time for research is dead in the long run. With time all things change and a great university is at the forefront of those changes.

I submit that the time has come to realize that each faculty member has his or her area of expertise. Those that do not want to teach for they are dedicated to research should not be forced to teach. Those who are not research oriented but love and excel at teaching should be able to teach without being hassled over research and publications. Both these areas are vital parts of any great university and each should be given equal weight. The tenure decision should once again be made in consideration of teaching, research, and service not whimsically based on the one that is popular at the time.

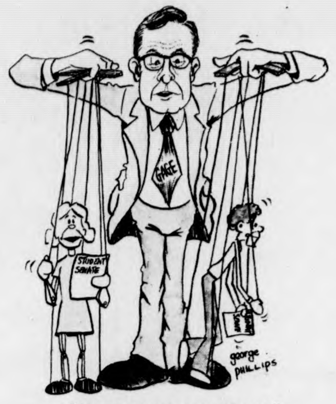
THE ROCKEFELLER COAT OF ARMS



"ADMINISTRATIVE PUPPETEERING"

INDEX: a lot for less

Compiling a yearbook that represents the lifestyle of twenty-three thousand people is no easy task, particularly when the amount of money to undertake such a product is limited by all the economic factors that are limiting campus projects in general.

Creative effects that could easily be accomplished by unlimited amounts of money must be replaced by creative effects that involve prudent but artistic uses of the graphic arts.

This year's Index is such a product. A budget cut of $30,000 plus spiraling costs of publication materials (particularly paper) would, for the average editor, limit his product to the average fare of group photos with insane captions.

The Index staff beat inflation with sensitivity, creativity and intelligent use of money budgeted for color and other special effects, and at the same time managed to present to the students at UMass a well-rounded perspective of what we are all about.

In sum, the 1974 Index is a publication of professional quality; to the staff and editor-in-chief Alan Chapman we say thank you for spending our money wisely and putting in your time and considerable talents in delivering us an excellent product.

The opinions expressed in this space are those of a majority of the editors.

Believe it or not...

By JOHN CUMMINGS

Totally mundane, irrelevant, and seemingly nonsensical courses; buildings that wouldn't look at all out of place on Manhattan; enough red tape and long lines to send the most patient of people to the psychiatric ward; and enough people to fill Fenway Park.

Certainly such a situation warrants, shall we say, a "rationalization" for existence there.

Possibly the student's dilemma could be compared to that of the boot camp soldier's. Placed under the care of the vociferous, seemingly part-animal sergeant, the serviceman must attempt to make good his test of physical brawn and might, before he is thrust into the throes of the fight which could, if he hasn't learned the mechanics of combat adequately, end his life. The drills, war games, and endless exercises all are part of the plan which, hopefully, will narrow the odds on that dreaded result. If the soldier possesses half a brain, he'll persevere and cooperate to the fullest. If he elects not to, he might just as well purchase his plot, avoiding later funeral hassles.

Likewise, the student, armed with the arsenal of novels and other reading matter--prodded by the vociferous, seemingly part-animal prof--practices for the war of life to come. The student must attempt to make good on the tests of his mental brawn and might (no matter how infantile, or complicated they may seem) before he is thrust into the throes of the fight which could, if he hasn't learned the mechanics of American money-making combat adequately, end his soft American middle-class life. The tests, papers, and seemingly endless classes all are part of the plan which, hopefully, will narrow the odds on that dreaded result. If the student possesses half a brain, he'll persevere and cooperate to the fullest. If he elects not to, he might just as well purchase his shack now, avoiding later housing hassles.

Such is the student's dilemma, whether he realizes it or not.

Economic gap is widening

(LNS) The U.S. Census Bureau recently released statistics indicating a widening gap between the economic earning power of white and black families. In the period under study, years 1967-1973, "real earning power" (earnings adjusted for inflation) of black families fell .2 per cent while during the same period, real earning power of the median white family rose 6.1 per cent.

Students describe experiences abroad

Students will have the opportunity to learn of the experiences of Jewish students from other parts of the world at 11 a.m. today in the Colonial Lounge.

Featured speakers will be: Elaine Sciammas from Egypt, Peter Dallas from Hungary, David Homajounjah of Persia, and Carl Ehrlich, an American who lived in Germany.

Orientation for support groups

Everywoman's Center will have an orientation meeting at 8 p.m. tonight in their office in Goodell for all women interested in forming and/ or joining support groups.

Experienced leaders will discuss the purposes and rewards of support groups and will help to organize the groups. Meetings will be held once a week therafter at the Center, continuing through the second week in December.

There is no fee to join the groups. Interested women should call Carol Drexler at the Center (545-0883) as soon as possible to reserve a place.

Folk art display continuing til 3rd

The Mead Art Gallery at Amherst College has announced that its current exhibition, entitled "American Folk Art," will be on display through November 3. The previous closing date was October 30.

The exhibition includes works from the College's own collection as well as pieces on loan from private collectors. Many of the works are on public display for the first time.

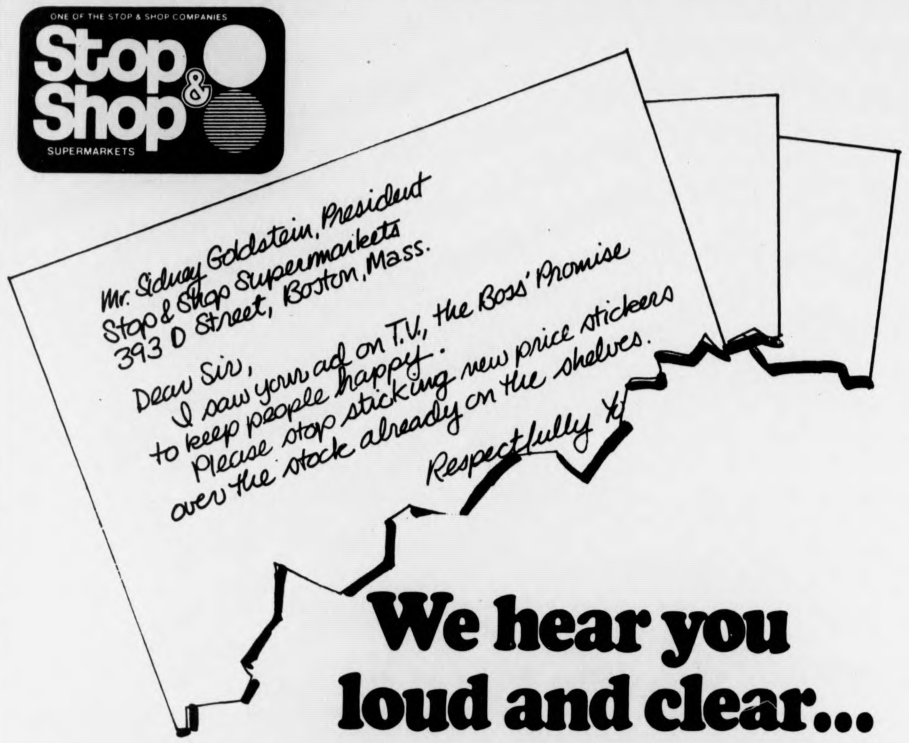
Stop & Shop
SUPERMARKETS



Mr. Sidney Goldstein, President
Stop & Shop Supermarkets
393 D Street, Boston, Mass.

Dear Sir,
I saw your ad on T.V., the Boss' Promise to keep people happy.
Please stop sticking new price stickers over the stock already on the shelves.
Respectfully Y

We hear you loud and clear...

So, effective immediately

No Repricing at Stop & Shop

on merchandise already price marked on our shelves.

From now on, you will never see 2 prices on a regular price item.

In case we goof, you'll always be charged the lowest price on any can or package that's marked with more than one price.

The policy that we're introducing in all Stop & Shop markets is the result of pre-testing different concepts in our stores dating back to February 22, 1974. However, since the start of our September campaign, "The Boss' Promise: Everything you have a right to expect, we'll do our best to give you" . . . both our Consumer Boards (We have 45 in all) and the overwhelming majority of letters cited re-pricing of merchandise already on the shelf as one of the areas of greatest concern.

So from now on, in order to keep our promise, we're going to see that you get what you've asked for:

1. When we get a manufacturer's increase in price, we will put a new unit price tag on the shelf molding, showing the new selling price.

2. A red plastic tag next to the unit price tag will identify those items on which we've received price increases.

3. But we will not change prices on the present already-price-marked shelf stock.

4. When we stock the new, higher priced merchandise, we will put it to the back of the shelf, behind the lower priced merchandise.

5. Price decreases will be identified by crossing out the original price and stamping the new lower price.

Items controlled by state laws, tobacco, beer and liquor are exempt from this policy.
Weekly specials or "sale items" priced lower than our regular prices will be re-priced upward . . . to their regular prices . . . if any are remaining after the sale event.

Plants brighten up any dorm room

By LYDIA YASIGIGIAN
Staff Reporter

You desperately want a few green plants in your room, but the ones you have all seem to die off. Well, that's where this article will help. Maybe the plants you have just aren't fit for dorm life. Don't worry, there are many more that are suitable.

A cactus, for instance, is one type of plant that would take very well to a dorm. They don't need much care, just warmth, a little water now and then and alot of lamp or sun light.

The best thing about a cactus is its price. At Willowbrooks Florist in Amherst you can get a cactus plant for as little as 79 cents (and up). You could also try Jeffrey's Florist on Rte. 9, where the cacti range in price from $2.00 on up to $7.00.

If a cactus just doesn't seem to excite you much though, you could try a terrarium. Now there's something you could practically shove in a corner and forget, and it'd still do well in your room.

An open-top terrarium needs a bit more care than one with a closed-top. It needs a moderate amount of light artificial or sun, and has to be kept moist. A closed top terrarium, on the other hand, needs only be watered about once a month, but it has to have the same amount of light as an open-top.

Terrariums range widely in price. At Willowbrook's you find them from $7.50 up to $18.50. Jeffrey's Florist start their terrarium prices at $15.00 and go on up to $25.00.

These prices may seem a bit high, but terrariums are very hardy and will last, for an indefinite amount of time.

If a terrarium isn't quite what you have in mind, how about a rubber plant? These plants can adapt themselves to almost any condition, including your room at the dorm. One thing a rubber plant does need is a lot of light. This could be provided either through sunlight, or a bright lamp. Rubber plants cannot take too much humidity. But they are a hardy plant, requiring some plant food only during their active growth period (during spring and summer). Their price, though it seems rather high, actually isn't considering the great amount of time these plants will live. You can get a good sized one at Willowbrook's for 7.50, and a three foot plant at Jeffrey's will cost you $15.00.

Your room is already overcrowded, and you can't possibly fit anything as big as a rubber plant anywhere in it? Fear not! The age of the hanging plant is here. Hanging plants come in an almost endless variety. There are philodendrons, most types of ivy plants, rhododendrons, ferns, spider plants or any potted plant can grow out and down.

Hanging plants are very easy to care for. They need a bright light, any kind will do as long as a couple hours a day are direct sunlight. They also need to be kept moist at all times. This means watering every two or three days. They too, as with the rubber plants, need plant food, but only during their active growth period (spring and summer).

At Willowbrook's Florist you can get a fairly large sized hanging plant for an average price of $8.00. Jeffrey's, on Rte. 9, has an average price of $7.50.

Hanging plants grow quite quickly, so buying a smaller (and less expensive) one doesn't mean it'll remain small for long.

So, throw out your less hardy plants, or your plastic imitations, and try one of the plants mentioned above. Given the proper (and so little) care they need you'll be able to watch them flourish even in a crowded or tiny or hot or cold or humid or dry dorm room.

Living in a dormitory can have enough hassles, without having to put up with a drab room. Just a few plants can make any room a lot more livable, without too much effort or cost.

Graffiti grinds onward

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Writer

Graffiti: It thrives in stairwells and toilet stall walls. While sitting on the john, it can be an appropriate alternative to the Collegian.

On a hallway door in Pierpont is the social commentary "do not feed the animals — they are on the meal ticket."

At the top of the grad research tower stairwell, the one with the window that looks like a huge camera flash attachment from the ground, is a well endowed graffiti museum containing a collection of pithy literary gems. The library stairwells also contain a wealth of graffiti.

There is none of the artistic graffiti made famous outside of New York City by Norman Mailer's "The Faith of Graffiti", which included extravegantly multicolored spray painted walls. The huge expanses of barren concrete could definitely use some envigorating spraypaint. The closest UMass graffiti comes to art is with the crude pencil or pen drawings used to illustrate some of the obscenities.

What are the motivations which produce these wall fillers? Fidgety nervousness? An affinity for dirty language? Ask the handwriting analyst.

How can you catch a graffiti artist at work?

Science Fiction — "Warning: do not go any lower — there is a largeheaded dino down there".

Quotations with credits — "Virginity is like a bubble on a river — one prick and it's gone forever" from Playboy Party Jokes.

Puns — "Keep the baby, Faith" written next to an illustration of a pregnant woman.

More Science Fiction — "Gravity is a myth — the Earth sucks".

The walls of the grad research tower staircase are so thickly coated with graphite and ink that it that it seems the print structurally reinforces the building.

Most UMass graffiti is literary graffiti. Listen to the wall of the stall for pencil scratching. When you catch him, chop off his hands and mount them over the stall door as a warning to others who may be contemplating a similar mode of expression. That was the way they used to make lessons out of pirates, except they mounted the head on a post in the harbor.

When a fine arts critic of note was asked to comment on the genre of graffiti, he said: "It's the peoples culture — the people talk, the people squat".

Of all forms of writing, graffiti is the least egotistical one seen. Never is there a byline under a mural manuscript.

RECIPE EXCHANGE

By SUE KEIRAS
AND SUE DUCHIN
Staff Writers

With midterms around the next bend there's no time to start cooking. When you're out picking up your Halloween pumpkin at a local fruit and vegetable stand, pick up a few zuchinis, and 2 green peppers for a luscious: Zuchini Casserole.

The whole dish should take less than 1 hour in preparation, baking, and consumption.

EQUIPMENT:

Hot plate or electric skillet
Pyrex dish or tupperware dish
Oven (available on the lounge floors in most dorms)

INGREDIENTS:

2 or 3 medium size zuchinis (cost approx. 60 cents)
2 green peppers (usually sell 3 for 29 cents)
1 large onion
1 cup of tomato sauce or stewed tomatoes in can
1 lb. of cheddar or swiss cheese
Optional: grated parmesan cheese

PROCEDURE:

—Fry onions and peppers in butter or oil. ½ cook the zuchinis (they should be kinda hard)

—Cooking means to either boil or fry them so they soften up a little.

—Put vegetables, then spices, then tomatoe sauce in a dish. The vegetables should be sliced ½ inch thick.

—Add cheese to top (can shake on parmesan cheese if desired.)

—Place on 400 degree for 20-25 minutes.

This serves 4-6 people as a main dish or with a fish or meat main dish as a vegetable side order.

The recipe exchange needs recipes that are quick, cheap, and easy. We need your support so send your recipes to: The Collegian, c-o the Life-Style Editor.

New Japan Philharmonic appearing at the Cage

The New Japan Philharmonic with Kazuyoshi Akiyama as conductor, will appear in concert at the Curry Hicks Cage tonight at 8 p.m.

Japan's newest orchestra, the New Japan Philharmonic gave its debut performance in September of 1972, under the direction of chief conductor Seiji Ozawa, now conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 1973, the New Japan Philharmonic was invited to the Hong Kong Arts Festival and gave four very successful concerts.

This year, following their United States appearance, the Orchestra begins a three-week tour of major European cities.

Appearing in Amherst with the New Japan Philharmonic will be Minoru Nojima, the famed Japanese pianist, in a performance of Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Opus 16. The remainder of the program will be Berlioz's Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Opus 9; Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune by Claude Debussy and Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

Tickets are now on sale at the Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202, and are priced at $2 for UMass students.

Special group rates may be arranged through the Arts Council Box Office.

Riding director wins trophy

By ROBERT HAMILTON
Staff Correspondent

UMass Director of Riding, Linda Jaskiel-Hamilton, finished her show season on a successful note at the Eastern States Dressage Show in Princeton, New Jersey, recently. Jaskiel-Hamilton and Tzigan, her imported Spanish Andalusian, won the Major Dezso Szilagyi Perpetual Trophy and Grand Champion Ribbon in the Training through Second Level Division.

Jaskiel-Hamilton and Tzigan entered three classes; Training Level Test One and Two and First Level Test One, winning two firsts and a sixth respectively. The Trophy is awarded to the horse and rider attaining the highest percentage score in any class of the competition.

The pair scored 75 of a possible 100 points in Training Level Test One, topping 150 rides at the various levels. This outstanding ride also was the Best Senior Ride in the Training thru Second Level Competition.

Jaskiel-Hamilton explained that dressage is a French word meaning simply, "The training of the horse."

"Dressage is similar to figure skating in that the horse and rider perform a prescribed series of movements at the walk, trot, and canter.

How many nurses have we got?

By KATHLEEN FLYNN
Assistant Professor of Nursing

The number of applicants to the Baccalaureate Nursing Program at UMass needs to be put into perspective in relation to what has happened in Massachusetts and throughout the United States in Nursing Programs.

In 1965 the American Nurses Association issued a Position Paper, the sum and substance of this Paper was that Nursing Education belonged in Institutions of Higher learning. This came as a crushing blow to the Hospital School of Nursing that was and is still preparing the largest number of nurses for beginning nursing practice, Associate Degree programs were are are preparing more nurses than Baccalaureate Degree programs (B.S. Degrees 12.1 percent). (80.5 percent less than B.S. Degree)

From 1969 to 1973 there has been a decline in Hospital Schools of Nursing Programs (695-494), an increase in Associate Degree Programs (390-574), and an increase in Baccalaureate Programs (254-305). The increase in total basic nursing programs has not been significant (1339-1373) a total of 34 programs throughout the country in five years.

Resulting from the decrease of job availability for teachers and other baccalaureate degree educated students who may or may not have been realistic as to the job market for their skills, there has been a considerable number of persons applying to schools of nursing for a second Baccalaureate degree.

There is an increased number of males entering nursing. Thus the number of applicants far exceeds the number of possible admissions to any Collegiate nursing program in the United States or in Massachusetts.

Admitting large numbers of students may not be a problem regarding space on the campus, but it is in relation to placement in the clinical agencies. Providing faculty to supervise students in acute care situations when each faculty has 7-9 students each in a different room, with a different health problem is also a problem as well as the safety and legal factors.

A high percentage of those 80.5 percent with less than a Baccalaureate Degree in Nursing are career mobile. For the most part they do not meet admission standards. Associate Degree Nursing programs were never intended to imply automatic transfer at the Junior Year to Baccalaureate degree programs even if the Associate Degree graduate had a 4.0 cum. average. The reason why the transfer is not automatic is because she has not met the number of general education credits required for the upper division major. Technical Evaluation is not the basis for professional education.

The number of applicants to Baccalaureate Nursing programs is not likely to decline in the years ahead. The University of Massachusetts is the only baccaluareate nursing program serving Western Massachusetts. In Eastern Massachusetts, there exist six (6) State supported nursing Programs-Worcester, Fitchburg, Boston, Lowell, Salem, and South Eastern Massachusetts University, plus four (4) private institutions-Boston College, Boston University, Northeastern University, and Simmons College.

Another factor involved in increased enrollment is two Hospital Schools of Nursing in Massachusetts graduating approximately 175 students per year are expected to close within two years.

The Canon F-1.
Images are what it's all about.

Photographic equipment can be a trap. Sometimes, you can get so involved with it that you lose sight of your real purpose—making photographs.

The Canon F-1 can help you forget about equipment and concentrate on images. It was designed, and functions, as an extension of your photographic vision. It's responsive in a way that you must experience to appreciate.

And since it was conceived as a system camera, every part works together with effortless smoothness, from the more than 40 Canon FD and FL lenses to the over 200 accessories.

The heart of the camera is it's central spot metering system. With it you can use anyone's exposure system, no matter how critical, since it only measures the central 12% of the finder area—regardless of the focal length used.

So if you're spending too much time lately worrying about your equipment, it's time you stopped, and took a good look at the Canon F-1 system, and Canon's other fine cameras—the automatic, electronic EF, the full-feature FTb, and the TLb. If you're interested in images, Canon's your camera.

Murray to present "Hallelujah"

James P. Murray will be the second speaker in the Black Film Series and he will present the film "Hallelujah".

James P. Murray, formerly Film Editor and Editor-in-chief of Black Creation, the Quarterly Review of Black Arts and Letters, is Arts and Entertainment Editor of the New York Amsterdam News, the nation's largest Black weekly newspaper. His book on Black filmmaking, "To Find An Image" was published by Bobbs-Merrill in February, 1974.

A student of filmmaking for over three years and an ardent moviegoer most of his life, Murray came to the Amsterdam News in 1971. So impressed was Amsterdam News Executive Editor Bryant Rollins with his work that Rollins recommended Murray for membership in the prestigious New York Film Critics Circle after only writing for the newspaper nine months. He was elected as the organization's first Black member a few weeks later. And at this time, he is the only full-time Black film critic in the country.

Murray, who has also written about film in The New York Times, Encore, The Drama Review, Black Enterprise and Harlem's Community News Serivce, has covered the movie scene from both New York and Hollywood during the past three years. He has traveled on location with several motion pictures in production and has interviewed over 60 Black film artists in less than 24 months. They include directors like Ossie Davis, Gordon Parks, Sr., and Melvin Van Peebles; actors like Richard Roundtree (of "Shaft") and Ron O'Neal (of "Super Fly"); and Actresses like Rosalind Cash and Cicely Tyson.

The film showing and lecture will take place Monday, Oct 21, 1974, in Thompson Hall Room 106 at 8:00 p.m. The Admission is free and the public is invited. The program is being sponsored by the Program Council and Harambee.

ARE YOU ELIGIBLE FOR FOOD STAMPS

We'd Like to Help You get more Food Buying Power with Food Stamps. Here's two simple tests to find out if you qualify

Finast®
SUPERMARKETS

1. The first test is your "resources."

Your "resources" include money on hand or in a checking or savings account, stocks and bonds, money from insurance settlements, inheritances, prizes and awards, and money you get all at once (Lump sum payments) from social security or other sources (not monthly checks). This includes resources of all households members. This does not include car, furnishings, house, personal belongings, and income-producing property.

So, if your RESOURCES are less than $1,500 you may qualify for food stamps.

If one of the participating members of your household is over 60, you may have up to $3,000 in RESOURCES and still qualify.

2. The second test uses your income after deductions. To begin, estimate your take-home income, after the deductions listed below:

FULL DEDUCTIONS

FEDERAL AND STATE INCOME TAX
SOCIAL SECURITY OR MANDATORY RETIREMENT
UNION DUES
MANDATORY EDUCATION COSTS
COURT ORDERED ALIMONY OR CHILD SUPPORT
ANY MEDICAL, DENTAL COSTS, & HEALTH INSURANCE PREMIUMS OVER $10 CHILD CARE (IF NECESSARY FOR WORK)

POSSIBLE DEDUCTIONS

SHELTER EXPENSES IF OVER 30% OF INCOME AFTER DEDUCTIONS.
SHELTER INCLUDES RENT OR MORTGAGE PAYMENTS, INSURANCE (REAL PROPERTY), ELECTRICITY, WATER, HEAT & COOKING COSTS, SEWERAGE/DISPOSAL FEES OR SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.

Then, find your household size on the chart. The figure below your household size is the amount of income after deductions that you and your family may have and still be eligible for Food Stamps.

HOUSEHOLD SIZE	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12
MONTHLY INCOME	$194	$273	$393	$500	$593	$680	$767	$853	$926	$999	$1072	$1145
WEEKLY INCOME	45	63	91	116	138	158	178	198	215	232	249	266

Think you and your family qualify? Go to your local Food Stamp Registration Center. And remember you must bring proof of these things with you,

☐ Your Past 5 WEEKS pay stubs and those of any other working member of your family
☐ Social Security Number
☐ Pensions
☐ Annuities
☐ Social Security Receipts
☐ Veteran's Benefits
☐ Workman's Compensations
☐ Unemployment Compensation
☐ Rental Income Received
☐ Alimony
☐ Child Support
☐ Strike Benefits
☐ Bank Book or Other Record of Savings
☐ Paid Medical Bills (current month)
☐ Shelter Expenses (if you think you qualify for deductions)

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, October 21 — Born today, you are a quiet, deeply introspective individual whom few come to know very well. You can appear outgoing, happy, even devil-may-care, but in reality you are reticent, inward-looking, and relatively pessimistic about yourself and the world around you. Such an attitude cannot help but affect your work, which is why there are times when, though you know your job and are both educated and trained to succeed in it, you cannot quite reach the pinnacle of success, cannot quite achieve the determined thrust needed for fulfillment.

Despite this, you possess a magnetism that draws from others offers of help, whether or not you need it. There is something about you that compels people to confide in you their inmost feelings.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Take care that you don't fall into precisely those activities you should avoid. You could easily overdo things on the employment scene today.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — If you are wise, you will store up some energy for the latter part of the week. Refuse to give up all your know-how to the first bidder.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Be especially careful when it comes to those activities which could, if allowed to go wrong, be detrimental to your health.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Take some time to reflect this morning. Now is as good a time as any to inform others of changes in your responses and reactions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — This could well be one of the banner days of the year for you — if you are quick to take advantage of an almost-hidden opportunity.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Plans for your future must be carefully nurtured if they are to develop into anything profitable in the way of actual projects. Don't be hasty.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You would do well to postpone the beginnings of a new project. Anything already off the ground, however, is well favored at this time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Though another may offer incentives, you would be wise not to overdo. Your physical well-being must be guarded if it is to continue.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You can discover the reasons for recent setbacks if you will take the time to examine past decisions carefully. Don't give up your plan of action.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You can demonstrate your compassion through the way in which you approach and then attempt to help those less well off than yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Secure help if you need it. There is nothing to be gained by the kind modesty that requires you to go it alone when things get tough.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Accept another's encouragement. You may expect little to occur in the way of real help — but expectations are happily disappointed!

Greeks to sponsor sex ed. colloquium

This fall the Greek Area Peer Sex Education Team is sponsoring a one credit colloquium entitled "A Basic Exploration into Human Sexuality".

Cindy Waldren and Pam Lees will lead the eight two-hour sessions. A sampling of topics to be discussed include "The Language of Sex-Myths and Fallacies", "Human Intimacy-The Loving Touch", "Contraceptives-Science and Self", and "Alternative Lifestyles-Where Do Greeks Fit In?"

Guest speakers, small group activities and films will highlight several of the discussion meetings. Attendance at and participation in each session is required.

The course will meet Mondays starting tonight from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. at Lambda Delta Phi, 389 North Pleasant Street.

Registration is in the Greek Affairs Office, 236 Whitmore. However, enrollment is limited to ten men and ten women from the Greek Area. For further information call Cindy at 5-0939 or Pam at 5-0527.

Nutrition symposium studies food enrichment

By SUE KIERAS
Staff Writer

"What if we could make a whole-wheat potato chip? Or how about a protein-enriched coke?" were questions proposed by Virginia Beal, Associate Professor of Nutrition at UMass, at the "Nutrition for the Now Generation Symposium", sponsored by the Western Mass. Chapter of The American Heart Association.

The symposium, open to teachers, nutritionists and interested students, took place at the Colonial Hilton Inn, last Thursday, in Northampton.

Panel members were introduced by moderator, Dr. Harold C. Childs, professor of health education at Springfield College. Panelists included Dorothy Callahan, project director for nutritional education of the Mass. Department of Education at UMass; Dr. Helen S. Mitchell, dean of the School of Home Economics, UMass; and Dr. Jesse G. Hafer, director of the coronary care unit and graphics laboratory at Springfield Hospital Medical Center.

Approximately one-half of the high school students in Massachusetts consume an adequate lunch, according to the Mass. Public Survey made by Callahan.

Of those students who ate at school, 72 per cent had an adequate meal. Students who brought lunch to school were 58 per cent inadequate and of those who went home to eat, 72 per cent ate an inadequate lunch.

The survey appears to show mothers are not nutritionally educated to prepare their children a balanced meal. This is partially due to shopping problems, according to survey results. When she enters a supermarket, she must choose one of 90 cereals offered.

Students are often resorting to snack foods. Currently, there are 2 billion snack foods in the industry.

"Are we snacking our way to malnutrition?" asks Callahan. "Coke has just passed coffee as the national beverage."

"Nutritional education", she concluded, "must be implemented during early school years by the teachers; we haven't enough dieticians or nutritionists to do this."

Dr. Mitchell discussed the significance of nutrition to the growing adolescent, based on a study she had made in Japan.

Teenagers, age 12-18, will experience an adolescent "spurt" that marks a period of rapid growth, she said. Often, girls will experience this stage before boys.

During the war, Japanese people suffered a good shortage, said Mitchell. Through the study of adolescents, Mitchell discovered that at this time, due to improper diets, Japanese chaildren decreased in their "spurt growth".

Mitchell said it is essential that the adolescent's food intake includes the proper nutrients to fulfill the "spurt" growth period.

Dr. Hafer spoke on heart and the adolescent. As of now U.S. stands third on the listing of high death rates due to heart disease in the world.

Heart disease is caused by a combination of high serum of cholesterol in the blood, cigarette smoking, and high blood pressure.

The disease is often started in teenage boys. Due to a recent study of boys in Vietnam, doctors discovered that at age 17-18, boys were developing heart disease, because of improper diets.

To prevent the disease, doctors recommend all fat intake to be low in cholesterol level. In fact, any loss in weight reduces the cholesterol level.

Beal commented on "The Challenge of Today's Teenager". The adolescent undergoes social and psychological factors which endanger their health, she said.

Coaches of any boys athletic team, are the "biggest food faddists", Beal said. They discourage boys to drink milk, (it gives a cotton mouth), hand out candies before a game, and encourage useless, expensive vitamins, according to Beal.

Another case is the girl who gets pregnant before age 15. Since she is still growing rapidly, she needs nutrients to feed both her and the fetus. There is not enough for both and, thus, there is a higher incidence of toxemia.

"Convenience foods" also pose problems, she said. Most formulated foods are quick and easy, but they also lack the essential nutrients, vitamins and trace elements, according to Beal. "The more processed and formulated foods, the more deficiencies we find," she said. "What if we could make a whole-wheat potato chip, or how about a protein-enriched coke?"

It is possible to formulate these foods, however, they, as any product that is formulated, will lack the unknown nutrients to mankind, and form deficiencies.

Another aspect of today's youth involves "natural foods", she said. Honey, wheat germ and yogurt were a theme of the mid 40's. Those people who were anti-Vietnam and in the drug movement shifted to the anti-animal eaters, she said.

Nyhan, Healy at Hampshire "The Presidential Crisis"

David Nyhan and Robert Healy of "The Boston Globe" will bring their views on the current Presidential situation to Hampshire College tonight at 8 p.m.

Their talk is the third in a public lecture series entitled "The Presidential Crisis: View from the Press," presented by the "Globe" in conjunction with the UMass journalistic studies program and with the cooperation of the Five Colleges.

Five College Public Radio Station WFCR (88.5 FM) will broadcast the talk, and the following question and answer session, live from Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College.

David Nyhan has covered Congress, the House Judiciary Committee, and the Watergate situation since joining the "Globe's" Washington Bureau in January. In 1969 he began with the "Globe," as chief of the morning paper's State House Bureau, and in 1973 he was named labor writer. Before 1969 he spent four years with the Associated Press. He has covered the Massachusetts Legislature, and in 1968 the Democratic vice-presidential candidate.

Robert Healy, executive editor and political editor, covers political scenes in Washington and Boston. He has been with the "Globe" since 1942 and has covered presidential terms since Eisenhower.

Remaining lectures in the series will be: Nov. 11 at Smith College, Nov. 25 at Amherst College, and Dec. 9 at UMass. Speakers are all from the "Globe's" Washington Bureau.

Environmental discussions

Two alumni of the UMass Political Science Graduate Program will be on campus this week to talk with students and faculty about federal environmental programs and about public administration in the Federal Government.

Mr. Howard Messner, Deputy Assistant Administrator for Administration, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Washington, D.C. and Dr. Burton Levy, Director of Administration, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Research Triangle Park, N.C. will be on the 2nd floor lounge of Thompson Hall Tuesday, October 22, 3:00-4:00 p.m.; Wednesday, October 23, 11:00 a.m.-12:00 noon.

Students and faculty are welcome to stop by to chat.

Tuesday is candidates night

A Candidates Night will be held Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Little Theater of Northampton High School. The meeting is held as a public service and sponsored by the Leagues of Women Voters of Amherst and Northampton and the Pioneer Valley Group of the Sierra Club.

Present will be: William Atkins and James Collins, candidates for State Representative; Gerald McCarthy and John Olver, candidates for State Senator; Silvio Conte and Thomas Manning, candidates for U.S. Representative; Leo Kahian, American Party candidate for Governor. In addition, candidates for State Representative from the Northampton districts will be present.

The program will be broadcast live over radio WHMP for those unable to attend. After the program, refreshments will be served and there will be an opportunity to meet some of the candidates. For information and transportation call 549-4422.

Astrologers hold open house

Tonight from 7:30-10:30 in room 1001-1002 a group of astrologers, some of whom are in a BDIC program for Astrology and some who are professional Astrologers, will be available to answer personal questions about Astrology.

There will be free organic cookies and cider and a door-prize, which will be an expensive Astrology textbook. There is no admission charges and the setting will be informal with music.

Jeff Jawer of WMUA's Hightides show, Barry Lynes, an area professional and author, and Don Cerow and Leslie Fleming-Mitchell, teachers and students, will be just some of the luminaries who will try to answer Astrological questions.

Court advice to defendants

the law & you

Whether you received a summons or were arrested and released on bail or personal recognizance, you have been told to come to Court to answer to the charges.

You should report to the Probation Office by 8:45 a.m. DO NOT LEAVE COURT UNTIL THE CLERK SAYS YOU MAY GO.

In the District Court room defendants sit in front of the railing. If you have any questions ask the Court Officer (in uniform, usually standing near the gate of the railing).

When the Judge enters, stand up until he is seated. He will announce that all defendants have the right to a lawyer and explain the proceedings.

When the clerk calls your name, stand up. He will read the charges against you. If he asks if you have a lawyer, the charge carries a possible jail sentence. LISTEN CAREFULLY: If you do not hear or understand, ask him to explain. He will ask you how you plead to each charge.

PLEADING

1. NOT GUILTY: This may mean "I didn't do it." But, it does not matter whether you did whatever is charged of not! Pleading NOT GUILTY also means "I want time to talk to a lawyer or someone else." The Court might enter a NOT GUILTY plea for you, even if you want to plead something else, because the judge is concerned for your rights and knows that you need time. Most defendants are urged to plead NOT GUILTY at first. (If you are a minor under the law, this plea will be entered by the Judge for you, and you will be required to return with a lawyer or a parent.)

2. NOLO: The Latin phrase "nolo contendere" means "I don't want to argue about it, it's all right with me if you find me guilty and make me pay a fine." THE COURT DOES NOT HAVE TO ACCEPT THE PLEA OF NOLO. Unless you are represented by a lawyer, the Court won't let you plead NOLO if you are likely to risk a jail sentence or a high fine.

3. GUILTY: This means "I did it." It also means "No-one must prove that I did it." Except for minor traffic violations this plea should definitely not be made unless a lawyer has talked to you first. The Judge will not accept a plea of GUILTY when there is a possible jail sentence unless you are represented by a lawyer or have waived your right to a lawyer. You cannot waive your right to a lawyer until the judge has explained the possible jail sentence.

Unless you are very sure of what you are doing, plead NOT GUILTY and consult with an attorney of your choice or the Public Defender, if appointed, before making any other plea. YOU MAY ALWAYS CHANGE YOUR PLEA LATER.

If you plead NOT GUILTY ask the Clerk to set a date for your return to Court for trial when you can be sure to be there (usually two or three weeks ahead). Your lawyer can arrange to change the date later, if necessary.

YOUR RIGHT TO A LAWYER

You always have the right to hire your own lawyer. If you are penniless and without property, and if there is a possible jail sentence for the charge against you, the Court must appoint a lawyer (Public Defender) for you without cost. If you think you might be eligible, apply.

1. TO APPLY FOR THE PUBLIC DEFENDER go back to the Probation Office and fill out the Public Defender application form, giving information about your financial situation.

2. BE SURE TO CALL THE PROBATION OFFICE BEFORE THE DAY OF YOUR TRIAL (584-8417) to see if the Public Defender has been assigned to you. (The Court may decide that your application shows you can afford to hire your own lawyer.)

3. IF YOU DECIDE NOT TO HAVE A LAWYER, you must sign a paper called a "waiver" (saying you give up your right to have a lawyer).

BAIL

If bail is set for you in Court, and you feel it is too high, you have the right to be taken to Superior Court for a bail reduction hearing. The forms to be filled out are at the Court and at the Hampshire County Jail — ask for them. Make sure your lawyer knows you are going to have a hearing.

BENCH CONFERENCES

The lawyers and police sometimes go up to the Judge's seat so that the Judge may talk with them freely about the case. NO EVIDENCE IS TAKEN AGAINST YOU IN A BENCH CONFERENCE, but if there are circumstances which make the offense seem less serious, the Court prosecutor and the defendant's lawyer may make informal recommendations or suggestions for disposing of the charges promptly on a plea of guilty or nolo, or a continuance without a finding.

FINES

If you cannot pay all of a fine, tell the Clerk what you can pay now and arrange to pay the rest as soon as possible (usually in a week or two). You won't go to jail because you have no money to pay the fine, but you will be required to pay it in the near future.

YOUR RIGHT TO APPEAL

In all criminal cases you have the right to a trial by jury in Superior Court if you are not satisfied with the District Court decision. The Clerk will inform you of this right, and YOU MUST FILE YOUR APPEAL IMMEDIATELY. If you have pleaded guilty you cannot appeal for a jury trial unless the Court allows you to change your plea. You can appeal for a lighter sentence in Superior Court, but you may run the risk of an increase in the sentence as well.

REMEMBER

If there is something you don't understand or cannot hear, ASK TO HAVE IT REPEATED. The Judge, the Clerk, the Probation Officers, the Court Officer are all here to help you and to protect your rights.

PLEASE DON'T MAKE NOISE OR TALK WHEN IT IS NOT YOUR TURN. The Courtroom is a very noisy and busy place, and other people's rights may be prejudiced if they cannot hear.

Bruins guillotine Seals, 5-0

BOSTON [UPI] — Bobby Schmautz notched his first goal of the season and added two assists Sunday night to help the Boston Bruins to a 5-0 win over the California Golden Seals.

Goalie Gilles Gilbert, making his first start since an opening game loss, needed only 16 saves to earn his first shutout.

Ken Hodge got the game winner at 16:47 of the first period, knocking in his own rebound after a long shot by Schmautz.

Andre Savard got a second period goal and Phil Esposito potted his fifth goal of the season at 1:53 of the final period, taking a neat feed out in front from Schmautz.

Schmautz's goal came almost 10 minutes later on a 20-footer that beat 30-year-old rookie Gary Simmons to his right side.

Don Marcotte finished the scoring with a deep angle shot at 14:41. The victory moved the Bruins out of last place in the Adams Division, giving them five points to four for California.

Beware! Our Bruins back on the track

Both teams can't win

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. [UPI] — If Coach Chuck Fairbanks and his New England Patriots had any consolation, it was that they were beaten by a "very good football team."

Fairbanks had a lot of praise for the "guys in the blue shirts" — the Buffalo Bills — after the Bills snapped the Patriots five-game unbeaten string with a 30-28 victory Sunday to put both clubs in a tie for first place in the Eastern Division of the American Football Conference with identical 5-1 records.

"We were beaten by a very good gootball team today," Fairbanks said after the loss. "They did some things to us that haven't happened before. That's an awful good football team out there in the blue shirts. We don't have anything to be ashamed of."

Ferguson won the passing battle with Plunkett, finishing with a 153-150 yard edge.

Despite the loss, Plunkett seemed optimistic.

"We've still only got one loss in the division, and I think we can bounce back and come back. We lost to a great football team."

It was a satisfying win for Coach Lou Saban and the Bills, who returned the favor and heaped praise on the Patriots.

"Seymour's second touchdown was the big play for us," Saban said. "This is an old rivalry and they (New England) have done a remarkable job."

"They are an excellent football team and it was a very tough game," a happy Simpson said.

Weightlifters win

By Sports Staff

The University of Massachusetts Olympic Weightlifting Team in a surprise performance convincingly won the state championships, October 10 at the annual championships staged this year in Lawrence, Mass.

Doug Cooney lifting in the Heavyweight class (242) gave his supporters some anxious moments by missing his opening snatch 259 lbs. straining his right elbow in the process. Doug secured first place with his second clean and jerk attempts with the respectable poundage of 308 lbs. He cleaned 319 lbs. for his final attempt but his injured elbow was unequal to the task.

The middleheavyweight class 198 lbs. saw three UMass lifters in action. Eric Wiseman led off the contingent succeeding with a snatch of 154 lbs. and jerking 226 lbs. to secure fourth place. Eric went on to clean 242 lbs. but missed the jerk.

John Donnelly was next to represent UMass. In the snatch, lifting 198 lbs. and jerking 264 lbs., John succeeded in capturing third place.

The final entry in this weight division for UMass was Rudy Woloss. He cleaned and jerked 276 for a personal record and secured second place.

Brian Wiseman was the sole entry for UMass in the light heavyweight class (181 lbs.). Brian, two weeks previous, finished second in the Teenage New England Open. Showing exceptional poise, Brian snatched 154 lbs. and jerked 214 lbs. for fourth place and valuable team points.

Featherweight (132 lbs.) John Kennedy, lifting at his first meet, finished second place to secure the team championships. John lifted 99 lbs. for the snatch and 145 lbs. for the jerk, narrowly missing 160 lbs. on his final attempt.

Sportsweek: This is IT

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

If you're into something to do this week just plan to spend all day Saturday screaming your lungs out at what plans to be the fall's biggest sportsday. At Alumni Stadium football will be on display courtesy of Dick MacPherson and his Minutemen, who battle UConn for the Beanpot. But at 11:00 soccer takes center stage as UConn and UMass battle for the YanCon championship, with UMass facing a tough battle to unseat the number ten team in the country. However there'll be a number of other key sports struggles leading up to Saturday's athletic Armageddons.

Tuesday - Walk up to NoPE to catch UMass women's field hockey against Southern Connecticut. They may not be Bobby Orrs but their brand of hockey is fast and tough. Oh yeah, game time is 3:30.

Wednesday — Nothing happens today so relax and study before the weekend's shenanigans.

Thursday — You can drive down to Medford to see the soccer team take on Tufts at 3:00 in a big warmup for UConn Saturday.

Also the women stickers welcome Northeastern, one of New England's better varsity field hockey teams to NoPE for a 4:00 p.m. start.

Friday — If you're into junior varsity athletics drive to Kingston, Rhode Island as Bill Maxwell's Little Minutemen face URI at 2:00.

Saturday — The biggest smorgasbord for athletic appetites happens today. At 9:30 UMass faces UConn in a fall lacrosse game. If you're a UConn lacrosse player, good luck! At 11:00 across from Boyden the tenth ranked soccer team in the country locks horns with the Minutemen in what looms as a struggle for gladiators. Connecticut has Franz Innocent up front and a plethora of firepower while UMass has Tom Coburn, Tony King and a lot of heart but it could be tense for the good guys in the game of the year. On the neighboring field the jv booters from the same two schools go at it.

At 1:00 at Alumni Stadium UMass and UConn battle for the Yankee Conference crown, for all intents and purposes. After last year's sad performance at Storrs you know the Minutemen will be out for blood. And by the way, get your tickets early; there's no way the stadium won't be as tight as the IRT at Times Square at 4:30 on a Friday.

Finally if you want to drive into the country and are into the aesthetic the Yankee Conference cross country championships take place at Burlington at 10:30 'Ya better be up bright and early to make it.

J.V. soccer team downs Amherst

By RON ARENA
Sports Staff

The UMass J.V. soccer team recorded its fourth consecutive victory Saturday, defeating neighboring Amherst College, 6-2, at the Amherst College athletic fields. Displaying talent, aggressiveness, and enthusiasm, the Minutemen squad proved too much for Amherst.

Being a hospitable host, Amherst presented UMass with a "gift" goal as an Amherst fullback, in an effort to clear the ball to his goalie, put the ball in his own net. Ricardo Notini received credit for the goal. Amherst tied the game, and for a while played the UMass squad even, but as the game progressed, one could sense a Minuteman explosion coming.

After Ed Lafferty gave UMass the lead again, from here on they completely dominated the home team. Kurt Grazewske, Raffi Donoyan, Notini again, and Bob King all added to the lead until Amherst finally scored the last goal of the game. Donoyan, Mike Crowe, and Jerome Toomey all received assists in the game.

Ferguson, O.J. pin Pats, 30-28

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. [UPI] — Quarterback Joe Ferguson threw three touchdown passes in the first half Sunday, two to tight end Paul Seymour, and the Buffalo Bills held on in the second half to hand the New England Patriots their first defeat of the season, 30-28.

The loss gave the Patriots a 5-1 season record, the same as the Bills, and left the two clubs tied for first place in the American Football Conference East Division.

It appeared New England might have been on the way to six in a row when Sam Cunningham — who accounted for all the Pat's scoring — ran for a 75-yard touchdown on the first play of the game after the kickoff, giving New England a 7-0 lead after 21 seconds.

But Ferguson drove the Bills to the 10 in nine plays on Buffalo's first drive, then hit Seymour alone in the end zone at 5:57 to knot the score.

The Bills held the Patriots on their next drive and got the ball back on their own 46 following a short punt.

Ferguson drove the Bills to the 29 before tossing to O.J. Simpson, who ran in from the 22 at 11:06 to put Buffalo ahead 13-7.

On the following Patriots' series, Buffalo safety Tony Greene intercepted a Jim Plunkett pass at New England's 27 and returned it to the four.

Two plays later Simpson took it to put Buffalo ahead 20-7 at the end of the first quarter.

The Pats closed it to 20-14 when Cunningham ran 12 yards along the left sidelines for a TD at 5:57 of the second period.

The Bills came back on Ferguson's 40-yard touchdown toss to Seymour at 10:04. Ferguson scrambled in the backfield looking for an open receiver before spotting his tight end at the seven and he carried it in.

Cunningham scored his third touchdown at 6:05 of the third period on a two-yard run, but the Bills John Leypoldt kicked a 35-yard field goal at 1:24 of the final period to make it 30-21, which proved to be the margin of victory.

Plunkett tossed a 12-yard pass to Reggie Rucker with five seconds left in the game to bring the Patriots within two points, but their effort to pull it our with an on-side kick failed when Buffalo got the ball.

Cunningham carried for 125 yards in 11 carries, the first Patriot to have more than 100 yards since the 1972 season. Simpson had 122 yards in 32 carries.

College powers roll

There were some mighty fine backs in Saturday's college football news — fellows like Red Grange...The Four Horsemen...Archie Griffin...and Joe Washington.

Nostalgia was the order of the day at Champaign, Ill., and South Bend, Ind., as Illinois and Notre Dame summoned legendary heroes out of the past to celebrate the 50th anniversaries of famous events.

Grange, the galloping ghost of the 1920s', took a bow on the field during halftime of a 21-21 tie between Illinois and Michigan State. Fifty years ago he helped celebrate the opening of the stadium by scoring five touchdowns, passing for another and gaining 402 total yards against Michigan.

So much for nostalgia. Now, about this year's Heisman trophy.

Griffin and Washington, the clear front-runners for the prized trophy displayed their credentials in dazzling form as Ohio State crushed Indiana, 49-9, and Oklahoma whipped Colorado, 49-14.

The 5-foot, 8-inch, 180-pound Griffin scored touchdowns on runs of 20 and 12 yards while gaining 146 yards in 22 carries. In the process, Griffin set a new career big ten rushing mark of 3,321 yards.

The 5-foot, 10-inch, 179-pound Washington scored touchdowns on runs of two, six, 18 and 28 yards and gained 200 yards on 19 carries Washington's yardage moved him to third place on Oklahoma's all-time rushing list with 2,487 yards with a season and a half to go in his career.

Ohio State, the nation's top-ranked team, and Oklahoma, unranked because it is on probation by the NCAA, remained unbeaten along with second-ranked Michigan, third-ranked Alabama and fourth-ranked Auburn. Michigan beat Wisconsin, 24-20, Alabama defeated Tennessee, 28-6, and Auburn topped Georgia Tech, 31-22.

In other games involving the top 10, fifth-ranked Southern California beat Oregon, 16-7, sixth-ranked Texas A&M downed Texas Christian, 17-0, eighth-ranked North Carolina State lost to North Carolina, 33-14, ninth-ranked Penn State defeated Syracuse, 30-14, and 10th-ranked Arizona lost to Texas Tech, 17-8.

Csonka TD wins for Miami

MIAMI [UPI] — The Miami Dolphins found their offense in the final two minutes Sunday to score a come-from-behind 9-3 victory over the Kansas City Chiefs with fullback Larry Csonka banging the final yard for the winning touchdown with only 17 seconds remaining.

The hair-raising finish before 67,779 fans in the breezy Orange Bowl kept the Dolphins in the thick of the American Conference East Division Race with a 4-2 record, one game behind New England and Buffalo.

Kansas City's only score was Jan Stenerud's 21-yard field goal five minutes deep into the second period, but until the final two minutes, the Chiefs had won a teeth-rattling defensive battle, shutting off Miami drives with three pass interceptions.

Miami blocked two punts by the Chiefs' Jerrel Wilson. Cornerback Tim Foley stopped one, which trickled out of the end zone, giving the Dolphins a two-point safety with 2:11 remaining in the first half.

Miami went 53 yards in seven plays for the winning touchdown, after Charlie Babb returned a Wilson punt 20 yards to the Miami 47. The key play in the march came when quarterback Bob Griese hit Marlin Briscoe with a short pass on the sideline. Briscoe broke out of the arms of cornerback Emmitt Thomas and raced 29 yards to the Kansas City 18.

UMass takes YanCon lead Ruins Rhode Island 17-7

By STEVE DeCOSTA
Sports Staff

The Yankee Conference is in a state of upheaval. The watchword around the league, for those involved, has been "expect the unexpected."

And Saturday, as expected, the unexpected happened.

The fact, that UMass beat Rhode Island 17-7 is not, in itself, such a big surprise. But what is surprising is the fact that the Minutemen found themselves in first place in the YanCon following the victory.

UMass now holds a slim half-game lead over UConn as Maine spoiled the Huskies' homecoming and perfect conference mark with a 7-0 upset victory.

Meanwhile, in Kingston, there were some surprises, but none of the magnitude that transpired in Storrs.

For instance, the Minutemen found a new quarterback and three new heroes.

The quarterback is Brian McNally, formerly a defensive back, who replaced Mark Tripucka in the second quarter and led the Minutemen on several long, scoring marches.

The heroes were Jim Torrance, who rushed for 147 yards and the team's only touchdown; Greg Sprout, who tallied nine points on three field goals; and Bob Levine, who picked off a crucial Paul Ryan pass.

For the first three quarters, the game had followed the typical UMass football pattern of 1974, as the Minutemen rolled to a 14-0 first half lead followed by a third quarter letdown that saw the Rams score one touchdown and come perilously close to a second.

But the script changed abruptly in the fourth quarter. Quarterback Paul Ryan had moved the Rams to the UMass 15 yard line in the waning moments of the third period and had a first and ten from there. On the first play of the fourth quarter, Ryan looked for his tight end near the goal line, but Bob Levine stepped in front of him for the interception to relieve the pressure.

"Bobby Levine's pass interception changed everything," said a jubilant Dick MacPherson after the game. "It gave us the momentum."

Maybe it was momentum, or maybe the presence of the new quarterback, but indeed something was different. For the first time this season, the Minutemen used the offense to protect a lead instead of putting the load on the shoulders of the defense.

Following the Levine pickoff, McNally masterminded a brilliant 90-yard drive that not only resulted in the final Sprout field goal, but also ate up nine minutes of the clock.

Sprout, the sophomore kicking specialist, had earlier hit on three-pointers of 35 and 30 yards.

Tripucka had been the starter at quarterback, but was removed in favor of McNally in the second quarter after he had led several drives toward the Ram goal line but failed to punch the ball over for the score.

McNally was more successful, leading the one TD march that was capped off by a burst off right tackle by Jim Torrance who scampered five yards untouched for the marker. McNally then threw to the hands of a diving Walt Parker for the two-point conversion.

Torrance was the workhorse of the day, carrying the ball 28 times and keeping many a drive alive with crucial third down yardage.

The game also marked an improvement in the UMass passing game, as the Minutemen hit on 50 per cent of their passes for the first time this season. Tripucka hit on three of five, McNally completed four of eight, and Lee Harriman threw an incompletion on an option.

Harriman was much more effective on the receiving end, catching six for 81 yards.

Of course, all was not rosy for the Minutemen, as they fumbled six times. On the bright side, UMass recovered three of its own miscues, including two deep in its own territory at a time when the outcome was still very much in doubt.

The lone Ram tally came in the third quarter, as Ryan, who had a good game overall with 17 completions in 25 attmepts, (including a phenomenal 12 of 16 in the second half) hit Bill Britt from three yards out.

The Minutemen defense was tough against the run as they again prevented the opponent from scoring on the ground. They also held URI's big offensive threat, Rich Remondino, to only 51 yards, rushing after he had gained over 100 in each of his last three games.

So the stage is set for the showdown. It's UMass-UConn this Saturday at Alumni Stadium for all the marbles.

And, with the way things are going, who knows what to expect.

UMass prevails 2-1 over tough URI

By JOHN BOCK
Sports Staff

For the Massachusetts Minutemen it was a must win situation. To talk to the players, though, one would have thought they were playing for a few frosties after the game instead of a chance at the Yankee Conference crown and a playoff for the NCAA.

And in the end it was perhaps this same lack of tension that won UMass a 2-1 victory over URI Friday and precipitated the decision of the conference this Saturday in Amherst.

The Rams proved true to their pre-game billing as they came at the Minutemen as a well-coached, cohesive team that passed well and outshot UMass on the goal about three to one in the first half.

It was UMass, though, that got on the board first as Tony King took advantage of a URI goalie's dropped ball to slam home the first goal. It was a corner kick from Mohammed Othman that was blocked by the goalie. Fullback Gary McKenna went up for the ball and shook up the goaltender enouuh for him to drop the ball and give King the goal at 7:33 of the first half.

The second goal came at 28:32 of the second half when Tom Coburn took a pass from Bob McChesney and dumped it in the empty goal as the goal tender for URI was caught way out front by a fake off the foot of one of the Minutemen.

Rhode Island scored with a scant sixteen minutes remaining as they took a pass from right of midfield that went in over Carl Vercollone's head. Vercollone was impressive in his first full game in goal for UMass on the season and gave no apparent signs that his shoulder was still bothering him.

The bulk of the game was taken up by UMass trying to get some hustle in their rather lackadaisical offense and in attempting to keep the Ram halfbacks from running the ball at will through UMass' midfield. Mike Parsons and Dan Ouelette were outstanding in their defensive efforts for UMass while Mohammed Othman and Jim Vollinger performed well on offense.

Tom Coburn was injured late in the game as he got railroaded by the URI goaltender as he went for a ball. Possible knee damage has left Coburn on crutches for the time being.

GOAL TENDING UMass must face Tufts in a non-conference game this Thursday before meeting UConn this coming Saturday.

Jury selection begins in Kent State trial

CLEVELAND [UPI] - Two jurors were seated yesterday, the opening day of the trial of eight former Ohio National Guardsmen charged in the 1970 slaying of four Kent State University students and the wounding of nine others.

Chief U. S. District Judge Frank J. Battisti dismissed four prospective jurors before turning questioning over to government and defense lawyers.

Jurors Ralph Rumsey and Mrs. Constance Hillson were seated before court adjourned late Monday afternoon.

Robert Murphy, chief of the criminal section of the civil rights division of the U.S. Justice Department, heads the government prosecuting team and questioned the prospective jurors.

Acting for the defense were C. D. Lambros, who represents four defendants; Bernard Stuplinski, who represents three and E. K. Wright, who represents one.

The defendants are charged with assaulting and intimidating four KSU students who were wounded in a 13-second burst of gunfire during a campus antiwar demonstration May 4, 1970.

Five of the defendants - William E. Perkins, 28, Canton, Ohio; James E. Pierce, 29, Amelia Island, Fla.; Ralph W. Zoller, 27, Mantua, Ohio; and James D. McGee, 27, and Lawrence A. Shafer, 29, both of Ravenna, Ohio - face maximum sentences of life in prison if convicted because of the four deaths.

Defendants Leon H. Smith, 27, Beach City, Ohio; Mathew J. McManus, 28, West Salem, Ohio; and Barry W. Morris, 29, Kent, Ohio; could be sentenced a maximum of one year in prison and given a $1,000 fine because their alleged crimes did not result in death.

Although officers were present during the incident, none of the defendants ranked higher than sergeant.

Battisti read the indictment to the panel of 70 and then cautioned that "the indictment is not any evidence whatever against the defendants. The government has the burden of proof - that burden never shifts to the defense.

"Each defendant is presumed innocent until the government proves its case beyond a reasonable doubt in the mind of each juror," he said.

Ford administration same as Nixon's?

By FRED NOBLES
Staff Reporter

In the third in a series of lectures by Boston Globe reporters, Robert Healy last night characterized President Gerald Ford as, "an extension of the Nixon administration. The only way he is different is that he wasn't involved in Watergate."

Healy, the Globe's executive editor and political editor, addressed his remarks to about fifty people at Hampshire College as part of a lecture series entitled, "The Presidential Crisis: View from the Press."

Boston Globe Washington correspondent David Nyhan, who shared the floor with Healy, noted that Ford has, with very few exceptions, retained most of the people who worked for the Nixon administration. According to Nyhan there are five to six hundred people in the Food administration, "who think they're doing the same thing for Ford as they did for Nixon."

Nyhan makes a point as Melley looks on.

Speculating on Nelson Rockefeller's possible confirmation as vice-president, Nyhan said, "I think Ford will pull him out and put someone else in." Nyhan believes that during the congressional recess, "a lot of damage is going to be done to Rockefeller's reputation." Nyhan thinks Rockefeller will suffer most from any further disclosures of irregularities in his financial dealings.

Questioned about what has been the chief cause of America's recent national political problems, Healy noted that "We haven't had what you would call great leadership in the last few years." Referring to former president Nixon, Healy said that he was "a crook" and that, "the man corrupted our system of government and corrupted us somewhat in the process as well."

Both Healy and Nyhan responded to a question about Henry Kissinger's role in the current administration. Nyhan believes that Kissinger's role will diminish. "I don't think Kissinger is as prepared to handle global economic problems as he was able to handle the turmoil between different states." Speculating on Kissinger's reaction to his diminished role, Healy said that "You get accustomed to that Cadillac syndrome in Washington...and that's very hard to give up."

In his opening remarks, Healy, who has been with the Globe since 1942, discussed the relationship the press has had two different presidents. Healy believes that presidential power has grown steadily since the Eisenhower administration. "The press has contributed to growth either in a passive way or in a positive way," he said. Healy believes that it was during the Eisenhower administration that press secretaries began to actively manipulate the press corps.

Healy said that during the Kennedy years, "the press itself became performers and became conscious of the fact that they were performers." According to Healy, "Kennedy used the vehicle of the press conference to reach over the heads of the reporters covering him... he reached over their heads to reach a much broader audience in the television audience."

About the Ford administration, Healy said, "Ford said he would have an open presidency and the first thing he did was fire his press secretary who I think was a very decent guy." Healy was referring to Gerald terHorst who left his job when Ford granted Nixon a pardon.

Nyhan, who has been a Globe Washington correspondent since January of this year, addressed his remarks chiefly to the question of Ford's administrative abilities. Nyhan said he didn't think Ford ever expected to become president.

Conflict charged, denied in Residential Life

By JOHN PEPI
S.O.P. Member

(2nd in a series on the politics and finance of Housing and Food Services)

"I don't see that there is any conflict between what this administration in Residential Life (RL) wants for students and what students want for themselves" said the former Financial Manager of R.L., Chuck Hampton.

Steve Kenney of the Student Organizing Project's (S.O.P.) Housing Education-Action Group said that "this implication by Hampton of a 'community of interests' between the managers and the managed is very misleading. For, regardless of good intentions on the part of these administrators, their objective position as protectors of bondholder investments and their own authoritarian job roles sets them at odds with student interests".

The UMass Board of Trustees' 1973 Statement on University Governance paved the way for the development of Student Policy Boards which would have broad policy-making powers over Residence Halls, Food Services, Health Services and Student Activities.

This Trustee document carved out areas of "primary responsibility", meaning "the capacity to initiate policy recommendations", for students, faculty and the administration. It reads "students will have primary responsibility for services and activities which are designed primarily to serve students or those which are financed primarily by students."

S.O.P. researcher Chris Lundberg said "the Trustees conceded very little in the way of their domination over the lives of UMass students. Policy Advisory Councils such as those mentioned are limited to policies subject 1) to precedents already established, and 2) to the approval or disapproval of the Chancellor. Primary responsibility for policy making, unless coupled with full powers for implementation, is a thoroughly empty concept".

Bob Gardner of the S.O.P., said "One major historic justification for public education is that is serves to 'train the masses for the responsibilities of citizenship in a democratic society'. Given that practice makes perfect, how will students ever learn to govern themselves democratically? For the administration controls the agenda and only those issues which are innocuous, does it dispense into our domain. We are left to toy with what they see as all the trappings of our education: the social events, speakers series, hobbies, special interst organizations and colloquia."

Kenneth Banning is a professional, coordinating the Associated Student Commissaries, a student-controlled decentralized food cooperative serving 4,000 UConn students.

"The power relationship between any administrative unit and their student advisory board is identical to the setting in a poker game where one player holds all the money. True joint policy making or collective bargaining grows out of the existence, among two or more parties, of a relatively equal power balance. The parties to the bargaining recognize that if one refuses to compromise, the other can and will resort to coercive and obstructionist measures," he said.

According to Gardner "Students are presently permitted to 1) serve on advisory boards 2) appoint outnumbered tokens to the administration's and faculty's real decision-making committees and 3) administer sandbox student governments. When push comes to shove, we are marshmallows and constantly getting burnt. This is why we need a union of students; a legally independent and voluntary association whose members would elect representatives to bargain with the administration and faculty. The union would bargain over all the living and learning conditions at the University that are now accepted as givens by powerless individuals."

SW student to head campaign

State Representative James Collins of Amherst today appointed Jon Hite to head off his UMass campaign. Hite, a UMass sophomore residing in Southwest, served on the research staff of Kevin White's 1972 re-election campaign before coming to the university.

Collins, the 28-year-old Amherst Democrat, has announced his plans to canvass every registered voter in his district by the Nov. 5 election and to personally visit every registered voter on campus.

In his first bid for re-election, Collins is looking forward to working with Jon Hite and some 25 other UMass students presently volunteering their efforts in the campaign.

S.O.P. looks at on-campus housing

In regard to housing and food services, he said "Student-community control means having the power to collectively maintain, re-create, and govern our homes-dorms and having the freedom to determine what goes on in our kitchens-dining commons. They are ours. We pay for them. We live and work in them. We must control them!"

During extensive questioning, Ken Dean, Director of R.L. and Hampton, repeatedly emphasized that students will not have authority in areas which are, by definition, "management's prerogative" and "the natural responsibility of administration".

Personnel decisions and salaries are "management's prerogative". Pet and paint policies, furniture replacement and dorm security all hover on the 'thin red line' separating "management's prerogative" from 'student control'. Reorganizing and remodeling the physical structure of our buildings, reallocating the burden of debt payments, and challenging compulsory dorm residence and meal plans are presently non-negotiable issues.

They argued that management must retain ultimate control for two reasons 1) their expertise and 2) their long-term accountability and concern. Yet Rich Berman, of the S.O.P. said "these skills are highly mystified and monopolized. For example, Bromery became Chancellor at this highly touted and complex institution having been trained as a geological specialist. Gage got his Vice-Chancellorship after a career in medicine. Surely students can and are developing skills with which they can budget their accounts, purchase supplies, organize food service and dorm maintenance. After all, these are Bromery's living-learning centers."

Banning said "UConn's administration had faith that given adequate information, students could make valid and responsible decisions."

Luckily, only minor injuries were sustained by the driver in this collision near Whitmore.

Ford "no different"

"He's still a lineman and not a quarterback and he's not comfortable calling the signals," Nyhan said.

Granting Ford a certain ability to improve national politics because of his relationship to congress, Nyhan went on to say that, "Ford hasn't changed from the conservative congressman from Grand Rapids who fought down every piece of progressive legislation that came before him."

Speculating on Ronald Nessen's ability to handle the job of press secretary for Ford, Nyhan said, "I don't think television reporters can grasp the complex issues like we newspaper people can." He believes Nessen will tend toward the television standard of "the minute and ten second broadcast."

The Healy-Nyhan lecture was the third in a six part series jointly presented by the Boston Globe and the UMass journalism studies program. The next lecture in the series will be at Smith College on November 11.

Former UMie becomes "Mister Mayor"

By CRAIG ROCHE
Staff Reporter

One of the things that set Steve Erickson apart from most of his fellow January '74 UMass graduates was that he was sure of a job when he got home. For Steve Erickson had been elected the Mayor of Gardner, Mass in November.

Reflecting on his first ten months in office, Erickson said, "The first year is an orientation where you set your goals; it has to be, it would be for anyone. You can't train or go to school to be mayor, it's so diverse. When I first ran I was more idealistic. I find one of the greatest frustrations is that people cry about corruption in politics but will be the first in line to be on the other side when it is in their favor."

When asked if his experience at the university prepared him for his job, Erickson said, "The whole college life better prepared me. At UMass there are so many different lifestyles, living with people was an exposure to different cultures and learning to accept differing views."

Erickson was a Biochemistry major and lived in Orchard Hill as a student. He now lives at home with his parents, saying of his $6,500 salary, "I couldn't afford to live on just that if I were married or in an apartment. For what I am learning, though, it is worth it."

"I am learning to read people," Erickson said, "because in this job you can meet a lot of fakes. No one has tried to buy me or force me in certain directions. I have learned to go slow and easy. The political process with all the okays necessary to pass things, is slow, but I am trying to be progressive too."

The term Mayor Erickson will serve ends in Jan. '76 at which point the mayor's length in office will go from the present 2 to a 4 year term, and the pay will be raised to $12,000. Asked about his future, Erickson said "I lean toward running for re-election now, but it really depends on how things materialize. Lots of things can happen. In the next year we will see if we've been able to produce, to pull state and federal funds into the city, to instill real pride in the community."

Erickson said most of the city's people have "accepted" him.

"Some were jealous or suspicious and some afraid of losing their jobs. But I just have a new title, I'm not any different, except that I'm working for 20,000 people. I'm still a person, nothing's changed except that I have to make decisions many people will never make in their life."

While 12 to 18 hours a day can be office, Erickson finds time to take an organic chemistry course at UMass. He also raised a garden this year and a dozen chickens and has hopes of getting some turkeys and pigs next spring. All these provide diversions from tasks like organizing the city's budget.

"We are already three months into our first budget and now we have to start on the second. I was nervous at first, running what is really a $15 million corporation. I was here in the office many times after 12 p.m. looking at the budget, trying to make what I thought were taken up by the many details of his honest cuts. But new we have an idea of what we can accomplish.

"I ran for mayor because I thought the people deserved better, and with a little measure of conceit, I thought I could do a better job. I think I'm doing it, although it's slow, but I can see it. Sure I've made mistakes, maybe some of the decisions I've made were not the wisest ones. But at the time when I made the decision it was the best I could possibly make. We have to keep in mind that we're working for the people, not for ourselves, and that's what it's all for. Isn't it?"

Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee

Chairperson Miller stresses student input

By DEBBIE SCHAFER

The Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee is presently dealing with the issue of student representation in University governance and academic matters. A prime responsibility of the committee is student input in academic governance at UMass, according to chairperson Martin J. Miller.

"I think students should have prime responsibility over their educations, in that they should be able to determine the content of their education to a great extent," Miller said.

The committee is trying to bring students who represent different aspects of the community together in a bi-weekly or monthly forum to discuss issues of academic concern. "When people get together over issues, they have a chance of working them out," Miller told the Collegian.

The Academic Affairs Committee is publishing and compiling the spring semester Course Description Guide, and each year has published the alternative education handbook It's Your Move. Members of the committee have served on various councils dealing with academics, but chairperson Miller wants the committee to act as a means of student organization. He would like "to see students focusing around different issues through this office (Academic Affairs) as a resource of their community."

Students are encouraged to use the committee as a voice for their ideas concerning the quality of their education at the University. "That's the power of the committee," according to Miller, "when people can come together, make their own decisions and work at them collectively — to use the Academic Affairs Committee as an organizing strategy."

A current project of the committee is the formation of a Colloquia Committee, to assist residential area academic committees. The Colloquia Committee will seek to establish closer communication between the areas, so that they may deal with issues central to them.

By promoting communication between various groups of students, the Academic Affairs Committee hopes to make students more aware of their part in shaping their own educations. Miller sees the committee as a democratically structured student resource where students may provide input without political discrimination. "When you limit dialogue to exclusion you're not dealing with the truth, you're dealing with fantasy," said Miller.

The Academic Affairs Committee wants to hear student opinions concerning all aspects of education, since education should fit the needs of the community. "Its an energy crisis here on our part," Miller added, "and the Academic Affairs Committee is only as powerful as the people who are in it."

Through the committee, "people can gather around issues and define their own outcome of them," said Miller. "There are a lot of questions that students should be dealing with."

Town library gets grant to preserve rare books, letters

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

The Amherst town library received a letter yesterday from Governor Francis W. Sargent officially notifying them of a grant for $9,373 for the preservation of rare books and manuscripts, according to Quenten E. DeStreel, director of the library.

The library is also expected to receive a $28,000 grant from the Library Services and Construction Act for a computerized social service referral system said DeStreel.

The grant for the library's archives is from the Bicentennial Commission with the stipulation that the grant be matched with funds from the town. The additional funds will come from a "special library fund", said DeStreel.

The money will be used for the purchase of special air conditioning equipment to be installed on the third floor which houses the library's special collections. The special equipment will filter the air and maintain a constant temperature and humidity level, preventing further deterioration.

Also, part of the Boltwood collection, local historical books and manuscripts, may be moved from the basement to the third floor to centralize the special collections according to DeStreel.

DeStreel said, "it will cost $22,000 and the project will start next January probably taking a few months to install while some partitions and bookcases have to be removed."

The two major collections housed in the library are the Robert Frost collection and the Emily Dickinson collection.

The Emily Dickinson collection poses a special problem because the papers are very brittle from the 1840 period. "They have a high rag content with cheap wood pulp", said DeStreel.

"Most people who have written about Dickinson have worked in the collection," said Wineferd D. Sayer, curator of the special collections.

The Dickinson collection consists of 16 manuscripts in Dickinson's own handwriting, 28 shelf feet of books by and about the most-well known Amherst citizen and other materials.

Other papers in the library include documents from the French and Indian War and local geneological records said Sayer.

The grant for the computerized referral system will be part of the Amherst Community Resource Center and will probably be tied into UMass computers said DeStreel. The center is a social service referral and counseling agency.

The system will list all the social services agencies so that when a client calls for addive a list may be given to that person immediately.

This service will primarily be for Franklin and Hampshire counties. Also, a number of public libraries in Western Mass. and northern Hampden county as well as some college libraries will serve as information gathering points said DeStreel.

"Safe" politician?

Manning attacks Conte

By P. J. Prokop
Staff Reporter

"He's grandstanding as far as the energy question is concerned. He said he was an environmentalist and then voted against using hydroelectric power in the Dickey-Lincoln Project."

Thomas R. Manning, Democratic candidate for U.S. Congress in 1st Congressional District in Massachusetts looked relaxed as he spoke against his opponent Republican Silvio Conte who has been in office for the last 16 years. Manning said Conte has become very conservative in the years since he was elected.

"He no longer represents the people that elected him. He represents big business more than he does the average citizen here," Manning said.

"Conte studies trends as he sees them through the media, then he comes out for what appears to be favorable. He is a 'safe' politician. After all, he was the 410th Congressman to take any stand at all on impeachment. His connection with Nixon is evident, in '68 and '72 he was a Nixon delegate."

Manning said he has been unable to arrange a time with Conte to appear before the public, even when free T.V. time was offered to them by Channel 6 in Schenectady. "He's never available to appear with me for either a discussion or debate of the issues."

"I'm more than willing to meet with Conte at UMass at anytime, and state my position. I would hope that he would be willing to do the same," Manning added.

Manning describes himself as a candidate working for the average person, who he feels is not being adequately represented at this time.

On education, Manning said he feels there should be an increase in Federal funding for scholarships and that the recipients should do something in return for the aid — "maybe work on an environmental project or in some type of social programs."

Manning said it was becoming increasingly difficult for middle class families to send their children to school.

On the energy crisis, Manning, who is in favor of using solar energy, stated that Conte has shown no leadership in this area. Manning said he feels confident and that his chances of winning in the November 5th election are excellent.

UMass administrator works for Congressional reform

By STEVE TETREAULT
Staff Reporter

A UMass administrator was involved in the forming of a controversial resolution aimed at internal House reform recently defeated in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Gerry Grady, a political scientist and UMass Coordinator of Community Relations served on the staff of the Select Committee on Committees, a bipartisan House Committee headed by Rep. Richard Bolling (D-Missouri).

The Committee, created early in 1973 and aimed at proposing internal House reorganization, was composed of five Republicans and five Democrats. The Committee staff was also organized along bipartisan lines.

Grady was asked to join the staff as a result of his association with Bolling dating back to 1956-57, when Grady served as a Congressional fellow on Bolling's staff.

The Committee's resolution, number 988, was defeated late Tuesday afternoon by a 203-165 count. Voted in its place was a substitute resolution offered by the House Democratic Caucus' Committee on Organization, Study and Review, headed by Rep. Julia Hansen (D-Wash.).

Major reform suggestions contained in the Bolling Committee's defeated resolution included institution of a new Committee structure consisting of fifteen major committees and seven additional minor ones. House members could serve on only one of the major committees.

The resolution also suggested the shifting and elimination of various committee jurisdictions, such as:

transferring environmental considerations from the Merchant Marine Committee to a new committee on Energy and Environment:

breaking the Committee on Education and Labor into two separate organizations:

abolishing committees dealing with Internal Security, Post Office and Civil Service and; creating a committee to handle budget matters.

The Hansen Resolution differed from the Bolling Resolution in that it retained many of the committee dropped by the latter, and also gave back jurisdiction to important committees, such as the House Ways and Means Committee in areas dealing with foreign trade, revenue sharing, and unemployment compensation.

Grady started work at UMass in 1959, acquiring the title of Assistant Director of the Bureau of Government Research. He became business manager of the department in 1962, and Coordinator of Community Relations in August of this year.

University Health Service holds orientation

There will be an informal discussion of University Health Services programs and organization today at the Health Center at 6:30 p.m. Although sponsored primarily as an orientation for members of the Student Health Advisory Board, the discussion is open to any interested students. A tour of the facility will follow.

Health Services Division Directors present will include Barry Averill, UHS Director; Pernell Parker, Finances; Jane Zapka, Community Health Education; Thomas McBride, Medical Care; Lee Whitaker, Mental Health; Barbara McCarthy, Nursing Services; and Leo Hall, Patient Services. Co-chairpersons of the Advisory Board, Mark Citron and Cathie Grose will also be in attendance. Interested students are welcome.

1973 tape played at trial

Tape shows Nixon told Mitchell to Stonewall

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Richard M. Nixon told John A. Mitchell in the spring of last year "to stonewall it...coverup or anything else" to save his administration from the Watergate scandal, according to taped testimony played in court yesterday.

The former president's voice came through clearly on the fifth White House tape played at the cover-up trial of Mitchell and four other Nixon aides accused of conspiracy in the plot.

"I don't give a — — what happens," Nixon told Mitchell toward the end of a March 22, 1973, meeting at his hideaway office in the Executive Office Building.

"I want you all to stonewall it, let them plead the 5th Ammendment, cover up or anything else, if it'll save it — save the plan, that's the whole point."

Defense lawyers objected to the Nixon-Mitchell discussion being introduced as evidence since former White House counsel John W. Dean III - on the witness stand at the time - was not present for that part of the meeting. But U.S. District Judge John Sirica overruled the objections and ordered the tape be played.

"We're going to protect our people if we can," Nixon told Mitchell.

The meeting was the last of a series of March 21-22 of last year as the Watergate cover-up began to unravel and the President and his men strove to stem the tide.

Key White House aides John D. Ehrlichman and H.R. Haldeman - also on trial for the cover-up - were also present at the session with Nixon, Mitchell and Dean. They were leaning toward issuing a report absolving the White House of any complicity but Dean was advocating a fuller disclosure of the facts.

"You think, you think we want to, want to go this route now?" Nixon asked.

"And the—let it hang out, so to speak?"

"Well, it's it really isn't that," Dean started to reply.

"It's a limited hang out." Haldeman broke in.

"It's a limited hang out," Dean agreed.

"It's a modified limited hang out," Ehrlichman said.

"Well," said Nixon, "it's only the question of the thing hanging out publically or privately."

"What it's doing, Mr. President, is getting you up above and away from it," said Dean. "And that's the most important thing."

Just before Dean left the meeting, Nixon spoke highly of him to Mitchell, saying his young counsel had "carried a very, very heavy load."

"John Dean... put the fires out, almost got the damned thing down til past the election and so forth," he said. "We all know what it is. Embarrasing god-damned thing, the way it went and so forth. But, in my view, uh, some of it will come out; we will survive it. That's the way it is. That's the way you've got to look at it."

President Gerald Ford inspects the Mexican troops at the international border crossing at Nogales.

Ford receives cheering welcome with Echeverria on Mexican tour

MAGDALENA, Mexico [UPI] - President Ford, in his shirtsleeves and with sweat streaming down his grinning face, marched through Mexican towns yesterday with President Luis Echeverria and received a tumultuous welcome from countless thousands.

Ford and Echeverria abandoned plans to go by bus and instead led a noisy procession through Nogales on the Mexican side of the border and again mingled with delighted crowds in Magdalena as security guards were all but lost in the shuffle.

On his first visit to a foreign country as president, Ford got a welcome that clearly delighted him and then sat down to the first of two meetings with Echeverria during a day of constant movement.

A senior U.S. official said their talks would concentrate on the subjects of Mexican migrant workers coming to the United States for farm employment and on trade relations between the nations.

The official de-emphasized the importance of other subjects as a topic for present discussion, particularly stating there would be no hard talks at this time on Mexico's newly discovered and very rich oil fields.

Ford and Echeverria first greeted one another about 9:30 a.m. PDT at the border that separates the American and Mexican towns of Nogales. They walked toward one another in a chorus of deafening cheers and then embraced.

In brief remarks on a podium in the center of Nogales, Mexico, surrounded by thousands of school children waving flags of the two nations, Ford noted that the two countries were tied by both history and geography.

"It is my fervent wish that this meeting will mark the beginning of a close personal relationship between us and contribute to the closer cooperation and friendly relations between our peoples and governments."

After welcoming remarks by Echeverria, the Presidents inspected the guards of honor and placed flowers at a memorial for Mexican hero Benito Juarez.

They were supposed to go from there by special bus to an airfield on the outskirts of town but instead the two leaders walked right past the bus and proceeded to lead a 40-minute spectacular parade for about a mile through Nogales.

With Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Mexican foreign Minister Emilio Rabasa trailing behind, a sea of people closed in behind the pair and the air was filled with cheers, traditional Mexican mariachi music, wooden noisemakers and a fire engine siren.

Temperatures were in the 80s and Ford discarded his coat and strode along waving with both hands.

Judge prevents Nixon from moving tapes

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A federal judge yesterday temporarily barred former President Richard M. Nixon from transferring his White House tapes and documents to California, but granted his sole access to them - except for subpoenaed material - while their future is determined.

In a three-page opinion issued after a hearing, U.S. District Judge Charles R. Richey enjoined the General Services Administration (GSA), which has physical custody of the material, from "disclosing, transferring, disposing or otherwise making known to any person" the documents and tapes.

In a second order, Richey granted Nixon access to the material "for the sole purpose of preparing to testify in the Watergate criminal trial."

Nixon had filed suit last week seeking to force government compliance with a controversial GSA agreement, two days before Nixon's pardon from President Ford, which gave Nixon ownership, custody and eventual full control of his White House materials.

Herbert J. Miller, a lawyer for Nixon, argued in court that Nixon needed his White House tapes and documents in California near his San Clemente home because he must prepare for possible testimony in the Watergate cover-up trial and is too ill with phlebitis to travel to Washington.

Richie enjoined GSA from carrying out the terms of the agreement with Nixon for custody of the materials, and made clear in his order that subpoenaed material would be made available to prosecutors and grand juries.

Unless there are appeals of the temporary restraining order, the next step will be a ruling on the suit itself, possibly after further hearings.

During yesterday's hearing, Watergate Attorney Peter Kreindler disclosed a grand jury will be issuing additional subpoenas for certain of Nixon's White House materials but did not disclose what they dealt with.

Kreindler said the Watergate special prosecution force opposed removal of subpoenaed materials to California form Washington. He said Miller had known some 10 days ago of the additional items to be subpoenaed but had not included them among material to be left behind because it pertained to current Watergate investigations.

Reagan may make conservative bid

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Gov. Ronald Reagan said yesterday he might lead a conservative third party presidential bid in 1976 if the two national parties fail to "represent the will of the American people."

Reagan also said that President Ford will be challenged for the 1976 GOP presidential nomination "If there is a failure in his administration, if things have grown worse instead of better..."

The California conservative made his comments in a televised interview with Paul Duke for broadcast by the Public Broadcasting Service last night.

Supreme Court prevents restrictions on abortions

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Following up its controversial 1973 decision, the Supreme Court yesterday left standing a lower court order requiring public hospitals to allow abortions.

The court also agreed to decide whether a patient in a state mental hospital has a constitutional right to treatment if he was committed involuntarily in civil proceedings.

In the abortion matter, the justices refused in a brief order to hear appeals from the city of Virginia, Minn., whose ordinance barred abortions in hospitals except to save the mother's life.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals struck down the law on the basis of the Supreme Court's 1973 ruling that laws forbidding abortions may apply only during the last trimester of pregnancy, and not even then in certain circumstances.

The order extends the court's abortion decree to civil as well as criminal statutes. But it does not set a legal precedent and applies only in the 8th Circuit which encompasses Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Nebraska and the Dakotas.

The mental hospital case came from Florida, where Kenneth Donaldson sued after being confined in such an institution from 1957 to 1971.

Soviet Jews and dissidents to be released

Ford denies agreement for minimum emigration

TUCSON, Ariz. [UPI] — Saying a U.S. - Soviet emigration agreement was "widely misunderstood," President Ford denied yesterday that Moscow had pledged to let a specific number of Jews and dissident citizens emigrate each year in return for better U.S. trade status.

White House spokesman Ron Nessen, speaking for Ford, said reports that Soviet officials had agreed to a minimum 60,000 emigrations per year were wrong. He said the Soviet Union's promise to relax its emigration policies was phrased in general terms rather than specific numbers.

Ford's clarification came as he and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger were flying on Air Force 1 to meet Mexican President Luis Echeverria at the U.S. - Mexican border for a day of broad policy talks.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., who led the fight to force a liberalization of Soviet emigration policies, agreed with Ford that the Soviets had set no firm number. A spokesman for Jackson said Ford's statement in no way damaged chances for congressional approval of a trade reform bill to which the Soviet agreement was tied.

Jackson and Kissinger announced last Friday that the emigration issue had been settled, clearing the way for congressional passage of the bill giving the Soviet Union "most favored nation" trading status with the United States.

In a news conference at that time and in a letter to Kissinger, Jackson cited the 60,000 figure as his understanding of the minimum emigration level the Soviet Union would allow. Kissinger had earlier described the agreement in a letter to Jackson.

Congressional sources said reporters at the news conference apparently misunderstood the context in which Jackson used the 60,000 figure.

Responding to Ford's clarification yesterday, Jackson issued a statement saying Kissinger's letter had been "clear in stating the U.S. assumption that the 'rate of emigration from the U.S.S.R. would begin to rise promptly ... and would continue to rise to correspond to the number of applicants.' "

"With the Soviet assurances conveyed by Secretary Kissinger to me to end harassment and intimidation of those seeking to emigrate, and with the number of visas rising to correspond to the number of applicants, I believe that more than 60,000 persons will emigrate each year," Jackson said.

Surveillance increases at Oregon power lines

PORTLAND, Ore [UPI] — The Bonneville Power Administration stepped up its surveillance of high-tension lines yesterday after rejecting a $1 million demand from extortionists threatening to black out the Pacific Northwest's second largest city.

"They may be attempting to show they know how to knock down the system," said BPA Administrator Don Hodel.

"They would have to blow up a few towers to learn what it takes to knock one down. Maybe there is a learning process going on."

Hodel has offered a $100,000 reward with Bonneville Power Administration funds for information leading to the persons who caused damage in the past month to 11 BPA transmission towers, three of which were blasted down last Wednesday evening.

There have been no power outages, but the extortion letter to the BPA said if the $1 million isn't paid they would "black out the entire Portland area and vicinity," and make the BPA "wish to hell" it paid the demand.

Hodel, in Seattle for another meeting, told a news conference there the FBI and BPA were receiving numerous calls from hunters and others in the woods near the vicinity of the recent blasts.

"We may be getting many false leads," he said, "but we need only one right lead to apprehend."

BPA officials and law enforcement officers involved in the case said they were sure that more than one person was involved in the extortion threat.

CORE favors black community control over Boston schools

BOSTON [UPI] — The Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) yesterday said it favors black community control of schools rather than forced busing to achieve quality education in Boston.

As Boston started its sixth week of classes under a federal court order to bus 18,000 students, CORE director Mary Dennison told a news conference that President Ford to declare Boston "an educational disaster area."

Classes were conducted without major incident and attendance citywide was expected to increase to about 80 per cent.

Despite scattered racial incidents during the day, attendance throughout the city increased to 77.8 per cent, the highest figure since Oct. 3 when it was 80.3 per cent.

Ms. Dennison said CORE has the highest esteem for those who have fought to achieve court - ordered busing, but added, "We feel that busing became the issue because no alternative to achieve quality education was available.

"CORE calls for desegregation through community control because the most obnoxious feature of segregation is not the fact that black and white children are sitting next to each other," she said.

"The fact that whites control schools in the black community as well as in their own is the feature of segregation which is intolerable."

Ms. Dennison said she thinks busing should be stopped right away and intends to convey this message to U.S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity, who issued the short-term busing order June 21 and now is drafting a long-range school desegregation order for next fall.

In the meantime, Ms. Dennison said a referendum should be conducted in Boston to see if people want community control rather than busing.

Ms. Dennison said, "It is obvious that schools in the black community of Boston require federal assistance to supplement state and local efforts, to save lives and protect property, public health and safety, or to avert or lessen the threat of a disaster."

Henry travels again

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger sets out on amarathon diplomatic journey late today which he hopes will promote U.S. - Soviet arms controls, rally concern for the world's long-range food problems, and sow the seeds of peace in Cyprus and the Middle East.

Probably one of his most extended and ambitious diplomatic trips, Kissinger's mission is scheduled to begin late tonight with a flight to Moscow where he will confer with Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev.

A breakthrough in the Soviet-American strategic arms talks, which resumed in Geneva Sept. 18, is expected to be a primary goal.

But Kissinger is also hoping to nail down arrangements for a late November summit meeting between President Ford and Brezhnev in the Soviet Pacific Ocean port of Vladivostok.

14 die in Mozambique

LOURENCO MARQUES, Mozambique [UPI] — Fourteen persons were killed and 66 wounded yesterday in the worst outbreak of racial violence since early September in this eastern African territory.

Military sources said nine whites and five blacks, including Frelimo Mozambique Liberation Front soldiers, died in steet shooting which rocked the city center and sent civilians diving for cover in shopping arcades.

Anti-freeze riot

FALL RIVER [UPI] — Several persons were injured yesterday at a sale of antifreeze at $3.99 per gallon. When the store opened its doors at 9 a.m. employes got a little more than they had bargained for.

A crowd estimated at over 1,000 rushed into the store. In less than one hour the entire stock of more than 1,400 gallons had been sold out.

The general manager of the automotive section was struck in the head with a box. He suffered lacerations over one eye.

Several other persons were injured when they were knocked to the floor and trampled over by the crowd.

Vehicular traffic outside was backed up for several miles around the store. Most antifreeze products are petroleum based and have been in short supply since the energy crisis.

Ford visit opposed

TOKYO [UPI] — Tens of thousands of leftist demonstrators throughout Japan shouted their opposition yesterday to President Ford's visit planned for Nov. 18, but police said the turnout was far below what rally organizers had hoped for.

The National Railways Locomotive Power Workers Union refused to deliver gasoline to U.S. military bases and said the ban would continue one or two days to commemorate "International Antiwar Day," marking the start of the U.S. bombing of North Vietnam.

Let's face it, we're all Alices in UMieland

By ROBERT SHMELIGIAN

Lewis Carroll's Alice pioneered the escape into Wonderland, and today her followers are somewhere in the Campus Center.

Poor Alice accidently fell into her fantasy, but we can't make the same complaint. For various reasons we all chose this campus to encompass our lives for a few years, and any White Rabbit late for his 10:10 will tell you that we are in Wonderland.

The Queen of Hearts is a computer in Whitmore, and my head is not safe. Still, neither is the Caterpillar's. I'm sure he's not concerned. He just sits in his room on the 22nd floor of George Washington tower and smokes his "hookah".

Yes, this maniac is comparing Mr. Carroll's wonderland with UMass. It was the Mock Turtle who told me on our way to 303 Machmer Hall.

I believe in Wonderland as I believe in Whitmore, the Physical Plant, and the concourse level of the Campus Center. "Rules are rules" in Wonderland and stupid rules are enforced all the more rigidly; just ask a Blue Wall bouncer.

I suppose it was Sunday afternoon during a busride when Wonderland began to fall into perspective. The bus took me from a brief encounter with reality back to a fantasy world. Reality was a weekend at home in Worcester, Mass. The name of the bus line, by the way, was Peter Pan.

My first weekend home this year made it clear to me that Worcester is no wonderland. This city illuminates depression. What was once a booming metropolis has deteriorated along with its population. I understand it's a combination of the continuing decrepidation of the main-south area, and the cities increasing percentage of senile people that gives it such a dismal atmosphere. The city's newspaper only reinforces its dreariness by being conservative, Republican, and monopolized.

In Wonderland I seclude myself from all this. Infrequently will I be seen on campus picking up a real-life newspaper (some js. major). When I do, I not only read about a gloomy hometown; I read about South Boston and Roxbury. Today's news is a sagging economy, and a deteriorating political system. This hits me all at once when I go home. Maybe Wonderland isn't all that bad. The computer decides our living situation and we take it from there. There are no slums, no rest homes, and Belchertown State School is a convenient 10 miles away. Reality is just around the corner, but it can't get in.

We are all numbers for a little while; we that make up this university. We are also transient. Every day we move closer to that moment when we denounce Whitmore as being "nothing but a pack of cards"; or, if we are foolish enough to want to stay, the Queen will see to our departure.

A last thought — remember the sleepy-eyed caterpillar. He, like us, is only 3 inches tall; he doesn't worry because he knows that no one stands tall in Wonderland. He uses mushrooms to make him grow taller or smaller (when he's not loading the "hookah"). This creature says to Alice "Don't lose your temper" because he knows how easily offended the other occupants of Wonderland get sometimes. He tells Alice, "you'll get used to it in time."

I wonder if he's ever written for the Collegian.

Seen an $800. radio?

To the Editor:

The men of Amherst Fire Department appreciated your recent article concerning the theft of equipment from our fire trucks and ambulance. After the theft of an $800 portable radio from the ambulance, it was nice to get the feeling that at least somebody out there sympathizes with us.

It was rather depressing, although not surprising to see our radio stolen. Our job teaches us to expect the best and the worst from the public. We can put up with occasional lightheaded thievery of personal equipment such as helmets or boots, but this was the first time a vital piece of operational equipment was stolen. We can't replace it for a year. We can handle all the stuff that students get into. We often arrive just before, at, or just after death from OD's. We lose some, and save some. We've taken high flyers out of washing machines, none the worse for wear, but a little dizzy. We're well trained, and not too much surprises us anymore.

Something we're not "trained for", though, is comprehending why someone would take something from us that can help save lives and property. It may sound corny but the person who swipes something from our vehicles for a window ornament might just be the guy who bleeds to death or burns up later because we don't have it.

We're proud of our work, but not too proud to beg for the return of our radio. We realize that it's probably long since been sold for a few bucks, but we'll risk the odds and say that if the radio is still around, we'll gladly take it back with no questions, no heat.

The radio theft has made us realize we're now ripoff victims like everybody else. That's why we'd like to make a proposal to students that see our point. We want to ask them to help us when we're working.

At most of our work scenes, crowds gather to watch. That's why we think if something is swiped, it's probably lifted in front of witnesses. All we ask is that people tell us, the cops, or even handle it themselves with a little street group pressure if they see someone that looks like they don't belong with our stuff.

During my four years at the university I saw some pretty good things accomplished by kids that had to pitch in quickly and help people out. If any of that spirit is left, we can stop our problem from growing, and keep our score of "saves" high.

Happiness is a cold gun

To the Editor:

—Sixty percent of all murders are carried out with handguns.

—One fourth of the 3,000 yearly "accidental" gun death victims are under 14 years old.

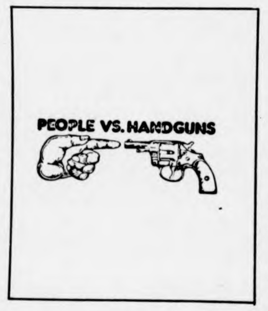
—25,000 Americans die by gunfire each year.

—200,000 others are wounded, suffering paralysis, sterilization, dismemberment, or blinding.

These statistics come from FBI records for 1972.

A vigorous drive to wipe out the handgun menace is presently underway in Western Mass. Organizing this effort is People vs. Handguns, a Massachusetts citizens group concerned with informing citizens of the dangers posed by handguns and the need for strict controls. Local organizer Steven Sacks of Amherst stated, "Our ultimate aim is to have legislation passed which bans the manufacture, sales and possession of handguns for everyone except the military and police."

People vs. Handguns points out the "fatal mistake" of arming oneself to supposedly protect one's family and property. 73 percent of all handgun murders committed in 1972 were carried out by previously law-abiding citizens who killed either family members or acquaintances. Almost all of these were "crimes of passion," committed in moments of rage without felonious motive or premeditation. The deaths were only possible because the handgun was at hand at the wrong moment, the group claims. They further point out that half a million guns are stolen or lost every year, and most end up in the hands of criminals.



Well-established in the Boston area, People vs. Handguns is now organizing in Western Mass. so that it will have effective statewide impact on the Legislature. Says Organizer Sacks, "We want to speak to all community, Church, school, and other social groups in the area. Our goal is to make the public aware of this very real menace, and then gather support for our cause."

The group is currently conducting various educational programs on handgun control, including community seminar groups, a media campaign, and a speakers bureau.

Persons interested in People vs. Handguns can contact Steve Sacks at Box 131, Colonial Village, Amherst, or call 256-8584.

Room to move

To the Editor:

The article which appeared in the Collegian on Friday September 27 was undoubtedly well intentioned, but failed to articulate the degree of support provided Room-to-Move by the University, and did not accurately reflect the center's commitment to providing educational workshops for students and staff.

The University has gradually increased support of Room-to-Move, a student staffed drop-in center, over the past six years to the extent that it was willing to make up most of the funds lost through the expected termination of the H.E.W. grant. Only one of the thirty other universities originally funded by H.E.W. has been willing to make such a commitment after termination of outside funding. The problem is not one of commitment but, rather, of dealing with the restrictions placed on the use of work-study funds.

The University increased its allocation to Room-to-Move by $18,400 to raise the total amount from the State and other University sources from $52,600 in 1973-74 to $71,000 in 1974-75. This is $6,600 less than last year's total budget of $77,600, which included $27,200 from H.E.W. funds. The remaining work-study allocation |$4800| will require finding work-study eligible students who have counseling skills or experience in drug-related programs.

Since the limitations on work-study funds have become clear, several University administrators have worked very hard to reallocate funds within various divisions, especially within Health Services. However, it may not be possible to restore all of the funds lost from the H.E.W. grant this year.

Although Room-to-Move will be forced to temporarily reduce some of its services, it will still maintain its commitment to providing quality counseling and educational services. Room-to-Move will maintain its commitment to provide educational workshops for students and staff, but may be forced to provide fewer than it has provided in the past. There will also be a slight reduction in the hours that the center will be open.

It has been encouraging to see the number of students offering to volunteer their services in response to the article last Friday. We greatly appreciate this response, but have just recently completed the selection of volunteers for this semester. Room-to-Move does have a special need for a few volunteers who have counseling or educational experience in working with alcohol abuse, veterans, minority students and gay people. In addition, students with drug counseling skills or experience who are work-study eligible are encouraged to apply.

Room-to-Move has continued to serve as a viable alternative to traditional counseling and educational programming because it has been able to attract highly motivated and competent students for its staff and because it has maintained a base of support within the student body as well as with the administration. The staff of Room-to-Move greatly appreciates the support that has been demonstrated by the student body as well as by the University administration and hopes that the financial restrictions will prove to be of a temporary nature.

Into the home stretch

Volunteers parade through the early winter streets while fat, white-haired men ask for action behind closed doors. Colorful banners with rhetorical slogans ornate the roadside barns and telephone poles, and it's more than obvious that this is an election year in Massachusetts.

If it seemed to many that the season's political adventures appeared late and without warning, it's only because of the crawling start that most of the candidates displayed in their primary campaigns. There were a number of now-defunct candidates that took so long they never really got started, and consequently, most of the state's remaining politicians embarked on a vigorous platform of mediocrity.

Now, with two weeks remaining, a capable candidate like Michael Dukakis finds himself leading the polls in a campaign that wore out its issues two months ago. With little more than an occasional press release to let people know that he's still running, Dukakis has succeeded in allowing Frank Sargent to make a fool of himself on nearly every issue.

Before September, Sargent allowed all his conservative credibility to be demolished at the hands of Carrol Sheehan, who mortally wounded the governor's re-election chances in a losing primary struggle. Since then, it's been cake for the Dukakis camp. Coming off an impressive victory over Attorney General Bob Quinn, he emerged as the Democratic candidate in a state that's had its fill of Republicans and their painful monetary policies. Dukakis and his campaign staff now find themselves streaking towards the governorship.

However, the most outstanding campaign of the season is being run by the small, inexperienced staff of the man who stood victoriously in front of a Democratic caucus last spring and proclaimed, "John Davoren, here I come!" The caucus was the beginning of a long campaign for Paul Guzzi, which peaked with the astonishing September defeat of State Secretary John Davoren, who had become all but a fixture in the State House.

From here, Guzzi shouldn't have much trouble at all in his efforts to defeat Republican John Quinlan. It was Guzzi's hardhitting issues of campaign reform and citizen participation that allowed an alert campaign staff to beat Davoren, and this momentum will more than likely carry him through the election to a powerful victory in the race for Secretary of State.

Probably the poorest choice of this year's fiasco takes its form in the race for Attorney General. The race features two ex-gubernatorial candidates trying to make another stab at perpetuating their political existence. Francis Belotti and Josiah Spaulding could easily be the closest race on November 5, and it's doubtful that either candidate will be any better than his predecessor, Mr. Quinn, if elected.

All in all, it seems to be a Democratic year, here in Massachusetts. With all the recession and disappointment of the previous six Republican years, it doesn't look like the Democrats will have too much trouble with most of the statewide offices. With any luck, 1976 could be the same.

A sense of hope

Too many people confuse affection for perversity. From the days in high school when they'd slap your butt for scoring a basket for Park Ridge, N.J. High to now, it seems as if the only time that men could ever really get away with showing real emotions and affections towards each other was on the athletic field. Perhaps it is no coincidence that it was also the only place where people could get away with smashing and beating each other.

I think that the first time I ever heard the word "queer" I was around ten. Didn't really know what it meant. Still don't. However between that time and now there has been more pressure to deal with a reality that I never really could understand: Why affection between members of the same sex has carried such a bad stigma for so long.

This is not a column about homosexuality. The subject is too long to write about, and besides my knowledge is limited. Rather I'm trying to address the content of emotions: The natural growth and capacity of individuals to relate to each other on whatever grounds are most comfortable to the two of them. A sense of growth that our society has long inhibited for numerous reasons.

Lately there has been a real thawing out of these inhibitions. Women, brave women, took a stand first. If they felt like hugging each other, they would. People would call them "queer", "dykes", "gay girls". In some cases they might have been lesbians. The point is that both the straights and the gays told the name callers to just take a hike. Real feelings started to take priority over cosmetic norms of the society.

I could never understand why my friends in high school were so afraid to express their feelings. It was rare that the word love was ever exchanged between male friends. The only embrace ever exchanged, came after a touchdown pass. A real positive energy was lost in high school. The levels of inhibition that so distorted concepts of sexuality found release in myriad numbers of ways. The pressure of sexuality was getting so intense, that people forgot just what they were looking for.

Their mores, the rules of the groups in high school always seemed somewhat hypocritical. The same rules that made puking your guts out after some "big drinkin" on Saturday, "a macho trip" made a friend putting his arm around his friend a "fag trip" Somehow these priorities lost me from the start.

Being heterosexual, I find it difficult to understand homosexuality on a personal level. However, one of the most beautiful things that I have seen this year has been a new "opening" up between friends. Seeing people dancing together, trying to understand each other, and expressing their love, regardless of their sex.

This is the highest type of individual liberation. There is no standard to be judged on. You don't have to do anything. Still, when the positive energy comes out, when people start opening up, and not being so afraid to show their feelings, everything coming out is a bit more real. Their purpose of living becomes less distorted. Perhaps if people could open up to themselves and others more frequently, there would be a sense of ease and love not duplicated by cosmetic style.

And I have to believe that with this truth relating to members of the opposite sex would improve too. I can't totally claim to be free of every bit of sexism drilled into me. However I am learning the importance of people and not categories. Being basically an aggressive person, my feelings have a certain sense of high energy that sometimes makes it difficult to express to people I care about. The most difficult thing is coming to grips with your fears, and dealing with the truths of the heart that tend to get stuck in your throat.

I have to believe that if more people did this you wouldn't see such a crush at the Blue Wall. You wouldn't see lost stares on the Concourse. You wouldn't see "Personals" in the Collegian. When people get back to the basics, and deal with their feelings and affections, on a level that is real, then all the other things will fall in their place.

Professor Joseph Burroughs of the Human Development Department once expressed a feeling of optimism, a belief that things were changing in the field of sex roles, and that perhaps in our generation people would feel less inhibited about their feelings. Burroughs, a man who has more intelligence individually than do most Universities collectively, and also has more personal warmth than a farmhouse kitchen, is the kind of person who gives me hope.

There are hundreds of other people who give me a sense of hope. I even have a reason to believe that one day there will be no lines at the Blue Wall meat market on Saturday nights. If there have been a few things bumming me out, the new sense of hope and affection between people around me, has been the saving point.

I am basically a political columnist. My style is best suited for that. But every now and then something grips me, and I have to try and express it.

Some things in this world are still more important than knocking Dick Nixon and laughing at Gerry Ford.

Gerald Ford: A bane to environment

By JERRY McCALLUM

Could anyone ever accuse President Ford of being an environmentalist? Apparently not, when one looks at his past voting record on environmental issues in Congress. How did Representative Ford vote in the early seventies when many politicians suddenly realized that there was an environment which needed protection. By 1971, the Environmental Policy Center was grading Congressmen on their environmental records. In that year, Ford was ranked 322nd out of 435. On 11 of the 12 most critical environmental issues facing Congress, Ford voted wrong. In 1971, Ford voted for the SST, for atomic testing in Alaska, for destructive Corps of Army Engineers river projects, and against mass transit, pesticide control, and the right of individuals to sue on environmental issues. Best of all, he voted to allocate $315 million to bury radioactive wastes in a salt mine in Lyons, Kansas. The Atomic Energy Commission later conceded the contamination hazards of this abortive goody.
